The value of an audit report depends upon the independence and integrity of the auditors. If it appears that auditors are under some sort of obligation to the company the accounts of which they audit, there may arise a doubt that the auditor might have discharged their functions much too indulgently. If such a doubt arises, it cannot be ignored as a doubt which no reasonable man should entertain. (1966) 2 Com LJ 152: 70 Cal WN 280: AIR 1966 Cal 151 (160) (Pt D) (Pr 21).

——S. 237 (b) — Order under, need not prescribe manner in which report by Inspector has to be made.

Under S. 237 (b), which no doubt attracts the provisions in S. 237 (a) it is not obligatory on the part of the Central Government to prescribe the manner in which the report by the Inspectors is to be made. The word "may" in S. 237 (a) merely confers a liberty upon the Central Government to prescribe the manner in which the report is to be made out. The non-specification of the manner in which to report is not fatal to the appointment of an Inspector. (1965) 2 Com LJ 152: 70 Cal WN 280: AIR 1966 Cal 151 (161, 162) (Pt E) (Pr 25).

——S. 237 (b) — Investigation may include within its scope contravention of any other law for time being in force.

Sub-clause (i) of Cl. (b) of S. 237 may require investigation as to whether the business of a company is being conducted for a fraudulent or unlawful purpose. This is wide enough to include contravention of any law for the time being in force. Law makes the investigation comprehensive of all sorts of illegalities. Therefore the order cannot be attacked on the ground that the investigation was not limited to sub-clauses (i) and (ii) of S. 237 (b) but was made inclusive inter alia, of contravention of any other law for the time being in force. (1965) 2 Com LJ 152: 70 Cal WN 280: AIR 1966 Cal 151 (161, 162) (Pt F) (Pr 25).

——S. 237 (b) — Investigation directed to embrace period from 1st April, 1958 — Inspector however, given discretion to conduct investigation in respect of period prior to 1st April, 1958 — Order does not suffer from infirmity of excessive delegation.

Where by order made in 1963 under S. 237 (b), the investigation in respect of the affairs of a company was directed to embrace the period from after 1st April, 1958 but that notwithstanding, the decision to conduct investigation in respect of period prior to 1st April, 1958, was left to the personal discretion of the Inspector the liberty given to the Inspector to decide upon the necessity of carrying on his investigation even prior to 1st April, 1958, did not suffer from the infirmity of excessive delegation of power. The Central Government directed an investigation in 1963 and was of the prima facie opinion that a probe into past five years would suffice but nevertheless was not oblivious to the theory that the root of the trouble might lie buried deeper in the past and any unyielding delimitation of the period of investigation would not succeed in getting at the root. (1965) 2 Com LJ 152: 70 Cal WN 280: AIR 1966 Cal 151 (161, 162) (Pt G) (Pr 25).

——S. 237 (b) — Order under, fixing time limit for reporting — Central Government can extend the same.

The law has not fixed any time limit for the Inspector who is ordered to investigate under S. 237 (b), into the affairs of a company, for reporting. Where the Central Government in the order under S. 237 (b) has administratively fixed a time limit of four months but at the same time reserved the liberty to extend the time, the order is not bad. If the Central Government can fix a time limit, it may also unfix the limit and refix or extend the time. The failure on the part of an Inspector to submit the report within the time administratively fixed certainly amounts to breach of duty on his part but the investigation does not lapse because of such breach and the authority which had ordered the investigation may condone the expiry of time and further extend the time for making the report. (1965) 2 Com LJ 152: 70 Cal WN 280: AIR 1966 Cal 151 (161, 162) (Pt H) (Pr 25).

——S. 237 (b) — Inspector under, does not act judicially — Co-Inspector or successor can be appointed — Ministerial assistance by Inspector — Limits of.

There is no dispute as to the broad proposition that an administrative authority may be, in certain circumstances, required to act judicially. However, it is so, if the authority had to determine questions affecting the rights of citizens, on consideration of proposal and objection. But the Inspector in investigation under S. 237 (b) decides nothing. He merely probes into the affairs of a company and embodies in the report his opinion. The document is admissible in evidence only as a piece of opinion. The opinion by itself does not affect the rights of the company. The opinion need not be accepted by the Central Government and steps taken against the company, unless the Central Government also forms the same opinion. The duty of an Inspector is to collect facts and on such facts to form an opinion about the affairs of a company. He does not write a judgment which binds the company. The company, against which an adverse opinion is formed, may always condemn the opinion as a bad opinion, if further steps be sought to be taken by the Central Government against the company on the basis of such opinion. In making such an administrative enquiry the Inspector need not proceed judicially and unless, there be express or implied prohibition in the statute, there may be co-Inspectors appointed or the investigation may be carried on by a successor to the Inspector first appointed.

The nature of work to be done by the Inspector is not such as cannot be partly delegated or shared or left to a successor. An Inspector is not a disciplinary authority nor even an authority competent to give a judgment. Then again, the scheme of the Act indicates that the fact finding commission may be carried on by "any Inspector", appointed under S. 237, not necessarily by the Inspector or Inspectors, who was or were first appointed. The opinion formed by the Inspector and incorporated in the report is merely an opinion and may be utilised by the Central Government for its own information. The report has not the characteristic of a judgment and does not operate to the prejudice of the company reported against, of its own force. (1956) 3 All ER 939 and 61 Cal WN 819, Distinguished. It is beyond doubt that an Inspector may take the help of ministerial assistants within reasonable limits. ——Ss. 237, 209 — Powers under, may over-lap — Order for inspection of books of account may be made in investigation under S. 237.

Different powers conferred on different authorities under the Companies Act, have different objects. Section 209, deals with accounts and requires a company to keep different books, giving a true and fair view of the state of affairs of the company at the registered office of the Company, or at the branch office or offices. Power is invested in the Registrar of companies or any officer authorised in this behalf to inspect the books, in order to see that the books are being kept and properly kept. There is also the power of investigation under S. 237. The powers overlap at times but their objects are different. There is nothing to indicate that a power under the proviso to S. 209 (4) must not be exercised during investigation under S. 237, even if exercise of such power becomes necessary. (1965) 2 Com LJ 152: 70 Cal WN 280: AIR 1966 Cal 151 (165) (Pt K) (Pr 32).

——Ss. 237, 10-E, 637 (as amended in 1963) — Central Government ordering investigation under S. 237 (b) — Subsequent delegation of powers under S. 237, to Company Law Board under S. 637 — Investigation does not come to an end — Central Government retains its control over investigations started by itself.

Shortly after the amendment of the Companies Act by Companies (Amendment) Act, 1963, which incorporated S. 10-E in the principal Act and amended S. 637 (1) and (2), there was constituted, in accordance with new S. 10-E, a Company Law Board, on 1st February, 1964 and powers inter alia, under Ss. 235 to 250, in so far as capable of delegation were delegated to that body. The duty to decide upon investigation and the power to direct investigation, under S. 237, of the Companies Act, are so much interconnected that one cannot be separated from the other and the effect of the delegation by the Central Government to the Company Law Board has been delegation of both power and duty and the consequence is that at present the Company Law Board alone may decide upon investigation and cause the same to be carried on.

The investigations under S. 237, already validly started before the establishment of the Company Law Board, do not become invalid proceedings because the Central Government subsequently parted with the power. If such an investigation is to be continued, that must be done by the authority which started it. There may be insuperable difficulties in effecting an adoption by the Company Law Board. An investigation under S. 237, is to be ordered by the authority which forms the necessary opinion. Under the scheme of the Companies Act, an investigation under S. 237, cannot be ordered by the Company Law Board on opinion formed not by itself but by the Central Government, which Government later on delegated its authority to the Board. On a parity of reasons, it cannot also continue an investigation, started by the Central Government, about the necessity of which it did not itself form an opinion. The question of adoption of an investigation, started by the Central Government, by the Company Law Board, being out of the way, it must be held that, by necessary implication, the Central Government retained its control over investigations ordered by itself, prior to delegation of authority to the Company Law Board.

If the Central Government retains jurisdiction over investigations started by itself, then that jurisdiction would include, all the powers to bring the investigations to a successful termination, including power to add to the number of Inspectors or to appoint successors in case of vacancy. (1965) 2 Com LJ 152: 70 Cal WN 280: AIR 1966 Cal 151 (165, 166) (Pt M) (Prs 34, 35, 36).

——S. 237 (b) — Investigation under — Nature of. Investigation against public company tends to shake its credit and adversely affects its competitive position in the business world, even though, in the end, it may be completely exonerated and given a character certificate. Any investigation sought to be carried on oblivious of this aspect of the matter may tend to become unreasonably burdensome and may invite opposition. Then again, it must not be forgotten that during the time that an investigaion is carried on, the company under investigation is not in the position of an accused and the persons in charge of the management of the company must not be treated as such. Section 237, requires that one or more competent persons shall be appointed as Inspectors. This competency includes capacity and qualification as well as adroitness and subtlety for the particular work. (1965) 2 Com LJ 152: 70 Cal WN 280: AIR 1966 Cal 151 (166, 167) (Pt N) (Pr 37).

——S. 237 (b) — "Circumstances suggesting" — Forming of a fully objective opinion by Central Government about malpractices not required — Mere assertion by Central Government that it followed the law in making order is not, however, enough.

The Central Government cannot be expected to form a fully objective opinion about the malpractices mentioned in sub-clauses (i), (ii), and (iii) of S. 237 (b), before the investigation brings out relevant materials for the formation of such opinion. It may merely form the opinion that there are circumstances which may be capable of innocent interpretation, but until so done suggestively sinister. This is a form of opinion which is lesser in degree than the self-confident opinion based on reasonable materials, commonly known as objective opinion, but greater in degree than the speculative view, which goes by the name of subjective satisfaction. AIR 1961 SC 29, Rel. on.

An order of the Central Government under S. 237 (b) is certainly not justiciable, if the order has been made by the appropriate authority bona fide and reasonably, even though the reasons may not fully appeal to a Court of law. It may not also be necessary for the Central Government to recite its reasonings when making an order under S. 237 (b). But when the exercise of the power is challenged as actuated by malice in law, before a Court of law, justification for the exercise of the power must not be blanketed from the Court. The mere assertion that the Central Government followed the law in making the order and did not act without any legal excuse is not enough to satisfy the judicial conscience of the Court. (1965) 2 Com LJ 145 : 70 Cal WN 399.

On report by the Registrar of Companies under S. 234 (6) of the Companies Act, 1956 the Central Government appointed a legal adviser and an accounts officer, both working in the department of Company Law Administration, as Inspectors to investigate into the affairs of the Company. The former alone took up the investigation. The appellant appeared before him to give statement but the very next day moved application objecting to being questioned by the Inspector. When the Inspector moved an application before the Tribunal under S. 240 (3) read with S. 10-A (1) (b) of the Companies Act, the appellant raised many objections which were repelled by the Tribunal. It made an order directing the appellant to appear before the Inspector and answer any questions which might be put to him by the Inspector. In appeal against that order to the High Court, under S. 10-D of the Companies Act, it was contended by the Appellant that he was compelled to answer questions the answers to which would have incriminated him for offences of criminal breach of trust of the funds of the Company's predecessor company, in the criminal case pending against him, in as much as the answers obtained could have been used against him under S. 240 (5) of the Companies Act. His main contention was that there was contravention of Art. 20 (3) of the Constitution.

Held (i) that in the absence of the form and nature of the question objected to, it was next to impossible to reach a conclusion whether or not it might have any connection with that prosecution and tended to be an incriminating question for offences which were subject-matter of that prosecution or for that matter of any other offence. No doubt, every tribunal having the power to examine a person in any connection must keep in view the provisions of Art. 20 (3) of the Constitution, but merely because the Tribunal had not made reference to that Article in the closing sentences of its order it did not mean that the Inspector was not to have regard to the provisions of that Article. When there was no specific question before the Tribunal with regard to which it could consider the applicability or otherwise of Art. 20 (3) but a vague allegation was made before it that the questions that were likely to be put to the appellant would have the tendency to contravene Art. 20 (3) the Tribunal could not possibly have taken note of that vague allegation and passed an effective order. The Tribunal could not possibly have made a blanket order stopping the enquiry on such a vague approach, upon which it was impossible to bring to bear Art. 20 (3). There was no manner of applying that Article except to something specific and definite, from which it could be made out that what was being sought from the party would provide evidence of an incriminating nature against him. Particularly that was so with regard to an oral statement that a party, as the appellant in the appeal, was obliged to make under the law. It was not possible for the Inspector to prepare a list of questions for the simple reason that the run of the questions would depend to a very great extent upon the manner in which the answers were given and the information sought in question was supplied. When a question was put and if Art. 20 (3) was attracted, an objection could have been taken to a question and then the objection could have been followed up.

(ii) that the Tribunal because of S. 10-A (1) (b) exercised the powers of the Court under S. 240 of the Companies Act. It was evident in the facts of the case that the Inspector could only certify the refusal of the appellant 'to appear before him personally' and 'to answer any question which is put to him', and the Tribunal could only order the appearance of the appellant and require him to answer any questions which may be put to him by the Inspector'. That was the limitation of the jurisdiction of the Tribunal. It could either direct the appellant to answer any questions put to him by the Inspector or dismiss the application of the Inspector with regard to any particular question or questions. But under that provision it lacked jurisdiction to stop an investigation ordered by the Central Government under S. 235 of the Act and the High Court too had no power to do that either while hearing an appeal from an order of the Tribunal.

(iii) No doubt, that the Inspector appointed for investigation was a legal adviser in the Company Law Administration, but all investigations on the side of the Government would normally be conducted by Government Officials or Government agencies and it was not clear how any principle of natural justice intervened to stop such investigations.

(iv) that the argument that both the Inspectors must have acted in unison and as a body was obviously incorrect, for there would be no point in empowering them to carry out the investigation jointly and severally if every time they were compelled to act jointly. The object of thus appointing two Inspectors with power to conduct the investigation jointly and severally was evident that each one of the Inspectors might be able to carry on a part of the investigation by himself on a particular aspect of the affairs of the company. (1965) 2 Com LJ 311: (1966) 36 Com Cas 291: ILR (1965) 2 Punj 339 (DB).

The mere occurrence of a vacancy in the Board of Directors by reason of retirement by rotation or by reason of a disqualification incurred or death or resignation, cannot have the effect of the Board becoming invalid, and for that reason unable to function as a Board. The Act contemplates occurrence of vacancy in the Board and has made provision for filling up such vacancy and power has been given to the Board to appoint directors for the purpose of filling up the vacancy. To hold that a Board becomes an invalid Board, because a vacancy has occurred, and a resolution has not been passed by the Company reducing the number, would be to introduce a principle in company law, the result of which inevitably will be the creation of a deadlock.

Where by orders of the Court, a company is prevented from holding general meeting for appointing a director, the litigant at whose instance and for whose benefit such orders have been made, cannot turn round and complain that there is no valid Board, because a vacancy caused by retirement by rotation has not been filled up. (1965) 1 Com LJ 35: (1965) 35 Com Cas 187: 69 Cal WN 137.

Where the managing agent of a company is a firm, any partner in the firm is also the officer of the company under S. 2 (30). In order to determine whether a person holds an office or place of profit under a company, the following tests may be applied, namely: (1) What authority has the power to make an appointment to the office concerned? (2) What authority can take disciplinary action and remove or dismiss the holder of the office? and (3) By whom and from what source is his remuneration paid? AIR 1958 Bom 314, Rel. on. Though managing agent has large rights under the agreement of agency, he is as liable for breaches of duty as any other smaller officer in the company. The managing agent must, therefore, be regarded as an officer holding an office or place of profit under the company. The major tests are satisfied in the case of a partner of the managing agency firm who must, therefore, be held to be an officer holding an office or place of profit under the company under S. 261 (1) (d). SECTION 265.

——Ss. 265, 397 to 409 — Appointment of directors according to principle of proportional representation — Powers of High Court and Central Government — Extent of.

Appointment of directors according to the principle of proportional representation under S. 265 is not a matter of exclusive jurisdiction of the Central Government under Sections 408 and 409. In fact, powers of Court under Group A (Ss. 397 to 407) are much wider than those of Central Government under Group B (Ss. 408 and 409). The power of the Central Government is limited to fresh appointment of directors only in certain contingencies as provided in S. 408; the question of Central Government to make fresh appointments of directors according to proportional representation under S. 265 as provided in the proviso to S. 408 (1), can only arise if the Company has not availed itself of the option given to it under S. 265; so, if the option to company to adopt proportional representation for the appointment of directors is not availed of by the Company, then only the Central Government may direct the Company to amend its articles in the manner provided in that section. The Central Government can impose on the Company not more than two directors for a period not exceeding three years only under conditions and in contingencies as provided in S. 408. The powers of Court under Group A (Ss. 397 to 407) are, however, much wider in that if the Court passes an order, providing for the appointment of the directors according to the principle of proportional representation, then by virtue of S. 404, such order of Court, making the alterations, shall, in all respects, have the same effect as if the alterations had been duly made by the Company, in accordance with the provisions of the Act, and accordingly, the company will be deemed to have availed itself of the option given to it under S. 265 and so there is no scope left for the Central Government to exercise its powers under S. 408. AIR 1962 Orissa 202 (217, 218) (Pt D) (Prs 36, 37).

Section 269 of the Companies Act, 1956, would cover only case of appointment of a Managing Director for the first time after the commencement of the Act and not cases of appointment of a particular person as a Managing Director after the commencement of the Act, when the company had a Managing Director even before the Act came into force. Hence the approval of the Government of India would be necessary only in a case when the office of the Managing Director was created for the first time after the Act came into force and a person appointed to that office and not to an appointment of a named person as Managing Director after the Act in the place of another person who held that office before the Act.

Difference between section 269 of Act (I of 1956) and section as amended by Act (LXV of 1960), pointed out.

A person appointed as Managing Director of a company after the commencement of the Act, where the company had a Managing Director before would not therefore be guilty of an offence of making a false statement under section 628 of the Act, if he signs a Balance Sheet, return or other statement as Managing Director, after his appointment, though his appoinment had not been approved by the Central Government because section 269 before its amendment in 1960, would not be attracted to such a case. (1964) 2 Comp LJ 176: (1964) 2 Mad LJ 498: 77 Mad LW 751: 1964 Mad LJ (Cr) 682: (1965) 35 Com Cas 163: 1965 Mad WN 11: 1965 (2) Cri LJ 104: AIR 1965 Mad 307 (308) (Pr 3).

——Ss. 274 (1) (e), 283 (1) (f) and Sch. I, Tab. A. Regn. 17 — Call — Meaning of — Amount required on allotment of fully-paid up shares is not a call for purposes of Act though it is deemed to be such for purposes of Regulations — Failure of director to pay such amount within time does not entail vacation of his office under S. 283 (1) (f) or disqualification under S. 274 (1) (e).

The amount remaining unpaid after amounts payable on application and allotment have been paid, is generally called up by the company by making a 'call' on its shareholders from time to time as necessity requires. The payment required on an allotment of shares is not a call within the meaning of S. 283 (1) (f), Companies Act (1956). Therefore, failure of a director to pay the amount required on an allotment of fully paid-up shares cannot attract the provisions of S. 283 (1) (f). In view of the penal provision contained in S. 283 (2-A) the section has to be construed strictly and the sum payable by the director cannot be deemed to be a call for purposes of the Act by virtue of Sch. I, Table A, Reg. 17. That regulation no doubt gives an extended meaning to the term 'call' but the deeming provisions of that regulation are only intended for the purposes of the Regulations as is clear from Cl. (2) of that Regulation. Therefore the failure of a director to pay the amount within six months from the date on which he is required to pay the amount on allotment of fully paid-up shares does not entail vacation of his office under S. 283 (1) (f) or disqualification under S. 274 (1) (e). Further the disqualification incurred by a director under S. 274 (1) (e) by failure to pay any call within six months of the last date fixed for the payment of it, ceases as soon as the payment is made thereafter. ILR (1964) 14 Raj 135.

——Ss. 283, 284 and 303 — Resignation by director — Application to Court for order directing company to remove his name as director — Competency — R. 9 of Company Rules — Scope of.

An application to the Court purported to have been filed under S. 283 of the Companies Act and R. 9 of the Company Rules, by a director of a company for an order directing the company to remove the applicant's name from the Board of Directors as and from a particular date on the ground that he has tendered his resignation, but the company had not reported the same to the Registrar as required by S. 303, is not maintainable. A director who has resigned will be deemed to have resigned from the date of his resignation, without prejudice of course, to his liabilities and obligations which had occurred up to that date and which he cannot evade by severing his connections with the company. R. 9 being only a replica of S. 151, Civil Procedure Code, the extent and limit of inherent powers under S. 151, Civil Procedure Code apply mutatis mutandis to R. 9 also. The Companies Act deliberately makes no provision for exercise of jurisdiction in regard to resignation of directors and, therefore, the inherent powers of Court under R. 9 cannot be invoked in such matters. 73 Mad LW 106: AIR 1960 Mad 482 (483, 484) (Prs 5, 6, 10, 11, 12)

SECTION 284

——S. 284 — Removal of managing director — Resolution by Board of Directors — Validity — Article of association — Construction.

The plaintiff was appointed a joint managing director by a resolution. Immediately before the passing of that resolution the plaintiff was a special director appointed under Art. 93 (b) and was entitled to certain remuneration. The resolution removing the plaintiff as a managing director, which was challenged did not even purport to adversely affect in any way the plaintiff's said appointment as special director or his rights to remuneration. The only question was which authority was empowered by the articles to remove a managing director. The plaintiff contended that that power of removal, on a true construction of Art. 100, was in the general meeting of the members of the company to be exercised by a special resolution, whereas the defendant company contended that it was in the board of directors themselves.

Held, that Art. 100 did not lay down any provision for removing a person from his managing directorship.

Held, further that inasmuch as there was a delegation of powers by the company to its Board of directors to the extent mentioned in Art. 99, for the purpose of considering the exercise of those powers, the relationship was that of principal and agent and sub-agent. Under S. 193 of the Indian Contract Act, the agent, namely, the board of directors, stood in the position of a principal in relation to the sub-agent, namely, the managing director; and under S. 203 of that Act, subject to the exceptions and conditions mentioned in that section, a principal could revoke the authority given to the agent and therefore the board of directors as the principal of the managing director could always revoke the authority of its agent the managing director. A revocation of all powers was tantamount to removal and therefore even in this position the Board of directors of the defendant company had under Art. 99, a power to remove the managing director, although such a power of removal had not been expressly given by that article. SECTION 286.

——S. 286 — Corporation — Meeting — Notice of — Majority resolution — If binding on absent members — Powers of general body to reverse resolution.

The cardinal principle of law relating to corporations is that the decision of the majority of the members of the corporation at a meeting presided over by the chairman, is the act of the Corporation, subject, however, to such statutory requirements as to the formalities to be fulfilled. The essential requirement, is that all members who are entitled to notice should be given a notice of the meeting and if, after due notice to all the members, some of them do not choose to appear, they are bound by the resolution passed by the majority.

Unless there is something in the provisions of the statute itself to permit the removal of a person validly elected, it would not be intra vires the general body to reverse such a resolution. (1958) 1 An WR 22: ILR (1958) Andh Pra 17.

Held, that the fact that the new managing director had not done the duties he was charged with did not mean that the old managing director still continued in office until such duties were performed by the new managing director, and therefore the old manging director, having ceased to hold office, had no authority to assign and the assignment was invalid. The general rule is that a person dealing with a company regulated by the articles and memorandum registered in some public office is not bound to do more than read the registered documents and see that the proposed dealing is not inconsistent therewith, and if there is a managing director and authority in the articles for the directors to delegate their power to him, then that person may assume that it is within the duties of the managing director to do what he purported to do. But this rule does not apply where the question is not one as to the scope of the power exercised by an apparent agent of the company but is in regard to the very existence of the agency. A creditor dealing with a trading company is required by law to be conversant with the terms of its Memorandum and Articles of Association and no more. If the transaction in question could be authorised by the passing of a resolution, such an act is a mere formality.

Held, that the person who was the director of the defendant company, the creditor of the managing agency and also a delegate of the managing agency could be authorised to enter into the loan transaction. Even supposing that there was no actual resolution authorising him to enter into the transaction on behalf of the defendant company either by the Board of Directors or by the Board of the Managing Agents, the claim of the plaintiff who was a creditor could not be affected. SECTION 294.

——S. 294 — Contract Act (1872), S. 182 — Contract of agency — What is — Held on a consideration of terms of entire agreement that it was a sole selling agency agreement within S. 294.

Agency has been defined in various ways. It is said to be a contract of employment for the purpose of bringing another in legal relation with a third party. The relationship is founded upon contract either express or implied by which one of the parties confides to the other the management of some business to be transacted in his name or on his account and by which the other assumes to do the business and renders an account of it. The relationship is to be determined not by name but by conduct of the parties and the purport of their dealings. Thus, facts may show that a sole selling agent is not in fact an agent but a buyer with the sole right to sell the goods of a manufacturer.

The expression 'sole selling agent' has not been defined in the Companies Act but it can only mean an individual or a firm or a Company given exclusive rights to sell goods of another person in a particular area. In order to find out whether the agreement is an agency agreement or not the terms have to be read as a whole to find out whether one was being appointed as an agent by the other. The mere inclusion of a term that business will be as between principal and principal does not carry one very far in the light of all the other terms which the parties are agreed to.

By an agreement dated 27-1-1962, The National Co. Ltd., appointed B. M. T. Commodity Corporation of New York as its exclusive distributors in U. S. A. and other foreign countries for sale of jute goods manufactured by it. B. M. T. Corporation was prohibited from selling similar goods manufactured by any one else and the National Company undertook not to sell its products in the areas covered by the agreement except through B. M. T. The franchised right of distribution of the goods was in B. M. T. and they were to make best endeavours to promote and secure maximum sales or distribution of National's goods and were to receive certain commission or discount. There were also terms which involved the highest degree of mutual confidence and trust between the contracting parties. B. M. T. was to furnish all explanations and information regarding the stock and their dealings in National's goods and they were to give access to the books, records, stock, etc., relating to National's goods.

Held, on a consideration of the entire agreement as a whole that the form of the agreement resembled more closely the nature of an agreement of agency than an agreement between principal and principal or an agreement between a buyer and seller pure and simple. Though the business of the contracting parties was described as principal to principal the other terms of the agreement outweighed this consideration. The agreement of 27-1-1962 was a sole selling agency agreement and came within the purview of S. 294 of the Companies Act, 1956 as amended by Act of 1960. (1965) 35 Com Cas 706: (1965) 1 Com LJ 112: 69 Cal WN 369.

——Ss. 294 and 173 — S. 294 is mandatory and not directory — Effect of non-compliance — Appointment of sole selling agent — Appointment not approved as a special item of business as contemplated by S. 173 at the first annual general meeting of Company — Report of directors referring to such appointment approved at annual meeting only as ordinary business — Appointment of agent is invalid and cannot be ratified by approval at subsequent meeting.

It is well settled that the directory or imperative form of the language employed in a Statute is not always a sure index of the intention of the legislature. But where the command or mandate of the legislature is such that its non-compliance nullifies the thing done, it can fairly be regarded as imperative in character.

Section 294 of the Companies Act is mandatory and not directory in character. Section 294 enjoins that no appointment of a sole selling agent can be made except subject to the condition that if it is not approved by the company in the first general meeting held after the appointment, then it shall cease to be valid. Rigorous observance of the provisions of the section is essential and if the appointment is not made subject to the prescribed condition, and the appointment is not approved at the first general meeting in express terms, the appointment is rendered invalid. Whether it is a case of 'not approved' or 'disapproved' under S. 294 (2) or 294 (2-A) the appointment, if it has become invalid, is to be regarded as dead and cannot be resuscitated or revived and cannot be ratified by approval at a subsequent meeting. In such a case the only course open is to make a fresh appointment and then comply with the requirements of the provisions of S. 294.

If the Directors choose to enter into an agreement with a sole selling agent without the condition that the appointment shall cease to be valid if not approved by the company in the first general meeting held thereafter the appointment is bad ab initio and the Directors can be injuncted from acting on it in a properly framed suit because they would be doing something which the law does not allow them to do. This is not a matter of mere internal arrangement. If the Directors had done something illegal there could be no question of ratification. It is only when an act which can be done regularly has been done irregularly that the question of ratification by the company and the Court's unwillingness to interfere in the internal management of the company comes in.

Where the adoption or approval of the report of the Directors was treated at the annual general meeting as ordinary business and not special business as contemplated by S. 173 (1) (a) of the Companies Act, the mere fact that the agency agreement, dated 27th January, 1962 was referred to in the report of the Directors, dated the 9th April, 1962 and certain particulars about the agreement had been mentioned in the report and the report was adopted and approved at the adjourned annual general meeting of the 29th August, 1962 is not proper compliance with the requirements of S. 294. Further under S. 173 (2), explanatory note with regard to special items of business has to be annexed to the notice of the meeting; but this was not done with regard to the agreement, dated the 27th January, 1962. (1965) 35 Com Cas 706: (1965) 1 Com LJ 112: 69 Cal WN 369.

SECTION 295.

——S. 295 (1) and (3) — Loan and deposit — No distinction so far as S. 295 is concerned.

So far as the provisions of S. 295 are concerned there is no distinction between a loan and a deposit. Both in case of a loan and a deposit there is relationship of a debtor and a creditor and the amount is repayable to the creditor. May be that in the case of a deposit, the cause of action for filing an action does not arise until a demand is made, but for the purposes of S. 295, this is immaterial and the amount with the banker would still be a loan. ——S. 295 (1) (a) — Loan by company to Hindu joint family concern — Karta Director of lending company — Loan is to Director — Provisions of S. 295 (1) (a) are attracted.

When the amount is taken by the Karta of a Joint Hindu Family concern, it is a loan to him though the members of the family may also be liable to pay it. When the karta of the joint family concern is also a director of the lending company, it is a loan to a director and the provisions of S. 295 (1) (a) are attracted. ILR (1962) 12 Raj 708: (1963) 1 Com LJ 133: 1962

Raj LW 366: 1963 (1) Cr LJ 61: AIR 1963 Raj 6 (8) (Pt B) (Pr 7).

——S. 295 (3) — Expression 'enforce the payment of the loan made' — Meaning — Making demand or obtaining mortgage is not enforcement within meaning of S. 295 (3).

The word 'enforce' used in S. 295 (3), means the taking of such action on the part of the creditor which compels the debtor to effect repayment of the loan, such as, the institution of a suit, attachment or sale of the latter's properties, etc. Making a demand from the debtor to repay the loan would not amount to 'enforcing repayment'. A demand may only be a request or may be accompanied by some threat of legal action but the element of force which compels obedience which the word 'enforce' carries is absent from it. Merely obtaining of a mortgage from the debtor would not amount to enforcing the repayment of the loan within the meaning of sub-section (3) of S. 295. For it might be that the loan which was unsecured became secured after the mortgage, still the amount remained in the hands of the debtor. ——S. 295 (3) and (4) — Retrospective operation — Loan granted in contravention of S. 86-D of Act of 1913 — Prosecution after coming into force of new Act — Maintainability.

Under S. 295 (3) of the Companies Act, 1956, companies can obtain approval of the Government in respect of loans and guarantees made earlier in contravention of S. 86-D of the old Act and regularise them within the prescribed period after the commencement of the new Act. The new Act does not contemplate the maintainability of prosecutions under S. 86-D of the old Act but contemplates prosecutions only under S. 295 (4) on omission to obtain approval after the enforcement of the new Act within the prescribed time. Therefore a prosecution under S. 86-D of the old Act in respect of a loan granted in contravention of S. 86-D is not justified after the commencement of the new Act and the conviction under S. 86-D cannot be maintained. 1961 (1) Cr LJ 433: ILR (1960) 10 Raj 1483: 1961 Raj LW 583: (1962) 32 Comp Cas 647: AIR 1961 Raj 48 (50, 51) (Pt B) (Prs 19, 20).

A contract (e.g., allotment of shares) is not rendered invalid merely because one of the directors who votes for the resolution is an interested director. A contract can only be void if it is prohibited by law as provided under S. 23 of the Contract Act. There is no provision under the Companies Act prohibiting a contract between the company and a director. On the contrary, the Act specifically envisages such contracts and has made provisions for them, such as Ss. 297, 299 and 300. All that the law requires is that the director who enters into a contract with the company should not take any part in entering into it on behalf of the company. Section 297 (1) lays down that a director shall not enter into certain contracts with the company without the consent of the Board of Directors. But even if he does enter into such a contract it is not void but only voidable at the option of the Board under S. 297 (5). The consensus of judicial opinion is that if without the vote of the interested director, the contract would still have been carried through, it is not affected. But if without the vote of the interested director, the contract will not be carried through or without him there will be no quorum, then the contract is voidable at the option of the company and the interested director becomes liable to account for secret profits.

Held, that the allotment of shares in the present case was not vitiated as two out of the three directors who voted in favour of the allotment were disinterested and formed a quorum. ILR (1964) 14 Raj 135.

A director cannot be said to be in any way, directly or indirectly concerned or interested in a contract or arrangement (e.g., allotment of shares to a relative) within the meaning of Ss. 299 and 300, Companies Act, 1956, merely on the ground that such contract or arrangement has been entered into by his relative with company. The law under the Act of 1956 in this respect is the same as it was under the Act of 1913.

The expression 'concerned or interested in a contract' signifies involvement of the director in the contract by personal interest or by duty which might come into conflict with the interest of the company which the director is bound to protect. For example, a director may have no personal interest in a contract but may be concerned in it merely as a trustee or an agent of the contractor. Under S. 306 of the Companies Act (1956) it is no part of the Registrar's functions to pronounce as to the validity of the meeting or that a particular office-bearer having been duly elected. Under S. 306 a duty is cast upon him to enter the particulars received by him under S. 303 (2) from the company, in a register or registers.

Where therefore, two rival groups in a registered association held two different meetings and submitted two separate returns under S. 303 (2) of the Act containing different names of the office-bearers elected and the Registrar deciding, under a mistaken view of his powers under S. 306, one of the returns submitted as valid returned the other.

Held, the Registrar assumed powers which the statute did not confer on him and therefore the illegal exercise of jurisdiction attracted the exercise of powers under Art. 226 by the High Court. (1961) 31 Com Cas 673 (Punj).

The petitioner, as public limited company, passed two special resolutions in the extraordinary General Body Meeting of the Company fixing with effect from 28-12-1960 the remuneration of its director, K, as part-time technical adviser of the company at 3/4 p/c of net profits of the company in accordance with S. 309 (4), and fixing with effect from 1-4-1962 an additional remuneration of 1/2 p/c of the net profits of the company as the increased activities of the company required work of Directional nature from him. The resolutions were sent to Central Government for its approval. As regards the first resolution the Central Government approved same under S. 310, by refixing the remuneration at a commission of 3/4 p/c on the net profits with effect from 28th December 1960 subject to the condition that it shall not exceed Rs. 9,000 per annum. The Central Government also approved, the increase in the remuneration of K as part-time technical adviser by paying him a commission of one per cent instead of $1\frac{1}{4}$, on net profits with effect from 1st April 1962, subject to the condition that this remuneration shall be reduced to the extent of the remuneration drawn by him from the sole selling agents of the company and further to the extent of the share in his own name in the name of his wife, son/sons and unmarried daughters, if any, in the net profits of the said sole selling agents of the Company as are relatable to business in the goods of the petitioner Company. The petitioner filed petition for issue of a writ in the nature of certiorari or any other appropriate writs prohibiting the Central Government from interfering with the rights of the petitioner Company to pay the remuneration as fixed in the special resolutions. It was urged that neither of these two resolutions required the approval of the Central Government under any of the provisions of the Act, though under some mistaken belief such approval was sought by the Company. Without prejudice to the above contention, it was nextly urged that at least, the first resolution which pertained to remuneration proposed to be paid to K for his services as Technical Adviser, did not require any such approval. Thirdly, it was contended that, in any event, it was not competent for the Central Government to have imposed the conditions and restrictions:

Held that K was neither a director in the whole time employment of the company nor a Managing Director. He was a director as contemplated by S. 309 (4) and the remuneration to him and other directors like him, which may be authorised by special resolution, should not exceed the limit of one per cent of the net profits as required under Cl. (a) of sub-section (4) (the Company being one which has a Managing Director). If the remuneration in respect of work of Directional nature authorised by special resolution No. 2 and the remuneration which was payable to other directors like him, together did not exceed the said limit of one per cent, then, no approval of the Central Government under S. 309 might be necessary. But, this did not mean that S. 310 would not be attracted. The remuneration was an additional one and was an increase in the remuneration of, at least, this particular director and thus attracted the provisions of S. 310 which made it necessary that in such cases the approval of the Central Government should be obtained.

Held further that the competence of the Central Government under S. 637-A to impose conditions, limitations or restrictions is neither arbitrary nor unlimited. Being an incidental power, it was necessary that the limitations or restrictions should be relevant to, or bear relation, to the matter in respect of which the Central Government, had been given the competence to accord approval, sanction, consent, confirmation or recognition. In that way, the purpose for which the approval, (sanction, consent, confirmation or recognition) was necessary under any concerned provision of the Act, will be a relevant consideration while imposing the conditions, limitations or restrictions under S. 637-A (1), because, the incidental power to impose the latter, could not travel beyond the said purpose.

In the present case, it was not stated that the competence of the Central Government to grant approval to the two resolutions arose under any provision of the Act other than Ss. 309 and 310.

The question of any extra efforts or labours on the part of the directors in the management of the Company, might also be a relevant consideration while according or refusing the approval. It was in the light of this that the validity or otherwise of the conditions and restrictions imposed have to be considered. There was no provision in the Act which would enable the Central Government to impose a condition on a consideration of the fact that some income from another independent Company was earned by K and the members of his family. Considerations of this kind which were not authorised by the provisions of the Act and which had no bearing on the financial condition of the petitioner Company, would be irrelevant. In these circumstances, it must be held that the condition was arbitrary and unauthorised and was liable to be struck down.

The question as to whether the remuneration allowed to K by Special resolution No. 1 for his work as part-time Technical Adviser required the approval of the Central Government under Section 309, had to be approached uninfluenced by any consideration of the control being exercised for the protection of the Company, when it was not contended by the Central Government that this resolution was a mere devise to confer an unmerited benefit on K to the detriment of the company.

M. Sadasivayya, J.: The resolution I pertained to managerial remuneration payable to the Directors of a Company. It is true that S. 309 did not expressly state that it was confined to managerial remuneration payable to the Directors; but, from the setting of S. 309, the relation which it bore to S. 198 and the fact that the office of Technical Adviser was an office of profit which a Director is allowed to hold under S. 314 of the Act, it was clear that S. 309 refered to managerial remuneration. If it was the intention of the Legislature that even such remuneration as was attributable to any office or place of profit validly held under the company, should also be within the limit specified in S. 309 (4), then it would only be reasonable to expect that it would have been plainly stated so, either in S. 309 or in S. 314.

In order to determine whether a place or office held by a Director was a place or office of profit, the test that was laid down in sub-section (3) of S. 314 was that he "obtains from the Company anything by way of remuneration over and above the remuneration to which he is entitled as such Director". Therefore, the remuneration derived from an office of profit permitted under S. 314 to be held by a Director, was distinct from the remuneration to which he was entitled as Director. (The remuneration to which he was entitled in his capacity as Director, was that covered by Ss. 198 and 309). There was nothing in S. 314 to the effect that the limit specified in Ss. 198 (1) and 309 (4) should govern the remuneration derived by a Director holding an office of profit permitted under S. 314. In the absence of any express provision to the contrary, there was no principle on the basis of which such a Director could be denied remuneration for such work or services; equally, there would be no reason to extend to such remuneration the limit of percentages mentioned in S. 309 (4), when the law did not expressly state that the said limit would be applicable to remuneration attributable to services rendered or work done in some capacity other than that of a director. AIR 1958 Bom 214, Relied on.

Therefore, no approval of the Central Government was necessary in respect of the remuneration payable to him for his services as part-time Technical Adviser. It followed that the incidental powers under S. 637-A, could not be availed of in respect of special resolution No. 1 and the remuneration payable thereunder to K.

Gopivallabha Iyengar, J.: (Contra) The question that arose for consideration in this case was not whether a director could hold an office of profit or not but whether the remuneration paid to him on that account came within the provisions of S. 309 (4). The same observations apply to the provisions of S. 318 (5) of the Act. A director could claim compensation in respect of services rendered by him in any other capacity as provided in S. 318. This did not give any support to the contention that the remuneration paid to a Director in any capacity other than as a Director did not come within the scope of S. 309 (4) of the Act. Section 309 did not make any distinction between the remuneration payable to the director as such director or in any other capacity. There was nothing in the wording of S. 309 to limit the application of the section to the remuneration paid to the directors in their capacity only as directors. Therefore if the payment under Resolution No. 1 provided for the remuneration to a director exceeding the permissible limit, it would be obligatory on the part of the company to comply with the terms of S. 309 (4) and obtain the approval of the Central Government. AIR 1918 Bom 214, Expl. and Disting.

The first Resolution provided for a variation of the payment of the remuneration payable to the director K. In these circumstances the provisions of S. 310 of the Act would come in the way of the contention. Even if the provisions of S. 309 (4) should be considered as applicable to the remuneration, even then the approval of the Central Government was unnecessary inasmuch as the rate of percentage of the net profits payable to the part-time Director cum Technical Advisor was less than 1 per cent. The first resolution effected an amendment in the provisions relating to the remuneration of a director and the amendment or the variation effected under the Resolution did purport to increase or had the effect of increasing the remuneration that was already being paid. The provision of S. 310 was wide enough to cover the present case and therefore the contention that it was not necessary to seek the approval of the Central Government proceeding on the basis that the provisions of S. 309 (4) applied to the payment of remuneration referred to in the first Resolution could not be accepted.

Held however that no reasons were mentioned as to why the remuneration payable to K from 28-12-60 to 1-4-62 should be reduced to a maximum of Rs. 9,000 per annum. This action was not merely not in conformity with the principles of natural justice but also with the practice of the Central Government that before making any final order on an application for approval the company was given an opportunity to make its representations to Government in regard to the proposed variations. The remuneration that K got as Technical Advisor was reckoned separately from the remuneration proposed to be paid to him for his services of a directorial nature. Before the condition was imposed, the Central Government did not inform the company what they proposed to do and the company was unable to place any material before the Central Government as to why the imposition of that condition was not justified in the circumstances of the case. No reasons were shown as to how this condition could be justified even having regard to the provisions of S. 637-A of the Act. Therefore, the conditions imposed relating to the first resolution would not be sustained. (1965) 2 Mys LJ 520 (DB).

SECTION 312.

● ——Ss. 312, 254, 255 and 317—Scope and effect — 'Assignment of his office' by director — 'Assignment' does not include 'appointment' — Managing director appointing by will his successor in office — Appointment is valid and does not offend, S. 312.

The word 'assignment' in S. 312, Companies Act, 1956 does not mean or include 'appointment'. An 'appointment', has nothing to do with anything passing from one to another; it connotes the putting in of some one in a vacancy. The acts constituting a transfer and an appointment are therefore wholly dissimilar. Section 255 of the Act contemplates an appointment by a director of another person as director to take his office, when made vacant by his resignation or death or the expiry of the term of his office. There will be nothing illegal, if the power is exercised in the case of the death of the director, by an appointment made by his will. If the word 'assignment' in S. 312 is interpreted as including 'appointment', S. 312 will come into conflict with S. 255. The object of the Act or of S. 312 was not to prevent a director from appointing his successor.

Sections 254 and 317 of the Act do not even impliedly indicate that there should be no perpetual management. On the other hand S. 255 shows that the Act did not consider this as an evil which required precaution. Even under the main part of S. 86-B of the Companies Act, 1913, an appointment of a successor to his office by the director was not an assignment of his office by him. The proviso to S. 86-B of the old Act does not assist the argument that in S. 312 of the new Act, the word "assignment" would include "appointment".

Held, that the exercise of the power was legal under S. 255 of the Act and did not offend S. 312 of the Act. AIR 1960 Bom 167, Reversed. Oriental Metal Pressing Works (P.) Ltd. v. ——S. 312 — "Assignment" — Meaning of.

Mudholkar, J. (agreeing with S. T. Desai, J.) : The word 'ssignment' used in S. 312 must be construed in a wide sense. The words "any assignment" are comprehensive enough to include every assignment or transfer of the office of a director or of the appointment by a director of a person to the office of a director in his place, whether by a deed inter vivos or by a will. 61 Bom LR 1045 : (1960) 30 Com Cas 682 : AIR 1960 Bom 167 (186) (Pt B) (Prs 59, 60) (DB).

——Ss. 312 ,2 (13), (16) and 9 — Scope — Transfer of office of managing director inter vivos or by will — Validity — "Director" — If includes managing director.

Per Mudholkar, J. (agreeing with S. T. Desai J.) : Section 312 not only applies to managing directors but also prohibits the transmission of the office of a director as well as a managing director whether inter vivos or by will.

As the expression managing director defined in S. 2 (26) falls within the more general expression 'director' defined in S. 2 (12) it is to be accorded its special meaning only when the context in which it is used so requires.

In S. 312 the word 'director' alone appears, and therefore unless the context shows that it is to be given a narrower or different meaning, it must be given the meaning which is contained in the definition.

Held, that the unqualified power conferred by Art. 109 (b) of the Articles of Association, to appoint any person to be a managing director either by deed inter vivos or by will or codicil was repugnant to the provisions of S. 312 and therefore void by virtue of S. 9. Therefore, the appointment of defendant by will as the managing director was invalid. 61 Bom LR 1045: (1960) 30 Com Cas 682: AIR 1960 Bom 167 (187, 188, 190) (Pt C) (Prs 69, 78) (DB).

SECTION 389

● ——S. 389 (Before its amendment in 1960) — Arbitration (Protocol and Convention) Act (1937), S. 3 — Collaboration agreement between Indian and Foreign Company—Arbitration clause providing for settlement of disputes under International Chamber of Commerce Rules — Clause is valid and binding — Effect of S. 3 of Act 6 of 1937 and Ss. 46 and 47, Arbitration Act — Indian Company suing foreign company in Indian Court — Suit can be stayed under S. 3 of Act 6 of 1937.

On a review of the Statutory provisions it is clear that S. 152 of the Companies Act, 1913, and Section 389 of the Companies Act, 1956 were intended to provide that all arbitrations to which a company is a party shall be conducted in accordance with the provisions of the Arbitration Act. Section 389 (1) of the Companes Act, 1956, regulated the power of Indian Companies to agree to submit differences to arbitration and by sub-S. (3) the provisions of the Arbitration Act, 1940, applied to all arbitrations to which an Indian Company was a party.

Further, S. 47 of the Arbitration Act, 1940 which is as much a part of the Indian Arbitration Act as any other provision, makes the provisions of the Arbitration Act applicable to all arbitrations and to all proceedings thereunder but 'subject to the provisions of S. 46' and 'save in so far as is otherwise provided by any law for the time being in force'. By the use of these latter words, the Legislature has clearly made the provisions of the Arbitration (Protocol and Convention) Act, 1937, applicable to consensual arbitrations under the Arbitration Act of 1940 when the conditions prescribed for the application of that Act are attracted, even if the scheme of arbitration recognised thereby is inconsistent with Ss. 3 to 38 of the Arbitration Act.

Thus, where a company registered under the Indian Companies Act, 1956, enters into a collaboration agreement containing an arbitration clause under which both the companies agree to refer their future disputes for settlement by arbitration under the Rules of the International Chamber of Commerce, the arbitration is governed by the Protocol on Arbitration Clauses agreed to at Geneva on September 24, 1923, and the Protocol in the First Schedule applies and the Arbitration (Protocol and Convention) Act, 1937, being a law otherwise providing for arbitration the provisions thereof would by virtue of S. 47, be applicable to arbitrations under S. 389 of the Indian Companies Act, 1956, if the conditions regarding their applicability are fulfilled. An arbitration according to the provision of Act VI of 1937 being thus recognised by the Arbitration Act, the agreement to refer disputes in accordance with the rules of the International Chamber of Commerce is not inconsistent with S. 389 of the Companies Act. The arbitration clause is valid and binding on the Indian company and when the Indian Company files a suit against the foreign company in an Indian Court on the basis of the collaboration agreement, the suit can be stayed under S. 3 of the Arbitration (Protocol and Convention) Act, 1937. ●——S. 389—(Before its amendment in 1960) — Scope of — Cl. (3) not restricted to statutory arbitrations under the Act.

An arbitration agreement being a contract to submit present or future differences between the parties not to the ordinary courts but before a tribunal chosen by the parties, if the company has the power to enter into a contract, that power would include power to submit a dispute to arbitration out of Court. Section 389 does not therefore, confer any new right upon Companies to agree to refer disputes which have arisen or which may arise, to arbitration: the section recognised the rights of a company to refer present disputes to arbitration, and sought to regulate the right by placing a restriction upon the exercise of that right. There is no warrant for holding that sub-S. (3) is independent of sub-S. (1). Sub-section (1) affirms the power of a company to refer differences between it and another company or person, and also regulates it. Sub-section (3) makes the provisions of the Arbitration Act applicable to all arbitrations to which a company is a party; it is not restricted to mere statutory arbitrations to which a company is obliged to submit by virtue of the provisions of the Companies Act. To invest sub-sec. (3) with a restricted meaning, is to make it redundant. Societe De Traction et D'Electricite Societe Anonyme v. Any scheme which is fair and reasonable and made in good faith will be sanctioned if it could reasonably be supposed by sensible people to be for the benefit of each class of the members of creditors concerned. ——Ss. 391, 393, 394 — Petition by majority of shareholders for sanction of scheme of amalgamation of companies — Burden to show that scheme is fair and reasonable is on petitioners — Matters to be considered by Court.

Having regard to the fact that the petitioner company seeks sanction for the scheme and that it is the duty of the Court to see that the scheme is a fair and reasonable one, the initial burden is on the petitioner to show that, prima facie, the scheme is fair and reasonable such as a prudent and reasonable shareholder would approve of and not object to. AIR 1959 Cal 679, Dissented from.

The function of the Court is two-fold. The first function is to determine whether the statutory requirements as laid down is S. 391 of the Companies Act have been complied with. The legislature has purposely left discretion with the Court in this respect. The Court can apply its judicial mind to the scheme and reach a conclusion of its own. It must consider whether it is in the interest of the company as a whole and of the class of persons for whom the majority acts and whether the scheme is such that it must be pushed through. The Court must look at it from the point of view of a reasonable and a fair minded person. If the Court finds that the majority is acting in a mala fide manner, then, it is the duty of the Court to protect the minority from the tyranny of the majority. Therefore, the scheme has not got to be scrutinized by the court with that much care with which an expert will scrutinise it. It must be tested from the point of view of an ordinary reasonable shareholder, acting in a business like manner, taking within his comprehension and bearing in mind all the circumstances prevailing at the time when the meeting was called upon to consider the scheme in question. Whilst in some rare and exceptional cases, the Court may take into consideration subsequent events to protect the interests of the company or the shareholders as a general rule, the Court should consider the resolution on the footing of the circumstances which were in existence at the time when the scheme was formulated, deliberated upon and approved. (1961) 2 Guj LR 681: AIR 1962 Guj 305 (310, 311) (Pt A) (Prs 14, 15).

——S. 391 — Banking company — Scheme of Composition — Sanction of Court — Procedure.

When the Court is moved to exercise its powers under S. 391 for sanctioning a scheme of composition proposed by a bank the following procedure laid down by the provisions of S. 391 read with S. 45, Banking Companies Act, has to be followed:

(1) Firstly, the Court has to consider whether the scheme is fit to go to creditors or shareholders or both for consideration and then in exercise of its discretion, to order meetings of those persons to be called, held and conducted in accordance with its directions.

(2) If the requisite majority under sub-s. (2) of S. 391 does not approve of the scheme, the matter is at an end. If, on the other hand, the requisite majority approves of it, the petition for sanction for the scheme, if the company concerned is a banking company, must obtain a certificate from the Reserve Bank in writing to the effect that the scheme is not incapable of being worked and is not detrimental to the interests of the depositors under sub-s. (1) of S. 45 of the Banking Companies Act before the scheme is put up before the Court for its sanction. If the Reserve Bank does not issue a certificate as required, the Court will be powerless to confirm the scheme.

(3) When the scheme relating to a banking company is put up along with the Reserve Bank's certificate for sanction before the Court, it may direct the Reserve Bank to make certain enquiries under sub-s. (2) of S. 45. On receipt of the report if such enquiries are ordered, or without any report if enquiries are not ordered, the court has to consider the scheme, and, if it thinks proper, it may sanction it. In deciding the question of sanction, the Court will attach due weight to the opinion of the majority but will not be bound by it. After sanction, the scheme will be binding on the company, its creditors, shareholders and others who are concerned. AIR 1952 Cal 133, Rel. on. 1959 BLJR 98: (1959) 29 Com Cas 487: AIR 1959 Pat 288 (289, 290) (Pt B) (Pr 7).

——Ss. 391 and 394 — Duty of Court.

The Court ought not to substitute its discretion for that of the shareholders, who should normally be permitted to manage their own affairs themselves, but in sanctioning a scheme the Court does not simply register the wishes of the shareholders or the creditors, as the case may be, as expressed in their resolution passing the scheme. It is the duty of the Court to examine the scheme and to see whether there has been compliance with the provisions of law.

The scheme must conform to the standard of reasonableness, having regard to all the information that may be available. Where the shareholders have not independently guarded their interests the Court cannot abdicate responsibility of examining the proposal in the scheme and decide whether it conforms to the standards of fairness and reasonableness.

The scheme has to be examined by the Court with a view to see, whether it is such as an independent and honest member of the Company, while wisely acting in respect of his own interest, can reasonably approve.

The Court will prefer a just, equitable and reasonable scheme of arrangement, whereby the Company may be able to exist, and in time, to flourish, to a compulsory liquidation terminating its existence with very slim chances of payment in full and with reasonable expedition. (1958) 28 Com Cas 111: 60 Punj LR 89: AIR 1958 Punj 30 (32, 33, 34) (Prs 7, 8).

7. Scheme for companies in winding up.

——S. 391 — Bank in liquidation — Application for sanction of scheme — Maintainability.

The Court can approve of a compromise or arrangement put up before it under S. 391 of the new Act either when the company in question is a going concern or when it is under liquidation. Even though the Court is bound, in a case covered by S. 38 (1) of the Banking Companies Act, to order winding up of the Bank concerned, there is no provision of law which prevents the Court from taking into consideration a scheme which is proposed in such a case.

Held, that there was no legal bar to the entertainment of Bank's application under S. 391 but that considering the merits of the scheme proposed it was quite worthless and unworkable. Consequently, the scheme proposed could not be sanctioned. 1959 BLJR 98: (1959) 29 Com Cas 487: AIR 1959 Pat 288 (293) (Pt F) (Prs 31, 34, 35).

SECTION 393

——S. 393 (1) (a) — Interests of friends and relations of managing directors need not be mentioned.

The latter part of the Cl. (a) of S. 393 (1) deals with the material interests of only the persons mentioned therein. The persons mentioned are directors, managing director, managing agent, secretaries and treasurers or manager of the company. The clause does not state that the interests of the friends or supporters or relatives of any of the aforesaid persons be mentioned in the statement. It is not necessary to mention in the statement the share holding of the relatives or the friends of the supporters of the directors and the managing agents. (1961) 2 Guj LR 681: AIR 1962 Guj 305 (313) (Pt B) (Pr 18).

——S. 393 (1) (a) — Scheme of amalgamation — Statement stating terms of scheme — Effect of proposed scheme must be explained — It means effect on matters like welfare of company and its shareholders — Matters which are self-evident or obvious need not be mentioned.

The first part of Cl. (a) of S. 393 (1) requires that the statement must contain not only the terms of the scheme, but must also further explain as to what its effect would be. If there is anything in the scheme, compromise or arrangement, which is not quite obvious to a person, reasonably acquainted with the facts of the case, by merely reading the terms of the scheme, then, a duty is cast upon the persons concerned to mention what the consequence will be if the scheme is approved of. If something is implied in the scheme, which is not obvious, the same must be brought to the notice of the shareholders.

Where the statement mentions that shareholders in the company to be amalgamated will be given $1^3/_4$ shares in the company in which it is to be amalgamated, for each share held in the former company, no further explanation on that particular point is called for. The details as to the way in which the ratio was arrived at is not a matter relating to the effect of the scheme. That is a matter of detail and pertains to things required to be considered for fixing the ratio. (1961) 2 Guj LR 681: AIR 1962 Guj 305 (313) (Pt C) (Pr 19).

——S. 393 (1) (a) — Interests of whatever kind in scheme, of persons concerned have to be mentioned and not only interest in company in respect of which scheme is being propounded.

The second part of Cl. (a) of S. 393 (1) requires two things to be mentioned in the statement viz., (i) the material interests of several persons, and (ii) the effect of the scheme on those interests, if and in so far as, it is different from the effect on the like interests of other persons. Every kind of interest is not to be mentioned. Only material interests are to be so done. The first part of the second limb of Cl. (a) cannot be construed as being confined only to the interests of the concerned persons in the company, in respect of which the scheme is being propounded. The interests which are particularly to be mentioned by the concerned persons are not interests which they hold or possess as such concerned persons in the company, but also 'or otherwise'. The section states in express terms that the interests which the director possesses not only as a member or a creditor but any other interests which he possesses in any other capacity has got to be mentioned in the statement under Cl. (a).

It would follow that the effect on that interest of the scheme must also be mentioned in the statement if and in so far as that effect is different from the material interests which any other person interested in the scheme may have. The expression 'like interests' means the interests spoken of in the earlier part of Cl. (a) and that earlier part refers to material interests. The second limb of Cl. (a) requires that the statement after mentioning the material interest of the concerned persons must compare those material interests with the material interests of the non-concerned persons and if a comparison of the two sets of interests reveals that the effect of the scheme on the concerned persons is different from its effect on the non-concerned persons, then, that effect must also be mentioned in the statement. (1961) 2 Guj LR 681: AIR 1962 Guj 305 (313, 314) (Pt D) (Prs 20, 21, 22, 24).

——S. 393 (1) (a) and (4) — Each concerned person is required to mention interest of the other concerned persons.

Sub-s. (4) of S. 393 casts a duty not only on persons who hold material interests to comply with the requirements of the sub-section, but casts that duty also on the company and every officer of the company. The true legal position is that it is the duty of every officer of the company and the company to acquaint himself or itself with the material interests of every other concerned person, such as the directors, managing partner or manager of the company, and to mention that interest and to explain its effect in the statement. That is the primary duty which has been cast upon the concerned persons. If they fail in this duty, then, they are responsible for the breach of that duty and will be liable to be punished under sub-s. (4). But, the duty which is cast on these persons is not an absolute one. The duty which is cast on them is to make a reasonable enquiry in the matter of the material interests of others. If sub-s. (4) is read together with the proviso, the effect is that every concerned person, who makes an honest attempt to acquaint himself with the material interests of all the concerned persons, but, is unable to furnish information on account of the refusal of those other concerned persons, then, he will not be criminally responsible.

The directors and the managing agents of the company should mention in the statement all the interests which each one of them possessed in the scheme and if the effect of the scheme on those interests was different from the material interests of other persons interested in the same scheme, the same should be mentioned and explained to the shareholders. (1961) 2 Guj LR 681. SECTION 395

——S. 395 — Scheme involving transfer of shares — Application by dissenting shareholders—Power of Court — Offer when to be considered fair and proper — Burden of proof — (Companies Act (1913), S. 153-B) — (Evidence Act (1872), Ss. 101 to 104).

Where one company offers to buy the shares of another company on certain terms and majority of the shareholders of the transferor company agree to such a transfer but the dissenting shareholders apply under S. 153-B of the Companies Act (1913) for an order restraining the transferee company from acquiring their shares, the discretion of the Court is limited as regards the nature of the order to be passed in such a case. The Court can pass only one of two orders. If can either dismiss the application, in which case the transferee company will be entitled and also bound to acquire the shares of the applicants in accordance with the terms of their offer. Alternatively it can allow the application of the applicants in which case the transferee company will not be entitled to acquire the shares of the dissenting shareholders.

The view of the Legislature is that where not less than nine-tenths of the shareholders in the transferor company approve the scheme or accept the offer prima facie, at any rate, the order must be taken to be a proper one.

The applicants must establish that there has been misrepresentation which may have influenced the view of the majority of shareholders.

The fact that by acquisition of shares the transferee company will be able to obtain substantial advantages that they would be able to get relief from income-tax and also to get their shares, quoted on the stock exchange, will not make the transaction unfair as these advantages are neither illegal nor improper. ——S. 395 — Retrospective operation.

The phrase "by virtue of this section" in subs. (3) of S. 395 has been left as it is even in the altered form in which the section is to apply in relation to an offer made by the transferee company to shareholders of the transferor company before the commencement of this Act. It necessarily follows that where shares of the dissenting shareholders are to be acquired after the commencement of the new Act, even in relation to the offers already made, the transferee company shall have to base its right on the provisions of S. 395 of the new Act. Undoubtedly, the intention of the Legislature is to make S. 395 applicable even to offers which were approved by majority of the shareholders before the commencement of the Act. AIR 1956 Pepsu 86 (88) (Prs 10, 12).

1. Scope.
2. Application under — Maintainability and requirements.
3. Who can apply.
4. Grounds for relief.
5. Powers of Court.
6. Appeal.

1. Scope.

——Ss. 397 and 398 — Compromise — When valid.

A small private limited company which had just started its work was respondent No. 1 in a petition filed by a group of shareholders under Ss. 397 and 398 of the Companies Act. Thereafter, the parties settled their dispute by agreeing that the allotment of certain shares should be validated, and one of the groups should transfer its entire shareholding to the other group in accordance with the terms agreed upon. Signed agreement was produced before the Companies Tribunal.

Held: Since the Central Government did not, make any representation & there was nothing unlawful in the terms of the compromise which did not go beyond the powers of the Tribunal under Ss. 397 and 398 read with S. 402 the effect of the compromise would be to enable the company to continue its production. Since there were no such serious allegations in the petition as would justify the Tribunal in ignoring the compromise and continuing the enquiry an order in terms of the compromise has to be recorded. ——Ss. 397, 398 — Scope — Provisions are designed to confer powers upon Courts to pass suitable orders without necessity of winding up.

Sections 397 and 398 correspond to Section 153-C of the Companies Act of 1913. These Sections confer powers upon the Court to pass suitable orders, where the circumstances justify, to remove the oppressiveness or the matters complained of, without the necessity of winding up of the company where such winding up would unfairly and materially prejudice the interests of the company or any part of its members. After the enactment of Section 153-C, even where facts and circumstances exist for an order of winding up to be passed, the Court, taking into consideration the interests of the company and its members as a whole can pass an order for its management by the Court with a view of its being ultimately salvaged. The true scope of S. 153-C of 1913 Act is that where there is discrimination by the majority of the shareholders or by the majority of the directors to the detriment of the minority, so as to amount to oppressiveness and derogatory to the interests of the company the powers under the section can be exercised. The Court is also empowered under that section to impose upon the parties whatever settlement the Court considers just and equitable to remove the main allegation of oppression and though this discretion is unfettered, in every case the Court is not expected to find and impose a solution. Cases have gone to the extent of holding that the company can be ordered to purchase the minority's shares at a fair value if the facts in any particular case so justify it. 1958-3 All ER 689 and (S) AIR 1956 SC 213 and AIR 1960 Mad 338 and AIR 1961 Cal 448, Rel. on. (1965) 2 Andh WR 454: (1965) 2 Com LJ 234: AIR 1966 Andh Pra 226 (227) (Pt A) (Pr 12).

——S. 397 — Conditions to be satisfied for making an order under section.

In order that, the Court may make an order under S. 397 of the Act, the Court must be satisfied firstly, that the company's affairs are being conducted in a manner oppressive to any member or members, secondly, that the facts would justify the making of a winding up order, on the ground that it was just and equitable that the company should be wound up and, thirdly, that a winding up order would unfairly prejudice the applicant or applicants.

Held, on the facts of the case that the sale of a large number of shares belonging to the applicants J and his wife who held the majority of the shares in the company was made by the persons in management for an unreal and fictitious debt of J, that the sale was illegal, that there was no power of sale under the Articles and that the object of sale was to deprive J of his voting power, so that the present management may keep themselves in office, and that the company's affairs were being conducted in manner oppressive to J. Held, further, that the company was liable to be wound up on the ground that it was just and equitable to do so but it was not in the interests of the petitioners that the company should be wound up. It was against the fundamental principles of company law that the minority should carry on the management without any election, as provided for in the Act and the majority of shareholders should be kept out of management. Such an unnatural state of affairs was continuing in the Company ever since September 1954. Meetings were held by rival parties and different sets of Directors were declared to be elected in the different meetings. The legality of the present Board of Directors had been challenged with good reason and the company was being involved in ruinous litigation. Therefore, a case for interference under S. 397 was made out. ('64) 68 Cal WN 163.

——S. 397 (2) (a) and (b) — Scope and object — Court's satisfaction on both points essential — Powers and duty of Court.

Under S. 397 it is imperative that Court's opinion on both the points enumerated in Cls. (a) and (b) of sub-s. (2) must be formed in the affirmative before any order could be made under that section. If the Court is not satisfied on any one of those points no further question can arise under S. 397. 66 Cal WN 63 : (1962) 32 Com Cas 207 : AIR 1962 Cal 127 (129) (Pt B) (Pr 5) (DB).

——S. 397 — Acts of oppression must be proved to satisfaction of Court.

Under S. 397 the Court has to be satisfied that, there is oppression in conducting affairs of the company. The acts of oppression, therefore, have not only to be alleged with sufficient particulars but they must be proved also to the satisfaction of the Court. 66 Cal WN 63 : (1962) 32 Com Cas 207 : AIR 1962 Cal 127 (128) (Pt A) (Pr 4) (DB).

——Ss. 397 and 398 — Sections to be liberally interpreted.

Ss. 397 and 398, Companies Act, 1956, being designed to suppress an acknowledged mischief, they should receive liberal interpretation and the Court should give such construction as will advance the remedy. Applying that principle of interpretation the widest power may be inferred for the Court to interfere in the internal management of a Company with a view to putting an end to oppression or mismanagement on the part of controlling shareholders so as to advance the remedy and suppress the mischief. But no power can be inferred by the application of that principle of interpretation to set aside or interfere with past and concluded transactions between a Company and third parties which are no longer continuing wrongs, unless the sections by use of clear and unambiguous language confer such power on the Court. (1964) 1 Com LJ 326 : (1964) 34 Com Cas 777 : (1964) 5 Guj LR 804 : ILR (1964) Guj 752 : AIR 1965 Guj 96 (98, 99) (Pt A) (Prs 25, 26).

——Ss. 397 and 398 — Scope, object and interpretation of — Sections do not empower Court to set aside or interfere with past and concluded transactions between Company and third parties which are no longer continuing wrongs.

The language of Ss. 397 and 398 leaves no doubt as to the true intendment of the Legislature and it is transparent that the remedy provided by these Sections is of a preventive nature so as to bring to an end oppression or mismanagement on the part of controlling shareholders and not to allow its continuance to the detriment of the aggrieved shareholders of the company. The remedy is not intended to enable the aggrieved shareholders to set at naught what has already been done by controlling shareholders in the management of the affairs of the company. These sections do not confer any power on the Court to set aside or interfere with past and concluded transactions between a company and third parties which are no longer continuing wrongs. (1964) 1 Com LJ 326 : (1964) 34 Com Cas 777 : (1964) 5 Guj LR 804 : ILR (1964) Guj 752 : AIR 1965 Guj 96 (100) (Pt B) (Pr 27).

——Ss. 397 and 398 — Petition under — Resolution of Directors passed in absence of quorum and in contravention of Ss. 299 and 300 — If and when can be challenged.

The question whether a particular action of the Directors was within the limits of the law or was in contravention of any provision of law is not a proper subject-matter of inquiry in a petition under Section 397 or 398 of the Companies Act, 1956. If an action of the Directors is illegal or invalid, the Company or the shareholders may take appropriate action in a Court of law challenging the validity of such action, but a petition under Section 397 or 398 is not an appropriate remedy for the purpose. The only question with which the Court is concerned in a petition under Section 397 or 398 is whether the action of the Directors whether within the law or outside the law is oppressive to the minority shareholders or is prejudicial to the interests of the Company. It cannot be said that every action of the Directors which is in contravention of a provision of law must necessarily be prejudicial to the interests of the Company. These two represent different angles of view and one may exist without the other. Where the Court has come to the conclusion that the impugned resolution passed by the Board of Directors is not oppressive to the minority of share-holders or prejudicial to the interests of the Company it is not open to the petitioners in the petition to attack the validity of the resolution on the ground that it was passed by the Board of Directors without a quorum and in contravention of the provisions of Sections 299 and 300. (1964) 1 Comp LJ 326 : (1964) 34 Com Cas 777: (1964) 5 Guj LR 804: ILR (1964) Guj 752 : AIR 1965 Guj 96 (103, 104) (Pt G) (Pr 49).

——Ss. 397, 398, 543 — Petitions under S. 397 or 398 — Scope and purpose of — Maintainability— Application for compensation under S. 543 — Procedure.

The applications under Ss. 397 and 398 can be made only by members who are qualified to do so under S. 399, for S. 397 is designed to put an end to an oppressive management or oppressive conduct of the affairs of a company and S. 398, has been designed to put an end to the affairs of a company being conducted in a manner prejudicial to the interests of the company or person a change being made in the constitution of the company or its control which change is likely to lead to any such prejudicial management. The sections are not intended to deal with questions connected with the past management except in as far as such past management may indicate, that it is necessary to take steps for the prevention of future oppression of one section of shareholders by another or to prevent a prejudicial management or conduct of its affairs. In order to sustain a petition under S. 397, it is necessary therefore, for the Court to be satisfied on two points, viz., (i) that the Company's affairs are being conducted in a manner oppressive to any member or members thereof; and (ii) that winding up of the Company would unfairly prejudice such member or members, but, that, otherwise, the facts would justify the making of a winding up order on the ground that, it was just and equitable that the Company should be wound up.

Section 543, provides for an application for recovery of damages to be made if it appears in the course of proceedings under S. 397 or S. 398, that misfeasance, etc., has taken place in relation to a company. The application for compensation under S. 543, on the basis of malfeasance or misapplication must be preceded by appearance of evidence on the record of a petition under S. 397 and/or S. 398 and in the course of the proceedings therein. In order that such an application may be competently made, it is necessary that, at least some materials therefor must appear in the course of proceedings under S. 397 and/or S. 398. (1963) 2 Com LJ 89 : (1963) 4 Guj LR 911 : ILR (1963) Guj 865: AIR 1964 Guj 107 (110) (Pt A) (Pr 4).

——Ss. 397, 398, 543 — Scope and applicability of S. 543 — Proceedings under S. 543 should be by independent and fresh application.

Prima facie the enquiry under S. 398 has no connection with the enquiry under S. 543 (Schedule XI) at least in so far as the enquiry under the latter section is to be directed against the promoters and past officers of the Company. But, at the same time, it cannot be said that there is a complete divorce between the objects of Ss. 397 and/or 398 on the one hand and those of S. 543 (Schedule XI) on the other.

Section 543 has been designed with a view to provide a summary remedy to the creditors and shareholders of a Company which enables them to obtain an order for compelling the delinquent officers of the Company to contribute towards the funds and assets of the Company which they have illegally obtained during the course of their management or which have been lost as a result of such management. Under the general law of the land, a right to resort to such summary procedure is not given to any creditor or shareholder of the Company whilst the Company is in existence. That right is not an absolute or untrammelled right. The right is circumscribed or limited by the conditions mentioned in S. 543 (Schedule XI) and one of the conditions mentioned is that, before an application for examination of the person concerned and an order for compensation are made against him, prima facie evidence must appear against such concerned person in the course of a proceeding under S. 397 or 398. Therefore, a proceeding under S. 543 (Schedule XI), is an emanation from a proceeding under S. 397 or S. 398. All that an applicant under S. 543 (Schedule XI) has to satisfy, when presenting an application under it is that a case, for misfeasance has come to light in the course of a petition under S. 397 or S. 398.

In order to make an application under S. 543 (Schedule XI), it is not necessary that a proceeding under S. 397 or S. 398 should be subsisting. Petition under S. 398 need not be dismissed outright. Once a petition is brought on the file of a Court, it is entirely discretionary with the Court as to when the proceeding therein should terminate. (1963) 2 Com LJ 89 : (1963) 4 Guj LR 911 : ILR (1963) Guj 865 : AIR 1964 Guj 107 (112) (Pt B) (Pr 8).

——Ss. 397, 398, 543 — Proceeding under S. 397 or 398 — Recording of finding about existence of prima facie case of misfeasance — Duty of Court — Petition under S. 543 — Procedure.

Having regard to the fact that, the final decision on the question of examination and payment of compensation can only be made on an application by a creditor or a member, the intention of the Legislature cannot have been that in a petition designed under S. 397 or S. 398, the Court should undertake the responsibility of finding out whether any such prima facie case has or has not come to light. The scheme of S. 543 (Schedule XI), read in the light of the scheme of sections falling under Chapter VI appears to be that if evidence or materials come to be brought on the record of a proceeding under S. 397 or S. 398, then, it is open to a creditor or member of a Company to start proceeding against a delinquent director, etc., under S. 543, (Schedule XI). The Court is not only not bound, but it would be improper for the Court to record any finding about the existence of a prima facie case of misfeasance in a proceeding under S. 397 or S. 398. Thus, a fresh application is necessary for starting proceedings under S. 543, (Schedule XI). Petitions under Ss. 397 or 398 and 543, (Schedule XI) cannot be combined together or simultaneously made. The petition under the latter section must follow after a prima facie case has come into light in the course of the proceedings under the former sections. A Court dealing with a petition under S. 397 or S. 398, has nothing to do with the launching of proceedings under section 543 (Schedule XI), but it is a matter which is entirely within the scope of the right of a creditor or a member. The application under S. 543 (Schedule XI), must be by an independent application. (1963) 2 Com LJ 89 : (1963) 4 Guj LR 911 : ILR (1963) Guj 865 : AIR 1964 Guj 107 (112, 113) (Pt C) (Prs 9, 10, 11).

——S. 397 — Relief under — Conditions precedent — Purpose of section is not to rake up past.

For relief under S. 397 petitioners have to make out that, the affairs of the company were being conducted in a manner oppressive to them and, further, that, the facts justify the making of a winding up order on the ground that it was just and equitable. The purpose of this section is not so much to rake up the past as to redeem the future. (1958) 3 All ER 689, Relied on. A conduct is oppressive if it is "burdensome, harsh and wrongful". (1958) 3 All ER 66 (71), Relied on.

Even on the assumption that the petitioners had successfully proved the misconduct of the directors during the earlier three years of the company's incorporation, that would not furnish a justification for the winding up of the company for "just and equitable" reasons; (1956) 1 Mad LJ (SC) 95; 1956 SCJ 218: AIR 1956 SC 213, Rel. on. (1963) 33 Com Cas 1029: AIR 1962 Punj 23 (26, 27) (Pr 10).

Both conditions laid down in Cls. (a) and (b) of S. 397 (2) must co-exist before it is competent for a Court to grant relief under S. 397. ——S. 397 — Conditions for granting relief under section — Principles regarding winding up order under just and equitable clause — Principles regarding dissolution of partnership — Applicability — Partnership Act (1932), S. 44.

The Court can only act under S. 397, Companies Act on being satisfied of three matters:— (i) that the company's affairs are being conducted in a manner oppressive to some part of the members (including the petitioner); (ii) that to wind-up the company would unfairly prejudice that part of the members; and (iii) that otherwise the facts would justify the making of a winding-up order under the 'just and equitable' clause. The principle is that, if there is persistent violation of the regulations and statute and an appeal to the general body is not likely to put an end to them on account of the fact that, those responsible for the violations are in control, then it will be just and equitable to wind-up the Company. Generally such a situation can only arise when those in control depart from the standard of fair dealing. In other words, if the first two conditions are satisfied then the third must in most cases follow as a corollary. The reasoning which has led to the deduction of the above principle is equally applicable to companies of all types, public or private, big or small. Where the company—whether public or private—is like a partnership, principles applicable to dissolution of partnership are applicable.

Held, on the facts and circumstances of the case that the affairs of the Company were being conducted in a manner oppressive to the petitioner within the meaning of S. 397 and he was entitled to appropriate reliefs under that section. ILR (1964) 14 Raj 135.

——Ss. 397 and 398 — Composite application under, is competent — Companies (Court) Rules (1959), Rr. 11, 88 — Scope.

A composite application under Ss. 397 and 398, on allegations that the affairs of the company were so managed as to be prejudicial to the company and also oppressive to the minority share-holders, is competent. The fact that in the present Act the subject-matters have been separated into two separate sections while originally in the repealed Act of 1913, both the subject-matters were contained in one section, namely S. 153-C of of the old Act does not necessarily mean that the rights under the two are completely separate and so conflicting that they cannot be combined in a single petition. Various provisions of the Act, such as Ss. 399, 402 and 403 show that the reliefs available under S. 397 or 398 are the same.

R. 11 of the Companies (Court) Rules, also would appear not necessarily to intend that relief under Ss. 397 and 398 must necessarily be by separate petitions. That rule is intended merely to enumerate in what cases petitions have to be filed and in what cases Judge's summons would be sufficient. In many cases petition is likely to be made either under S. 397 or S. 398. It is for this reason that, they have been separately itemised in the rules. R. 88 also suggests that there is a great deal of similarity between the two. The mere fact that, the two matters are separated in the Companies Act in the manner it is done and that R. 11 enumerates as to in what matters petitions are necessary does not amount to the expression "save as provided by the Act or by these rules" referred to in R. 6. Further, O. 2, R. 3, Civil P. C. permits a plaintiff to unite in the same suit several causes of action against the same defendant or defendants jointly. It cannot, therefore, be held that the applicant is not entitled to join the two causes of action in one petition. The tendency to technicality by the Courts is to be deprecated and it is the substance that counts and must take precedence over form. Some rules are vital and go to the very root of the matter and cannot be broken; others are merely directory and breach of them can be overlooked provided there was substantial compliance with the rules read as a whole and no prejudice was caused. AIR 1956 SC 140, Rel. on.

Thus, though a petition under Ss. 397 and 398 of the Companies Act does not contain a schedule to be appended to it as required by form Nos. 43 and 44 of App. IV of the Companies (Courts) Rules, all the particulars which are intended to be furnished in the shape of a schedule to the petition, are to be found in the consent letters annexed to the petition, it is a substantial compliance with the requirement of the Forms. (1965) 1 Com LJ 35: (1965) 35 Com Cas 187: 69 Cal WN 137.

It is now well established that if an applicant before the Court wants the Court to rely upon charges of fraud and other misconduct and investigate them, he must give particulars. Mere vague allegations of fraud and other misconduct would not be enough, and the Court should decline to embark upon an enquiry into vague charges of fraud and misconduct.

If a minority group of shareholders has not in in its possession all the particulars of fraud or other misconduct, it should not expect the Court to make any order in its favour after making a rambling enquiry into vague and indefinite charges of fraud made in a petition under Ss. 397 and 398 of the Act. Merely because the minority group of shareholders generally has not got in its possession all the particulars of fraud or other misconduct, it is not excused or exonerated from giving particulars of fraud or other alleged acts of misappropriation or other misconduct. (1965) 1 Com LJ 35: (1965) 35 Com Cas 187: 69 Cal WN 137.

It is not only in case of fraud, but in case of all other allegations relating to mismanagement, misappropriation or other improper conduct with which a party is charged in applications under Ss. 397 and 398 full particulars must be set out in order to enable the party charged to understand what he is charged with, and also to enable him to answer such charges. If vague and general charges are made without giving any particular or setting out any material facts, the Court should ignore such charges and not proceed to investigate them. ——Ss. 397, 398 — Application under — Verification, how to be made—Civil P. C. (1908), O. 19, R. 3.

An application under sections 397 and 398 is not an interlocutory application. The matter is finally disposed of by the order made on the application itself. Nothing remains outstanding, unless orders are made keeping certain matters outstanding. The application is disposed of on the basis of the averments in the pleadings, unless the matter is directed to be tried on evidence. The pleadings in the matter, including the petition and the affidavits, are to be treated as evidence, and that being so, the rules of evidence must be strictly adhered to. The averments in the petition and in the affidavits which are verified as based on information are by their very nature heresay evidence. And if such averments are the foundation of the case made out by the petitioner, or the foundation of the defence made out by the respondents, the Court should not rely or act upon the same. If the averments in the pleadings are such, that but for them, an order cannot be made, persons who have personal knowledge of the facts stated must come forward and put what they have to say on affidavits. If other persons having no personal knowledge of the facts are set up to verify facts stated in petitions or affidavits, as being based on information supplied and believed to be true, the averments so verified cannot be relied on by the Court. In the petition and affidavits filed in proceedings under sections 397 and 398, the provisions of Order 19, Rule 3 sub-rule (1) Civil P. C., must be strictly complied with, when serious charges of fraud, collusion, mismanagement, misappropriation and misapplication of funds, violations of the provisions of the Companies Act or other similar charges are made or denied. Mere verification on the basis of Form No. 3 in Appendix IV of the Act in cases where charges, such as those mentioned above, have been made, is not enough. The maintainability of a petition under Ss. 397, 398 and 402 of the Companies Act, or in the alternative under S. 433 for the winding of the company, has to be decided on the basis of the facts as they are at the time of its presentation and any events subsequent thereto cannot affect its maintainability.

The validity of the petition must be judged on the facts as they are at the time of its presentation; a petition which is valid when presented cannot cease to be maintainable by reason of events subsequent to the presentation thereof. Neither the right of the applicant to proceed with the application nor the jurisdiction of Court to dispose of it on its own merits can be affected by events happening subsequent to the presentation of the petition.

Where a petition was originally and validly presented by four persons under Ss. 397, 398 and 402 or in the alternative under S. 433, and the petitioners were competent to present the same under S. 399 of the Act, but subsequently three of the applicants transfer their shares to one of the respondents and cease to be shareholders of the company and withdraw from the petition, it cannot be held that the petition ceases to be maintainable and that the remaining petitioner is not entitled to insist on proceeding with the petition which was perfectly competent and valid when presented, merely because three of the petitioners are alleged to have been satisfied that the affairs of the company were being properly conducted and have withdrawn from the petition, it cannot be said that the insistence on the continuance and prosecution of the petition is an abuse of the process of the Court which must be prevented by the Court under its inherent powers by dismissing the petition. ——Ss. 397, 398, 399 — Consent of shareholders under S. 399 — Consent must be to take an action under Ss. 397 and 398—Actual petition need not be before the shareholders.

S. 399 does not require that the consenting members should have the petition before them before they give their consent. It is enough if the consenting members had considered the question of a petition being moved under S. 397 and section 398. It was, therefore, not necessary to have the petition prepared in advance of the consent. (1965) 1 Com LJ 35 : (1965) 35 Com Cas 187 : 69 Cal WN 137.

So far as a company is concerned, it is bound to recognise as share-holders, parties whose names appear in the share register of the company, the claims made by the members of the joint family or by any other person notwithstanding. The Companies Act does not recognise the claims to ownership of any party to the shares of the company other than the one who is registered in the share-register of the company. It may be that the members of the joint family are beneficial owners of the shares, but the company cannot take notice of such claims to beneficial ownership. Moreover, where suits are pending in the Court regarding title to the shares, until those suits are disposed of, the Court, in exercising its jurisdiction under the Companies Act, cannot recognise the claims to title to the shares of any person, other than those whose names are registered in the books of the company. It cannot, therefore, be held, that no order can be made on the application under Ss. 397 and 398 because the real owners of the shares are the members of the joint family and the applicants are not the owners of the shares which are registered in their names.

Apart altogether, from the charges of mismanagement, misapplication of funds, misappropriation, fraud and collusion, a small minority of share-holders cannot be allowed to control the affairs of the company completely ignoring the wishes of the majority of share holders according to the share-register of the company. In the circumstances it must be held that the affairs of the company are being conducted in a manner oppressive to such majority. (1964) 1 Com LJ 301 : (1964) 34 Com Cas 731 : 68 Cal WN 884.

——Ss. 397, 398, 399 — Companies (Court) Rules (1959), R. 88 — Form Nos. 43, 44 — Application under Ss. 397 and 398 — Interference at the instance of majority group — Wrongful and ultra vires acts of minority — Company's interest seriously prejudiced — Court will make appropriate orders at instance of majority.

Although it can be contended that an application under S. 397 must be by a minority, the same argument cannot apply, on the basis of the forms prescribed, to an application under section 398. It is true that, in the case of companies functioning normally under the doctrine of majority rule, it is the oppressed minority who comes to Court for relief. The majority seldom, if ever, has the occasion to come to Court for relief, because it can always have things done in its own way. But there may be cases, when the real majority is rendered ineffective by the wrongful acts and manoeuvres of a minority. The situation may be such, that remedy cannot be obtained by the operation of the machinery in the domestic forum. It cannot be said that even in such cases the Court is powerless to intervene and provide a remedy in exercise of its jurisdiction under S. 397 and S. 398. The High Court has not only the jurisdiction, but it is the duty of this Court to intervene. The sections nowhere, prescribe that the applications under the two sections can be made only by a minority group. Nor do they prescribe that a majority group can under no circumstances come to Court for redress. Section 399 of the Act lays down conditions to ensure that the application is made or supported by a minimum number. But while the minimum has been fixed by section 399 there is nothing about the maximum.

The possibility of a protracted litigation in which the company should be a party, between rival groups of Directors is itself a matter of serious prejudice to the company and is one of the major considerations for which the High Court should exercise its powers under Ss. 397 and 398. The purpose and object of the sections is to put an end to acts of oppression and mismanagement promptly and speedily rather than allow the parties and the company to be involved in a costly and protracted litigation. If the facts justify interference by the Court in exercise of its powers under the two sections and if the conditions of the two sections are fulfilled the Court ought not to relegate the parties to a series of protracted and costly litigations. Such litigation is a mischief which is bound to be prejudicial to the interest of the company, to prevent which S. 398 has been brought into existence, and the Court ought not to allow such litigation, if it can be stopped, in exercise of its powers under the two sections. If the persons who wish to file such a petition are not shown as members in the Register of the Company, rightly or wrongly, they must first have the register rectified before they can bring a petition. Further, if the application of the petitioners for rectification of the register has been already dismissed by the District Judge, they cannot, instead of filing a suit to establish their right, seek the same relief under the guise of an application under Ss. 397 and 398 of the Act. 62 Punj LR 553: (1961) 31 Com Cas 122: AIR 1960 Punj 427 (427, 428) (Pr 7).

4. Grounds for relief.

——S. 397 — Scope and applicability — Oppression by majority — Company controlled by two groups of shareholders, namely, A and B — Company in financial troubles — C supplying finance on terms that he be allotted number of shares equal to the number held by A and B — Company not party to agreement — Agreement not made part of Articles of Association — Fresh issue of shares — Agreement is not binding in case of fresh issue — New shares can be allotted by resolution at general meeting of share-holders to non-existing share-holders who are not benamidars or stooges of A and B — No case of oppression.

Section 397 gives a right to members of a company who comply with the conditions of S. 399 to apply to the Court for relief under S. 402 of the Act or such other reliefs as may be suitable in the circumstances of the case, if the affairs of a company are being conducted in a manner oppressive to any member or members including any one or more of those applying. The Court, then has power to make such orders under S. 397 read with S. 402 as it thinks fit, if it comes to the conclusion that the affairs of the company are being conducted in a manner oppressive to any member or members and that to wind up the company would unfairly prejudice such member or members, but that otherwise the facts might justify the making of a winding up order on the ground that it was just and equitable that the company should be wound up. It is left to Courts to decide on the facts of each case whether there is such oppression as calls for action under this section.

The question in each case is whether the conduct of the affairs of a company by the majority share-holders was oppressive to the minority share-holders and that depends upon the facts proved in a particular case. It is not enough to show that there is just and equitable cause for winding up the company though that must be shown as preliminary to the application of S. 397. It must further be shown that the conduct of the majority share-holders was oppressive to the minority as members. There must be continuous acts on the part of the majority share-holders, continuing upto the date of petition, showing that the affairs of the company were being conducted is a manner oppressive to some part of the members. AIR 1952 SC 49 & AIR 1954 SC 381 and (1958) 3 All ER 66 and (1958) 3 All ER 689, Relied on. Mere loss of confidence between groups of share-holders would not come within S. 397 unless it be shown that this lack of confidence sprang from a desire to oppress the minority in the management of the Company's affairs.

The share-holders of a public limited company originally consisted mainly of two groups A and B. Later on to meet the financial difficulties of the Company, C agreed to supply finances on terms that he be allotted shares equal to those held by A and B group after increasing the share capital. The Company was not a party to the agreement. Nor were the Articles of Association amended in order to incorporate the agreement. Later on the Company converted itself into a public limited company in order to obtain advances from Industrial Finance Corporation. At this time though the Articles of Association were amended, the agreement was not incorporated therein. After the conversion, fresh shares were issued. In the meeting of the Board of Directors, C suggested that the new shares should be issued in accordance with S. 81 to the existing share-holders in proportion to the shares held by them, while A & B suggested that they should be offered privately to those who were not share-holders, for A & B apprehended that if they were allotted to existing share-holders C would purchase most of the shares and thus get controlling hand over the affairs of the company they themselves being not in position to purchase them. The suggestion of A & B was accepted at the general meeting and the new shares were sold to outsiders who were neither benamidars nor stooges of A and B. C applied under S. 397, on the ground of oppression by the majority:

Held (1) that the agreement between A, B & C did not mean that if in future there was any increase in capital that will be shared equally by the three. (2) The Company, much less the public limited company when it was formed, not being a party to the agreement was not bound by it. Consequently it was open to the public company in its general meeting to decide that new shares should not be issued to the existing share-holders but to others privately. The resolution was in accordance with law as it stood when it was passed. This did not mean oppression of minority share-holders.

(On facts) If C had got the entire new issue because of the inability of A and B groups to take up their two-thirds shares, the majority control would have vested in one group, i.e., C. But the action of the majority share-holders in issuing new shares to others and not to the existing share-holders brought about a position where, after the issue of new shares even A and B groups had no longer a majority and they had to carry the holders of the new shares with them in order to carry on the work of the Company. The new holders were not the stooges and benamidars of A and B groups and, therefore, the Company could not be said to be dominated by any group. The fact that A and B groups might be able to get the support of the holders of new shares did not necessarily mean oppression of C for the new share-holders might support A and B groups on the ground that such support would be for the benefit of the Company. ——Ss. 397, 398 — Oppression and mismanagement — Shares bequeathed under a will —Unreasonable conduct of directors in refusing to effect transfer owing to private disputes — Application for removal of director and for appointment of a committee of shareholders to take over management made by shareholders entitled to shares under the will — Powers of Court — Existence of factors for winding-up but order would be prejudicial to part of members — Absolute discretion to pass suitable orders.

One of the directors of the company died leaving behind a will bequeathing the shares in the company to his second wife and sons who were already the shareholders of the company, and petitioners herein. The directors on account of their private dispute with the petitioners, acting in a high-handed manner and unreasonably, refused to transfer a part of the shares bequeathed under the will, while transferring some shares in favour of them as provided under the will. They made certain improper transfers also. The petitioners applied under Ss. 397 and 398 of the Companies Act of 1956 for removal of one of the directors from the Board, and for the appointment of a committee of shareholders to manage the affairs of the company,

Held, the proper order to make, in the circumstances, was to direct the directors of the company to transfer the shares to the petitioners in accordance with the terms of the will. Sections 397 and 398 of the Companies Act of 1956, corresponding to S. 210 of the English Act of 1948 and S. 153-C of the Indian Companies Act of 1913, are designed to confer upon the Court powers to pass suitable orders where the circumstances justify, to remove the oppression or the matters complained of, without the necessity of winding-up of the company where such winding-up would unfairly and materially prejudice the interests of the company or any part of its members. Where it is just and equitable, the Court has, in circumstances which justify a winding-up, power to make such orders as it thinks fit. The Court has also power under these sections to impose upon the parties whatever settlement the Court considers just and equitable to remove the main allegations of oppression, which discretion is unfettered.

Held on facts, the directors, due to private disputes with the petitioners had acted in a high-handed and unreasonable manner in refusing to effect the transfer. They had also transferred shares irregularly and contrary to law. The conduct of the directors amounted to oppression, inasmuch as it will involve violation of the conditions of fair play on which every shareholder who entrusts his money to the company is entitled to rely. The proper order to make was to direct the transfer of shares in the names of the petitioners. There was no justification for the appointment of a committee of shareholders to manage the affairs of the company. ——Ss. 397, 398, 402—Oppression and mismanagement — Application for relief — Oppression by company essential — Oppression by independent party outside the scope — Rights against third parties — Extent of — Inference of oppression from inaction or passive conduct — Investigation of title claimed adversely against the company by stranger — Not within the scope of the provisions.

Held, the application under Ss. 397 and 398 is not sustainable. Ss. 397 and 398 of the Indian Companies Act of 1956 are based upon S. 210 of the English Companies Act of 1948 and the principle embodied therein constitutes an exception to the rule laid down in (1843) 2 Hare 461 which lays down the sanctity of the majority rule. A minority which is oppressed by the majority can get relief without winding up of the company, but the oppression must be by the company itself. Oppression by an independent person is not within the scope of the sections. The oppression need not always consist of active conduct. It may also be deduced from inaction or passive conduct. Section 402 of the Act of 1956 has made express provisions, where the right of third parties can be affected. For example, certain agreements can be set aside, between the company and third parties in the case of fraudulent preferences. Since specific instances have been set out in S. 402, it cannot be said that it was contemplated that the rights of strangers could be affected under any circumstances or that the rule is of universal application. An applicant under the sections would have to show that there were grounds, for which it was just and equitable that the company should be wound up, that the majority in the company was oppressing the minority and that such oppression was continuous, harsh and wrongful and affecting the proprietary interests of the applicant, and lastly that the winding-up of the company could unfairly prejudice the applicant.

Held on facts, there is no evidence at all to sustain the application made under Ss. 397 and 398. On the other hand the evidence showed that the owner of the business, is really behind the proceedings to achieve an indirect purpose of getting back the business under the guise of the application. Such an application cannot be transformed into a suit for title adjudicating the title of a third party, claiming adversely to the company. The grounds on which the Court can interfere by an order either under S. 397 or under S. 398 are well defined. But the pendency of criminal proceedings against the directors or of investigation by the police into offences of a criminal nature, and even their conviction for a criminal offence, should not induce the Court to make an order under S. 397 and S. 398 of the Act. (1965) 1 Com LJ 35: (1965) 35 Com Cas 187: 69 Cal WN 137.

Absence of a valid Board or want of delegation of authority from a valid Board to the managing director without anything more, does not create a situation in which the Court should exercise its powers under S. 397 or S. 398. Such difficulties are easily resolved by calling a general meeting of the company. If it is a matter of genuine grievance of the applicants by reason of an order of Court restraning them to hold a general meeting it is for them to take steps to obtain suitable modifications in the order of the Court, so that a general meeting may be held and a director appointed. In such circumstances, there is no question of superseding the Board which is purporting to function as a Board of Directors of the company and appointing a special Officer to take over the duties of the Board. (1965) 1 Com LJ 35: (1965) 35 Com Cas 187: 69 Cal WN 137.

——Ss. 397, 398 — Single wrongful act by director — Whether sufficient for order under Ss. 397 and 398.

It was alleged in the petition that the petitioner had pledged 73,225 shares with the Punjab National Bank Ltd., to secure its overdraft account. On September 30, 1959 Director S withdrew certain sum from the Company's account and out of the sum paid Rs. 5,05,000 to the Punjab National Bank Ltd. and obtained delivery of 73,225 shares. In his affidavit in opposition S admitted that the shares were taken delivery of by him from the Punjab National Bank Ltd., but he contended that the shares belonged to the joint family. He however, denied the allegation of wrongful and fraudulent withdrawal of the sum.

Held, that conduct of S in withdrawing the money was wrongful as the Board had not authorised him to withdraw the money and utilise the same in paying off the debt due from the petitioner to the Punjab National Bank Ltd. There was no doubt that his purpose and object were to secure possession of the shares and get them registered in the names of himself and his nominees. Such conduct in company administration must be met with unequivocal censure from the Court. But a charge of this nature was not enough for the purposes of obtaining an order for investigating the company's affairs under Ss. 397 & 398. It was a single wrongful act by a Director of the company and it was open to the company to proceed against him by an action at law for recovery of the money and for such other reliefs to which it might be entitled. Nor was the act of such a nature as to be productive of a continuous course of oppression. This charge by itself would not justify an order under Ss. 397 and 398. (1964) 1 Com LJ 301: (1964) 34 Com Cas 731: 68 Cal WN 884.

——Ss. 397 and 398 — Infringement of shareholder's right qua director — Can be the foundation for application under the sections.

The right to appoint a Director or be appointed a Director is a very valuable right of a shareholder and when this right is infringed, his right qua shareholder is also affected. The shareholder in such a case is entitled to apply under S. 397 of the Act, complaining that the affairs of the company are being conducted in a manner oppressive to himself. Such an act may also be prejudicial to the interest of the company so that the case would also be covered by the provisions of S. 398 of the Act. ('64) 68 Cal WN 163.

——S. 397 — Oppressive act need not be continuous.

In order to attract Section 397 of the Act, the oppressive act complained of need not be wrongful conduct which continues over a period of time. The law does not contemplate that a petitioner who is otherwise entitled to relief under this section must be able to show that there has been continuous course of oppressive conduct over a period of time before he can obtain relief under this section. It is not possible for the Court to lay down any standard with regard to the period of oppression, before which it is to be held that the party cannot come to Court. If the Court is satisfied that the conduct arising from single wrongful act is such, that its effect will be a continuous course of oppression and there is no prospect of remedying the situation by the voluntary act of the party responsible for the wrongful act, the High Court is entitled to interfere by appropriate order under S. 397 of the Act. (1964) 34 Com Cas 510 : 68 Cal WN 118.

Denial of access to or inspection of the books of account of the company to the shareholder is not an act of oppression within the meaning of S. 397. The fact that the petitioner had more than thirty per cent of the shares cannot be a ground to give such access and inspection. Further, one single and solitary instance of any act does not seem to answer the oppressive continuity of conducting the affairs of the company implicit in the expression "the affairs are being conducted." Similarly, the fact that dividend which is much below the actual profits earned by the company has been declared, cannot be an act of oppression under S. 397. 66 Cal WN 63: (1962) 32 Com Cas 207: AIR 1962 Cal 127 (130) (Pt C) (Pr 12) (DB).

Held, in the circumstances of the case that this was a case where the powers under Ss. 397, 398 and 402 should be justly invoked. There had been oppression of the minority shareholders of the company and also the affairs of the company had been conducted in a manner oppressive and prejudicial to the interest of the company. By the resolutions passed at the meetings held in 1959 the so-called Directors who had the majority voting power attempted to force the applicants and the minority shareholders to invest their money in a different kind of business against their will. The applicants and its supporters who constituted the minority shareholders invested their money in a Life Insurance business with all its safeguards and statutory protection. But they were being forced to invest where there would be no such protection or safeguard. The remedy under S. 397 is not limited to cases where the company is still in active business. The object of the remedy is to bring to an end the matters complained of, that is 'oppression', and this can be done even though the business of the company has been brought to a standstill. The same reasonings apply also to cases falling under S. 398. (1882) 20 Ch. D 151, (1882) 20 Ch. D 169, 1924 AC 783 and (1958) 3 All ER 71 : (1958) 3 WLR 404, Rel. on.

Under S. 3 of the Life Insurance (Emergency Provisions) Ordinance No. 1 of 1956 only the management of the controlled business of the company vested in the Central Government. The company as a separate legal entity remained as before with all its rights and obligations and the Directors remained still bound to call the annual general meeting of the company in terms of S. 166 of the Companies Act, and lay before the meeting the balance-sheet for year ending 1955. A Director who was due to retire by rotation at the annual general meeting vacated his office at the latest on the last date on which that annual general meeting could have been called as required by S. 166 of the Companies Act, 1956 and cannot continue in office thereafter on the ground that the meetin has not in fact been called. (1961) 31 Com Cas 193 : 65 Cal WN 68 : AIR 1961 Cal 443 (445, 447, 448, 452, 453) (Prs 9, 28, 37, 51, 52, 53, 54).

——Ss. 397 and 398 — Scope and object of — Oppression of minority — Power of Court.

Sections 397 and 398 of the Indian Companies Act, 1956, deal with the powers of the Court and of the Central Government to deal with cases of oppression of the minority or mismanagement. They are intended to avoid winding up, if possible, and keep the company going. It was also intended that, the Court should have power to impose upon the parties whatever settlement the Court considers just and equitable.

As regards the meaning of oppression in this context, the essence of the matter was that the conduct complained of should at the lowest involve a visible departure from the standards of fair dealing, and a violation of the conditions of fair play on which every shareholder who entrusts his money to a company is entitled to rely. In other words, the complaining shareholders must be under a burden which is unjust or harsh or tyrannical. A persistent and persisting course of unjust conduct must be shown.

If the allegations on which the petition was filed could be sustained, the company could be ordered to purchase the minority's shares at a fair value. 1954 SC 381 (Scottish Case), Rel. on. AIR 1960 Mad 338 (339, 340, 341) (Prs 10, 14, 15, 15-A).

——Ss. 397, 433 (f) —Oppression of minority — Prevention of — Remedy under S. 397 — When available — Mere loss of confidence amongst different groups of shareholders due to non-distribution of new shares to existing shareholders — No oppression of minority — Case under S. 397 not made out.

The remedy under S. 397, alternative to the petition for compulsory winding up order under the just and equitable provision under S. 433 (f), is available under two conditions: (i) The affairs of the company are conducted in manner oppressive to some part of the members, and (ii) the Court must find a case for winding up order under the just and equitable clause but such winding up would unfairly prejudice the members. The words 'being conducted in a manner oppressive' in S. 397 (1), invite attention not to events in isolation but to events considered as a part of consecutive story.

The company in respect of which an application under S. 397 was filed, was a large public company. Before it was converted into a public company there was an oral agreement between the petitioner and the respondents as to the proportion in shareholding and other matters. After the conversion, new shares were issued to the public to obtain more capital in accordance with the amended articles of association and the resolution of the company. Non-distribution of new shares to the petitioner in proportion to the existing shareholdings had led to lack of confidence and private animosity between the majority group and the minority group in the matter of policy and administration of the Company, but the Directors of the Company concerned with the management of the affairs could not be charged with fraud, misfeasance or misconduct towards any part of its members. There were no other facts constituting a part of a consecutive story leading to oppression, excepting the single fact that the new shares were not distributed amongst the shareholders in proportion to their existing shareholdings.

Held, that, even if it could be characterised as amounting to an act of oppression, it did not amount to a continuing and continuous process of oppression of the minority. The petitioner had failed to make out a case under S. 397. (1964) 1 Comp LJ 117 : AIR 1963 Orissa 189 (208, 209) (Pt L) (Prs 33, 34) (DB).

The word 'oppression' in S. 397 is to be construed in the ordinary dictionary meaning, viz., burdensome, harsh and wrongful. Section 397 warrants the Court in looking at the business realities of a situation and does not confine them to a narrow legalistic view. The section invites attention, not to events considered in isolation, but to events considered as part of the consecutive story; in considering whether the way in which the majority group conducted the Company's affairs, was oppressive, although naturally attention must be paid to the various incidents of which the petitioner complains, taking these incidents by themselves, the Court is concerned really to consider the history of the matter as a whole and to see whether a course of conduct by the majority groups has been established which constitutes an oppression of the other shareholders. 5. Powers of Court.

——Ss. 397, 398 — Application under — Not analogous to winding up petition — Applicants can rely on supporting affidavits but not on other oral or documentary evidence.

Sections 397 and 398 have conferred upon the Court a special jurisdiction which the Court would not have possessed, but for these two sections. The analogy of a winding up petition cannot and should not be applied to the petition under these sections. In a winding up petition the Court should look at the petition itself and nothing else. But in an application under S. 397 and S. 398, the petitioner can rely upon supporting affidavits from persons having personal knowledge of the allegations of oppression, mismanagement, misconduct or other acts prejudicial to the interest of the company, if the petitioner has no personal knowledge himself. 68 CWN 884, Ref. to.

But if the petition and other supporting affidavits filed along with it, do not disclose sufficient grounds to fulfil the requirement of S. 397 and S. 398, the Court should not look into other evidence either oral or documentary, or in the shape of affidavits affirmed subsequently. The petitioner must in his petition, and the supporting affidavits, if any, make out a case for relief. If he has failed to do so, the defect cannot be cured, nor the lacuna filled up, by other evidence, oral or documentary. Held, on facts, (1) the order made on February 7, 1964 approving the draft agreement for lease and directing the special officer to execute the same could not be set aside as it was an order which had been completed and filed and had been acted upon by the parties and effect had been given to it; (2) that even if the order of February 7, 1964, was recalled, the order of November 22, 1963 of the High Court by which directions were given to invite offers for lease of the collieries would still remain in force and be binding upon the Special Officer and all other parties; (3) that the order of February 7, 1964, was made for the purpose of giving effect to, and carrying out the order made on November 22, 1963. It, however, appeared that, the agreement which had been entered into by the Special Officer with B who made the offer for lease, contravened some of the terms of the said Act and the Rules, in so far as it transferred an interest in the colliery to B and conferred upon him the right to exploit the collieries and also to deal with the products thereof. To that extent in any event, the agreement was in contravention of the provisions of the Act and the Rules; (4) while it was true that the Special Officer was appointed by the Court, he was by no means an Officer of the Court as in the case of a Receiver exercising his powers under O. 40, of the Code of Civil Procedure. The Special Officer represented the Board of Directors of the company which had been superseded; (5) that the orders made by the Court in exercise of its powers under Ss. 397 and 398 of the Companies Act, 1956, could not override the provisions in other statutes; (6) that the powers of the Court to make interim orders in applications under Ss. 397 and 398 were wide and ample. The orders in this case proposed to be made were interim orders for conducting the company's affairs by the Special Officer appointed by the Court. Hence, the Court had the power to make appropriate orders having regard to the events that had happened. ('64) 69 Cal WN 18.

——Ss. 397, 398 — Exercise of power by Court under — Court to proceed cautiously before ordering investigation.

Apart from the powers of the Court under sections 397 and 398, sections 235, 236, 237, 239, 240 and 241 deal with the question of investigation of the company's affairs by the Central Government and also with matters connected therewith. No doubt the Court has been given the power to make any order for the purpose of bringing to an end the matters complained of or for the purpose of preventing the same. Indeed, the powers of the Court are very wide, but this amplitude of powers demands circumspection in their exercise.

In exercising its powers to make an order for investigation under sections 397 and 398 the Court should proceed cautiously, before any order for investigation is made on the charges. The management of the Company is vested in its Board of Directors. There may be many and good reasons for the failure of the Company to earn profits. Similarly there may be valid and good reasons for increase in the costs of manufacture and administration of the company. But such allegations are not enough to induce the Court to make an order for investigation under sections 397 and 398. It is no part of the duty of the Court to lay down business and trading policy of the Company or to regulate control and check its day to day administration. Charges that inferior quality jute was procured, that there had been abnormal rise in a stores consumption, salary and wages, and that the employees of the Company are being intimidated are by no means enough for the purpose of an investigation into the affairs of the Company. If the Directors, in the exercise of the discretion vested in them, decide to dispose of old and worn-out machinery or jute wastes, the Court should not interfere with the exercise of such discretion. These are matters to be dealt with by the company in its domestic forum. The machinery provided by sections 397 and 398 cannot be made use of, for agitating such charges of irregularity, assuming them to be true. (1964) 1 Com LJ 301 : (1964) 34 Com Cas 731 : 68 Cal WN 884.

——Ss. 397, 398, 402 and 403 — Disputes between members and mismanagement and loss — Application to Court for relief — Appointment of special officer superseding Board of Directors and vesting all powers of Board in special Officer — Latter, if officer of Court — Powers and position of officer — Power of Court to pass interim orders pending final orders — Consent order — Force of — Order made with consent of all parties perfected and filed and acted upon — Jurisdiction of Court to set aside or vacate — Remedy of party feeling aggrieved — Application or suit — Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), sections 105 and 107 — Agreement of lease — Construction — If present demise or only executory agreement — Tests.

Where, on account of disputes arising between the members of a company, the affairs of the Company are not properly conducted and the liabilities of the company keep on mounting from year to year, and on an application made to the Court under sections 397, 398 and 402, the Court appoints a Special Officer, superseding the Board of Directors and vesting all the powers and functions of the Board in the Special Officer, the latter cannot be regarded as an Officer of Court, as in the case of a Receiver, and his acts are not the acts of the Court appointing him. He only represents the Board of Directors of the Company which has been superseded. Nor can the Court make any orders by way of directions in exercise of powers under sections 397 and 398, which would contravene or override the provisions of other statutes. When the application under sections 397 and 398 is still pending, the Court has power under section 403 to make any interim order which it thinks fit, for regulating the conduct of the Company's affairs on such terms as appear to the Court to be just and equitable. The powers of the Court to make such orders are wide and ample and indeed the Court should make appropriate orders, having regard to the circumstances of the case.

When such an order has been made by the Court upon the consent of the parties before it, given after deliberation and after taking legal advice and the order has been completed, perfected and filed and acted upon by the parties, the order cannot be revoked, recalled or cancelled at the instance of one of the parties who feels aggrieved subsequently and pleads that the consent was given under a mistake and the order is one which violates and offends against the provisions of some other statute. But, if it appears that the parties had misled themselves in giving their consent to the terms and scope of an agreement entered into by the Special Officer in pursuance of the orders of the Court sanctioning it, and that there was misapprehension regarding the rights that were being conferred on the other party to the agreement under its terms, the Court has power to give relief to the parties affected, and will in exercise of its powers suspend further operation of the agreement entered into. To the extent to which the parties to the agreement have acted upon it and given effect to the terms thereof, they would be entitled to the benefits conferred upon them and the protection provided thereunder in respect of their rights, obligations, claims and demands. A party who has, acting upon the agreement, invested large sums of money in giving effect to it and has acted to his detriment and changed his position should be given full protection. Whether an agreement of lease is a present demise or not depends upon the intention of the parties which has to be gathered from the language in which the agreement is couched. An instrument is usually construed as a lease if it contains words of present demise, but it should be construed as an executory agreement notwithstanding that it contains words of present demise when certain things have to be done by the lessor. or by the lessee before the lease is granted. Once an order is drawn up, completed and filed, the Judge passing the order ceases to have any jurisdiction over the matter and cannot recall or set it aside, especially when it has been acted upon. Such an order cannot be challenged on a motion and the appropriate remedy is to proceed by way of an action. So long as such an order, made on consent, is not set aside, it remains in force and binds the parties as effectively as any other order. ——Ss. 397 and 398 — Relief against oppression and mismanagement of company — Powers of Court — Extent and exercise of.

Right to apply to prevent oppression and mismanagement of a company has been given to the shareholders and powers have been given to the Courts and the Central Government to give appropriate relief under the new Act, Chapter VI. Powers given are very great—the powers of the Court being much greater than the powers of the Central Government. While formerly in matters of company management, the Court acting on the principle of 'hands off' left the indoor management to the company, i.e., the shareholders and directors, except in very exceptional cases it is recognised in the new Act that under conditions prevailing at present in the matter of company management a good deal of interference by the Court and the Central Government has become imperative in the interest of the company, shareholders and the public. The Court, however, never exercises its power, unless the exercise of that power is called for in the circumstances of each case. But if a case for interference is made out, it is the duty of the Court to exercise the power, and failure to exercise the power would amount to a grave dereliction of duty. Recognising the necessity of interference by Court with the affairs of the company, the legislature has enacted these new sections and it is the duty of the Court to apply them and not to shirk responsibility by invoking the doctrine of 'hands off' and on the basis of observations made in old decisions. These old decisions must be treated as obsolete in the new set-up. ('64) 68 Cal WN 163.

——Ss. 397 and 398 — Scheme made in proceedings under — Order on basis of representations and undertakings by person offering to act in a particular way and giving undertaking — Order approving that person as Managing Administrator and giving directions as to course of action — Default in complying with directions and disobedience of orders and non-compliance with undertakings — Offence — Contempt of Courts Act (XXXII of 1952), S. 4 — Punishment — Proper order.

Where, in an application under Ss. 397 and 398 of the Companies Act, proposals are made for framing a scheme and for re-starting the company and a person files an affidavit containing certain representations and undertakings to certain specific acts for the purpose of working the company and requesting to be appointed as the Managing Administrator to manage the affairs of the company, the Court in consideration of the undertaking and on the faith of the representations makes an order accepting the proposals and directs that person to do certain acts and to follow a specified course of action, but that person makes no attempt to comply with the order and directions or to carry out the undertakings given by him, such flagrant violation and breach of the undertaking and disobedience of the orders of the Court, would amount to a breach of his fiduciary duties and he must be held guilty of gross contempt of Court deserving the maximum and deterrent punishment for the offence. The person so appointed as a Managing Administrator is an officer of the Court and occupies a fiduciary position in whom the Court has placed trust and confidence and his default in carrying out his undertaking and obeying the orders of the Court is misconduct amounting to contempt. In such cases of gross disobedience and contempt, the Court is perfectly justified in awarding the maximum punishment prescribed under S. 4 of the Contempt of Courts Act, 1952. ——Ss. 397, 398 and 402 — Charges against directors — Compromise — Duty of Court to investigate into charges.

Proceedings under Ss. 397 and 398 of the Companies Act are not like suits between private parties which could be compromised in any manner they choose. Both under Ss. 397 and 398 the interests of the company are of paramount importance and the proceedings should not be conceived as a mere dispute between individuals. Any compromise suggested should be acceptable to the Court whose powers are set out in S. 402.

If the minority in a company complains of an oppression and disclosed certain grounds of complaint in the petition which are made the basis for the relief the Court should ordinarily investigate the charges. Such investigations may in certain cases be necessary even to regulate the future conduct of the company for providing against recurrence of such abuses of power by the majority. Ss. 402 and 406 of the Companies Act give ample jurisdiction to the Court to dispose of the matter in the larger interests of the Company.

——Ss. 397, 402 (b) and (c) — Power of Court to prevent corruption and mismanagement — Nature of — Not abriged by S. 6 (3), Forward Contracts (Regulation) Act, (1952).

The powers of the Court for prevention of corruption and mismanagement under Chapter VI of Part VI, subject to the limitations imposed by the provisions therein, are of plenary character and are not abridged by anything contained in S. 6 (3) of the Forward Contracts (Regulation) Act, 1952. It is open to the Court to strike out such rules of a recognised Association which may result in oppression. S. 6 (3) restricts acts of the Association and cannot be read to mean that it subjects the Court to obtain the approval of the Central Government before passing an order which may have the result of amending rules of an Association which offend against the provisions of the Companies Act.

Where, to accord with the principles of the Forward Contracts (Regulation) Act (1952), a public limited company doing forward contract business, which had received recognition from the Central Government, amended its Articles of Association so as to restrict its membership only to those actually engaged in the trade, thus depriving its non-trading members of their right to vote and to declare or to receive dividends :

Held, that it was a proper case to pass an order under S. 402 (b) and (c) in order to enable the non-trading members, not desiring to qualify as trading members, to sever their connection, and walk out of the company with their contributed capital. 64 Pun LR 284 : ILR (1961) 2 Punj 762 : (1962) 32 Com Cas 937 : AIR 1961 Punj 485 (489) (Pt D) (Prs 25, 27).

——S. 398 — Alteration in Board of Directors and ownership of company's shares — No material to show that affairs of company would be conducted in manner prejudicial to its interests — Prima facie case for interference under S. 398, not made out.

Where, though a material change had taken place in the management or control of the Company by an alteration in its Board of Directors inasmuch as the petitioner and his group were no longer in the Board of Directors, and in the ownership of the Company's shares also, in the absence of materials that by reason of such change it was likely that the affairs of the company would be conducted in a manner prejudicial to its interests, the question of interference by the Court under S. 398, with a view to bringing to an end or preventing the matters complained of did not arise.

Section 398 covers cases involving gross mismanagement of the affairs of the company Where the particulars alleged do not make out a case of mismanagement, much less a case of gross mismanagement the application under S. 398, is wholly misconceived. Even a prima facie case under that section has not been made out. ——Ss. 398 (1) (a) and (b) and (2), 293 (1) (a), 402, 433 (a), 484 (1) (b) — Proposed sale of sole undertaking of company for inadequate price — Sale being tantamount to winding up of company, requires consent of company by special resolution — Sale sought to be effected by obtaining consent by ordinary resolution is prejudicial to interests of company — Court can direct under S. 398 that undertaking be not sold for specified period except on strength of special resolution.

Where the sole undertaking of a company which was not running at a loss but which could earn considerable profit with proper management, was sought to be sold at a price much below the real value of the undertaking, by one of the directors who controlled a majority of the shares of the company, by obtaining not merely the consent for sale of the company by an ordinary resolution in a general meeting, but also by effecting a change in the management by securing a majority for his group on the Board of Directors and it was obvious that the director concerned was in a position to carry out his avowed purpose of securing the sale of the undertaking, unless the Court intervened, in such circumstances, the ordinary provisions of the Act would be inadequate to safeguard the interests of the company and resort can be had to the powers of the Court under S. 398, of the Act.

Held, that the sale was not of an undertaking with a view to embark on some other business, but a sale which was tantamount to winding up the company. No doubt, the company could go into liquidation if it wished to. But, for this, a special resolution was necessary whether action was taken under section 433 (a) or under section 484 (1) (b). To take a company into liquidation otherwise, than in accordance with law, must be prejudicial to the interests of the company. If this was prejudicial to the interests of the company the matter would fall both within Cl. (a) and Cl. (b) of section 398 (1) of the Companies Act and the Court could exercise its powers under section 402. In order to safeguard the interests of the company the Court would be justified in directing that, the undertaking should not be sold for a specific period unless the company by a special resolution resolved that it be sold. This only added to the restriction imposed on the powers of the Board by section 293 (1) (a) by requiring that the consent of the company in general meeting should be by special resolution; it did not mean that by a special resolution the members could compel the Board to effect a sale. AIR 1964 Ker 114 (116, 118) (Prs 7, 8, 19).

5. No prejudice to interest of company.

●——S. 398 — Scope and applicability — Slight delay in payment of full value of new shares issued — No case of prejudice to interest of Company.

Section 398 only comes into play as the marginal note shows, when there is actual mismanagement or apprehension of mismanagement of the affairs of the Company. It may be contrasted with Section 397, which deals with oppression to the minority share-holders, whether there is prejudice to the company or not. The slight delay in the payment of the full value of the new shares cannot, when shares worth Rs. 30 lacs were fully paid up in the financial year and the only amount outstanding was only 85 per cent. of shares worth Rs. 9 lacs, be said to be so prejudicial to the interests of the Company as to call for any action under S. 398 of the Act. ——S. 398 — Change in management or control of company — Mere vacancy in Board of directors or transfer of shares does not amount to.

A vacancy in the office of a director caused by retirement, resignation or death or caused by operation of law, is not to be treated as a change in the management or control within Sec. 398. Further, the material change in the control of management of the company is to arise from certain specified facts as laid down in S. 398 (1) (b).

Thus where the only change in the management or control complained by the petitioners was the transfer in the ownership of a block of shares of the company but no change in the management or control of the Board had taken place by reason of the sale of shares or no new director had been appointed in exercise of the voting power attached to the shares transferred, there is no material change as contemplated by S. 398 (1) and S. 398 (2) by reason of the transfer of shares and S. 398 is not attracted. (1965) 1 Com LJ 35: (1965) 35 Com Cas 187: 69 Cal WN 137.

Where by a judgment arising out of an application under S. 398 Companies Act, 1956, the Court appointed an Interim Committee of Management, the Committee has necessarily to function under the supervision of the Court. The Court can, under circumstances curtail the term of the Committee originally fixed by the judgment. The order passed under S. 398 of the Companies Act, 1956 is for the protection of shareholders. If the applicants are able to satisfy the Court that it would be in the interest of the Company to curtail the period of Interim Management, the Court has power to order such curtailment.

Proceedings before High Court under the Companies Act, 1956 are regulated by the Companies (Court) Rules, 1959. Rule 6 makes the C. P. Code applicable to proceedings under the Companies Act. The application is to be 'so far as applicable.' With the restriction some departure from the provisions of the C. P. Code is permissible. Rule 7 provides for power of Court to enlarge or abridge time. Under Rule 9, the Court can exercise its inherent power notwithstanding Rule 6. It is therefore, immaterial whether the application for curtailment of the period of interim management is treated as an application under Section 151, C. P. Code, or as an application under Rules 7 and 9 of the Companies (Court) Rules, 1959. ILR

No distinction can be made between 'issued capital' and 'subscribed capital' in S. 399, of the Companies Act. SECTION 400

——Ss. 400, 397 and 398 — Notice to Central Government — Necessity — Procedure.

If a composite petition is presented to the Court it would be open to the Court or to the Company Judge to dismiss it summarily and not to admit it at all. That would apply both with regard to the prayer for winding up and with regard to the direction under S. 397 and S. 398. But the Court may want it to be admitted at least for the purpose of giving notice to the company so that the company should be heard. If the Company Judge takes that view at that stage, then not only a notice should be given to the company but aiso to the Central Government, so that all difficulties with regard to S. 400 would be obviated. With regard to winding up, if he wishes to go further into the matter, he would have the petition advertised as required under the High Court Rules. If, on the other hand, he thinks that there is no case for winding up, he may dispose of that part of the petition, and with regard to Ss. 397 and 398 he would give such directions as the Companies Act provides, after hearing both the Company and the Central Government. If the petition is not a composite petition and is only a petition under S. 397 or 398, a similar practice should be followed. (1958) 28 Com Cas 549: 60 Bom LR 906: ILR (1959) Bom 395: AIR 1959 Bom 176 (177) (Pr 4) (DB).

——S. 402 — Scope of — Court's power to appoint Advisory Board.

Constitution of an Advisory Board by orders of Court in a proper case of company management is within the competence of the Court under S. 402 of the Companies Act, 1956. The pattern of Court's power of managing under S. 402 has to be worked out. The section is an innovation in company administration by the Court. 63 Cal WN 439: AIR 1959 Cal 695 (Prs 4, 5).

Clause (e) of Section 402 talks of an agreement between a Company and a third party which is subsisting at the date of the order and provides that such agreement may be terminated, set aside or modified by the order. Such an agreement would have a continuing effect and if it is entered into as part of a course of oppressive or prejudicial conduct or has brought about a course of oppressive or prejudicial conduct the Court certainly can, for the purpose of bringing to an end such oppressive or prejudicial conduct terminate, set aside or modify such agreement. Clause (e) of Section 402 deals with a situation such as this and does not profess to strike at any past and concluded transactions between a Company and third parties which are no longer continuing wrongs. (1964) 1 Comp LJ 325: (1964) 34 Com Cas 777: (1964) 5 Guj LR 804: ILR (1964) Guj 752: AIR 1965 Guj 96 (102) (Pt D) (Pr 33).

——Ss. 406, 543, 397, 398 — Power of Court to interfere in respect of past and concluded transactions which are no longer continuing wrongs.

Section 406 read with S. 543 as set forth in Schedule 11 enables the Court in an application under S. 397 or 398 to bring to book delinquent directors, managing agents, secretaries and treasurers, managers and other officers of the Company and to enforce the company's claim against them if they have misapplied or retained or become liable or accountable for any money or property of the Company or committed any misfeasance or breach of trust in relation to the Company. The Court can, therefore, in cases covered by S. 543 as set forth in Schedule 11, award on an application under S. 397 or 398, at the instance of the aggrieved shareholders, compensation to the Company and through the Company to the aggrieved shareholders, in respect of past and concluded transactions which are not continuing wrongs. Sections 402 (f) and 543 are the only two cases in which on an application under S. 397 or 398, the Court is empowered to give relief in respect of past and concluded transactions which are no longer continuing wrongs and they are really in the nature of exceptions to the general principle manifest from the language of S. 397 and 398 that the power of the Court under both the sections is confined only to making an order for the purpose of putting an end to oppressive or prejudicial conduct and the Court cannot make an order setting aside or interfering with past and concluded transactions which are no longer continuing wrongs or giving compensation to the Company or the aggrieved shareholders in respect of such transactions. (1964) 1 Comp LJ 326: (1964) 34 Com Cas 777: (1964) 5 Guj LR 804: ILR (1964) Guj 752: AIR 1965 Guj 96 (103) (Pt F) (Pr 35).

A limited liability company went into liquidation. The Official Liquidator reported to the Court that there was nothing to manage and asked for direction to sell the book debts. This was accorded. The plaintiff became the highest bidder for Rs. 15. The defendant was one of the promoters of the society. He had purchased 101 shares but he had not remitted even a sum of Rs. 5, which according to the articles of association was to be paid towards every share. The plaintiff filed a suit for recovery of a sum of Rs. 1,162-12-7 in regard to the unpaid share money by this contributory defendant on the 101 shares which he had applied for.

Held, that the call money did not constitute a book debt and that therefore the suit was not maintainable. AIR 1956 Mad 448, Relied on.

Held further assuming that it was a book debt the debt entry giving rise to the cause of action was of the date 14-8-1950, while the suit was laid on 28-11-1953 beyond 3 years for realisation of a contractual debt and therefore it was clearly barred by limitation. (1959) 29 Com Cas 295: 72 Mad LW 24: (1959) 1 Mad LJ 305.

In the winding up of the company a call to the past members for the payment of the unpaid share capital was made and a sum of Rs. 9,005.84, was also realized from them without the attention of the Court being drawn to the fact that even on that date the amount realised from the sale of the assets was in excess of the amount due to the creditors. Subsequently ah order was also obtained from the Company Court for returning seventy per cent. of the share capital to the preference shareholders and it was so paid. At this stage the Official Liquidator, having in his hands a sum of Rs. 3,431.93 only, sought directions from the Company Court on the points, whether he can retain the proceeds of the calls already made and collected, whether he can call the further unupaid amounts, or whether the amounts received from the past members should be returned and for this purpose to recover from the preference shareholders a fraction of the payment already made to them,

Held, there was no jurisdiction to call for contribution from the past members since the other assets of the company were sufficient to pay all the debts and costs and there was even a surplus. But the call had been made and the order had become final by virtue of Ss. 473 and 483, of the Act of 1956. Having regard to the finality of the order passed in regard to the payment to the preference shareholders it is not possible to order the preference shareholders to repay any portion of the capital which they had received. A just and equitable order to pass would be to return the balance in the hands of the Official Liquidator in proportion to the fraction borne by the individual contribution of the past member to the total contribution made by all the past members. 1. Scope.

——S. 433 — Petition for winding up — Simultaneous proceeding in criminal Court.

One of the charges of the petitioner in the winding up petition in the High Court was manipulation and falsification of accounts and a specific charge was that the cash in hand was found to be short upon a surprise checking done by him.

Held no words were strong enough to censure the conduct of the petitioner in taking recourse to the criminal law at a time when the identical allegations on which he moved the Police Court, were the subject-matter of a pending winding up application in the High Court. AIR 1965 Cal 98 (113, 114) (Pt G) (Pr 57).

——Ss. 433, 449 — Winding up — Investigation into affairs of company necessary.

Where an investigation into the affairs of a company is necessary, the winding up should not be left in the hands of a private liquidator whose interests would conflict with that of the creditors. (1913) 29 TLR 384, Rel. on. AIR 1965 Cal 98 (131) (Pt ZD) (Pr 171).

——Ss. 433, 439 — Winding up petition — Oral evidence if can be taken.

There is no inflexible rule or practice prohibiting the adducing of oral evidence or cross-examination in winding up applications. Where necessity suggests or experience requires, it is open to the Judge to allow oral evidence. But where the application for calling oral evidence is not only belated but is intended to retard and delay the progress of the winding up application, the oral evidence should be refused as expedition in winding up is absolutely necessary.

Where some of the allegations though true are far from sufficient for a winding up order on just and equitable grounds and regarding some other allegations they are false and cannot be relied on, there is neither necessity nor scope for taking oral evidence. 2. Application under — Requirements and maintainability.

——S. 433 — Compulsory liquidation — Winding up cannot be ordered on assumptions and hypothetical and speculative considerations — Clear case justifying such action must be made out.

The passing of an order for winding up is a matter within the discretion of the Court. The remedy of compulsory liquidation is a drastic remedy and should be availed of only when a clear case has been made out justifying such an action. The Court cannot proceed to wind up a company on assumptions, and on hypothetical and speculative considerations. 63 Bom LR 815: 1961 Nag LJ 672: (1962) 32 Com Cas 215: AIR 1962 Bom 133 (143, 144) (Pt D) (Pr 15).

——S. 433 — Rule of estoppel — Applicability — Person making winding up petition not denying truth of various things to which he was party but raising contentions on basis that those things were injurious to interest of company — Rule of estoppel does not apply. See Evidence Act (1872), S. 115. AIR 1965 Cal 98.

——S. 433 — Power of Court to re-open balance sheet.

In a petition for winding up, the Court should not reopen the balance sheet on the bare allegation that it is false. Where the balance sheets had been passed at the Annual General Meetings of the company it is not for the Court in a winding up petition to make an order for the winding up of the Company on a charge that the balance sheet does not represent a true picture. More particularly no reliance should be placed on the allegations of the petitioner, who was emphatic in his denial of similar charges made by a person previously in his winding up petition. AIR 1965 Cal 98 (110) (Pt A) (Pr 34).

——Ss. 433, 439 — Particulars — Necessity.

In a winding up petition grounds and particulars which are relied upon by the petitioner must be set out in petition itself and not in the affidavit-in-reply. AIR 1965 Cal 98 (105, 106) (Pt E) (Pr 14).

——S. 433 — Winding up petition — Duty of Court.

It is no part of the duty of the Court to collect materials for a petitioner in a winding up petition on vague and uncertain charges made in the petition so that the petitioner may be able to get an order for winding up. AIR 1965 Cal 98 (115) (Pt J) (Pr 70).

——Ss. 433, 439 — Petition for winding up — Defect in — Affidavit at late stage for rectification of defect.

In a winding up petition, the grounds on which the winding up order is sought must be stated in the petition itself. The company must know what are the charges of fraud and mismanagement brought against it by the petitioner.

Where the matter had been pending for more than a year, affidavits of all the parties had been completed long ago, arguments on behalf of the Company's counsel had been concluded and it was only then that a vital defect in the petition was sought to be rectified by an affidavit:

Held, that to allow the affidavit to be filed at this stage would be to re-open the whole matter from the very beginning, because leave had to be given to the company to meet the charges contained in this affidavit. AIR 1965 Cal 98 (120) (Pt P) (Pr 102).

——S. 433 — Demurrer — Petition only to be considered — Affidavit-in-opposition not to be considered.

In order to determine a question of demurrer the Court should look at the petition for winding up only and at nothing else. To sustain a point of demurrer, it has to be seen if the charges as made, are by themselves enough to sustain an application for winding up. The allegations made in the affidavit-in-opposition cannot be taken into consideration by the Court in determining the question of demurrer. If it is found, however that the charges as laid in the petition are such that in the facts of a particular case, they might justify a winding up order, the petition cannot be dismissed on the ground that it is demurrable. Where charges of mismanagement, misapplication, misappropriation, violation of the provisions of law, oppression of minority, irregularities in the maintenance of the books and non-compliance with statutory provisions have been made, these charges may be false or frivolous but such a conclusion can be arrived at only by taking into consideration the facts stated in the affidavit-in-opposition and by a reference to the minute books of the Board of Directors, the Directors' Reports, Directors' Answers to Auditors' comments and the Balance sheets of the company. It is only upon a consideration of these materials, that the conclusion can be arrived at that the charges made in the winding up petition are frivolous, false, misleading and perverse. But such a conclusion cannot be arrived at, upon a consideration of the winding up petition only. In this view of the matter, it cannot be held that the winding up petition is demurrable and for that reason it should be dismissed. It cannot however, be held that the charges made in the petition by themselves would not be sufficient, in an appropriate case, to make an order for winding up. Nor can it be held that in an appropriate case, such charges cannot constitute the subject-matter of an application for winding up a company on the ground that it is just and equitable to make an order for winding up. (1875) 10 Ch A 188, Distinguished. AIR 1965 Cal 98 (121, 122, 135, 136) (Pt Q) (Prs 109, 110, 112, 186).

——Ss. 433, 439 — Petition for winding up — Petition to contain all grounds.

The winding up petition must contain all the grounds on which an order is sought. The petitioner cannot claim to collect materials upon inspection of the company's documents to supplement the grounds which he has urged in the petition. ——Ss. 433 (f), 439 (1) (c), 398 and 399 — Contributory's application — Proper remedy available under S. 398, but not pursued — Petition for winding up was liable to be dismissed.

A contributory of a Company filed a petition for winding up of the Company. The only injury he could legitimately apprehend if the company continued to work instead of being wound up was that, in a future winding up he would not get what he would get on the date of application. An offer was made to him by the director-in-charge of the company to buy his shares not merely at its face value but at a premium of 50 per cent. This offer was rejected by him. A proposal by Court to convene a meeting of the members of the company to ascertain their wishes was also rejected by him.

Held, in the circumstances, that the petitioner had not brought the petition in order to safeguard his legitimate interests. Even if the allegations made by him would justify a winding up order under the just and equitable clause, on the allegations made, his proper remedy would be an application under S. 398, and he was acting unreasonably in seeking to have the company wound up instead of pursuing that remedy. To say that that remedy was not available to the petitioner since he could not muster the support required by S. 399, was no answer and only served to show that the other members were not prepared to subscribe to the allegations made by the petitioner. (1964) 1 Com LJ 257: 1964 Ker LJ 550: (1964) 2 Ker LR 241: AIR 1964 Ker 212 (213, 214, 215, 216) (Pt E) (Prs 13, 14, 15, 2, 12, 4).

——S. 433 — Grounds not taken in petition cannot be allowed.

,Where, at the hearing of a petition for winding up of a Company, the petitioner wished to introduce a further ground that the Company had suspended its business and that there was no hope of its carrying on business.

Held, that the petitioner could not be allowed to go beyond the statements contained in his petition. He was confined strictly to the grounds expressly taken in the petition; and was not permitted to extend or enlarge upon the ground taken in the petition. (1964) 1 Com LJ 58: ILR (1963) Cut 944: AIR 1964 Orissa 191 (196) (Pt B) (Pr 19).

——S. 433 — Banking Companies Act (1949), S. 38 — Calcutta High Court Rules (as adopted in Tripura), Rule 51 — Irregularities in complying with rules — Effect.

In an application for winding up of a bank, though it is desirable that the rules and forms prescribed by the High Court should be followed, the Court can in a proper case condone mere irregularities that may have occurred in complying with the rules. ——S. 433 (e) — Right to apply — Winding up Tripura State Bank — Merger of State — Formation of State into Union Territory — Application for winding up filed by Tripura Administration— Competency — (Civil Procedure Code (1908), S. 79) — (Constitution of India, Arts. 239 and 300).

The Tripura State Bank was established in the time of the erstwhile State of Tripura, who held 50 per cent of the shares, and also had fixed deposits and current accounts. On the merger of the State with the Dominion of India in 1949, these shares and amounts of fixed and current deposits, which were the properties of the State passed to the Government of India, according to the terms of the Merger Agreement. A demand in writing under the signature of the Chief Commissioner under instructions of Government of India, was sent by registered post to the Bank to pay the sum due for current deposits, within three weeks, but the Bank neglected to pay the same. It was further alleged that the financial position of the Bank was extremely unsatisfactory and had been steadily deteriorating. Hence an application for winding up the Bank was filed on behalf of the Administration of Tripura.

Held (1) that even though the current accounts stood in the names of various persons in the service of the Government as operators of the accounts, the demand could be made for the amounts of current accounts in the way it was done; (2) that if the shares were left out of consideration, yet the local administration was certainly one of the creditors of the Bank on account of the ownership of the deposits in the current accounts; (3) that the expression Tripura Administration included both the President and the Chief Commissioner within the meaning of Art. 239 of the Constitution, and as it was in that name that the present petition was filed, the application for winding up the Bank was quite competent. (1960) 30 Comp Cas 324: AIR 1959 Tripura 41 (44, 45) (Pt H) (Prs 11, 21, 24).

4. Winding up petition — Stay of.

——S. 433 — Application for winding up — Application in opposition for order for stay of further proceedings on ground that winding up petition is abuse of process of Court — Maintainability.

The Court in exercise of its inherent powers can make an order for stay of all further proceedings including publication of advertisement of the winding up petition on the ground that the winding up petition is an abuse of the process of Court. The order for advertisements cannot, at all affect the court's power to make an order for stay of further proceedings for the ends of justice or to prevent an abuse of the process of Court. The Court's powers to make orders for the ends of justice and to prevent abuse of process of court have been expressly recognized by the rules. AIR 1965 Cal 98 (122, 125, 126) (Pt R) (Prs 117, 137).

——Ss. 433, 439 — Winding up petition mala fide — Stay — Court satisfied that object of petitioner is mischievous and malicious and therefore petition is an abuse of the process of Court — Court has inherent power to prevent petitioner from proceeding further with his petition. (1874) 19 Eq. 182, Rel. on. AIR 1965 Cal 98 (127) (Pt V) (Pr 143).

——Ss. 433, 439 — Petition made only to put pressure on company — Stay.

Where the winding up petition has been moved solely for the purpose of putting pressure upon the Company by threats of advertisements and not for the purpose of getting a winding up order, the winding up petition should be stopped, and advertisements ought not to be allowed to be published. (1875) 19 Eq. 444 and (1894) 2 Ch. 349, Rel. on. AIR 1965 Cal 98 (127, 128) (Pt W) (Pr 145).

——S. 433 — Winding up petition admitted by Court and directions for advertisements given but publication of advertisements stayed until final disposal of petition for dismissal of winding up — Winding up petition cannot be dismissed having regard to the orders already made, on this application — Order made for stay of all further proceedings on the winding up petition presented including the publication of advertisement. AIR 1965 Cal 98 (145) (Pt Y) (Pr 234).

——Ss. 433, 442 — Petition for stay of winding up — Mention of wrong section in.

S. 442 has no application to an application for stay of winding up petition and relief cannot be granted to the company under that section, which deals with stay of suits and proceedings, other than the winding up petition, against the company. But the company should not be deprived of its remedies merely because the particular section has been wrongly mentioned if grounds for relief have been set out in the company's petition for stay of winding up proceedings and if the Court has jurisdiction to entertain and make an order in that application. AIR 1957 Cal 198 and ILR 33 Bom 698, Rel. on. AIR 1965 Cal 98 (144) (Pt ZN) (Prs 224, 228).

——S. 433 (f) — Winding up petition — Stay— Principles.

The principles which govern stay or dismissal of a suit on the ground that it is vexatious are entirely different from the principles which govern the Court in dealing with an application for stay of a winding up petition on the ground that it is an abuse of the process of the Court. Then again the winding up petition is vastly different from an action at law. The former is an attempt to put an end to the company's existence as such. Steps which the law requires to be taken before a winding up petition is brought to a hearing, necessarily involves very wide publicity. If the charges are false and frivolous such publicity by advertisements is bound to do enormous mischief and injury to the company. On the other hand, if the plaintiff's allegations in an action are false, the action is liable to be dismissed but no further injury is caused to the defendant in the action. (1908) 1 K.B. 761, Distinguished. AIR 1965 Cal 98 (138) (Pt ZO) (Pr 207).

——S. 433 — Winding up petition — Stay of— Difference between bankruptcy proceedings and winding up proceedings.

Bankruptcy proceedings are entirely different from winding up proceedings inasmuch as the latter require publication of the winding up petition by advertisement. There is no such procedure in Bankruptcy Law. It is because of this difference between winding up proceedings and bankruptcy proceedings that the English Courts have refused to stay a bankruptcy proceeding, as there was no possibility of mischief or injury to the debtor, if the allegations against him were false or frivolous. (1904) 1 K.B. 585 and AIR 1916 P.C. 64 Distinguished. AIR 1965 Cal 98 (139, 140) (Pt ZP) (Pr 208).

——S. 433 — Winding up petition by contributory — Stay — Motive of contributory.

In an application for stay of winding up on the ground of abuse of process, the motive of a contributory who presents the petition is very material. (1898) A. C. 720 Distinguished. AIR 1965 Cal 98 (140) (Pt ZQ) (Pr 210).

——S. 433 — Winding up petition — Inherent power of Court to stay proceedings.

It is true that in an action at law and in any proceeding under such an action, namely execution, if a person has a right to make an application in law the application cannot be dismissed on the ground that it is an abuse of process of Court. But this principle has no application to the case of a winding up petition by a contributory who may be fully qualified under the statute to make the application. To say that such an application cannot in any circumstances be an abuse of process of Court, is to deny to the Court, an undoubted right which the Court has to stop a mischievous and frivolous application for winding up. The inherent power of the Court to stop a winding up petition or restrain further proceedings thereunder, are based on well-recognised and well established principles. The Court certainly is not powerless to stop or stay a winding up proceeding which in its opinion, is inspired by spite and based on reckless and frivolous charges of mismanagement, misapplication of funds and irregularities in the Company's administration. AIR 1942 Lah. 119 and (1867) 2 Ch. A. 459, Distinguished. AIR 1965 Cal 98 (141) (Pt ZS) (Pr 215).

——S. 433 — Winding up petition — Stay — Reasonable hope of company trading at profits.

The decisive question must be the question whether at the date of the winding up petition there was any reasonable hope of the Company's trading at a profit, for which the company was formed. Where the company is earning large profits and the prospect of future business is also fairly bright, the winding up petition should be stopped. (1936) 1 All E. R. 299, Rel. on. AIR 1965 Cal 98 (141, 142) (Pt ZT) (Pr 216).

5. Winding up on resolution of company.

——Ss. 433 (a), 398 (1) (a) and (b) and (2), 293 (1) (a), 402, 484 (1) (b) — Proposed sale of sole undertaking of company for inadequate price — Sale being tantamount to winding up of company requires consent of company by special resolution — Sale sought to be effected by obtaining consent by ordinary resolution is prejudicial to interests of company—Court can direct under S. 398 that undertaking be not sold for specified period except on strength of special resolution. See Ibid, S. 398 (1) (a). AIR 1964 Ker 114.

6. Non-commencement and suspension of business.

——Ss. 433 (c), (f) and 443 (2) — Winding up petition — Grounds for.

The company was originally started as a banking company, although it had taken powers to engage in other activities. The majority of the shares of the company were held by members of the family of one N. The directors of the company were the nominees of the said majority group of shareholders. There were runs on the bank and the Central Government, acting upon a report of the Reserve Bank of India, prohibited the company from receiving fresh deposits and since then the company had ceased to carry on banking business. No steps had been taken against any of the debtor companies. The necessary consequence of all this was that the minority group of shareholders was getting no return on their investments.

Held, that it was proper that the company should be wound up, so that its assets might be speedily realised and made available for distribution among the shareholders. On the facts of the case it must be held that there had been suspension of business of the company in terms of S. 433 (c). Shareholders, qua shareholders, would derive no benefit. It was therefore just and equitable that the company should be wound up. An application under S. 398 would not be of much use to the petitioner under the circumstances. 1924 AC 783; LR 2 Ch 737; LR 20 Ch 169, Rel. on. ——S. 433 (e) — Winding up — Non-commencement of business within a year from incorporation — Discretion of Court.

Under S. 433 the Court will not exercise the discretionary power conferred on it to wind up a company which has not commenced its business within a year of its incorporation, where the delay has been sufficiently accounted for, and there is no evidence of any improbability of its commencing its business within a reasonable time. (1867) 36 LJ Ch 827, Appld. 1963 Ker LT 528: (1963) 2 Ker LR 15: 1963 Ker LJ 665: (1963) 2 Com LJ 58: (1963) 33 Com Cas 886: ILR (1963) 2 Ker 676: AIR 1965 Ker 35 (36, 37) (Prs 8, 10) (DB).

——S. 433 (e) — Company, when can be said not to have commenced business.

In discovering what is the company's business, regard must be had to its memorandum of association alone, and if its memorandum contains several main objects, the Company will not be wound up, even if some of its objects have not yet been attained; on the other hand, a company does not carry on business, unless it genuinely attempts to achieve the objects for which it was formed, so that it will not carry on business merely by its Directors holding Board meetings, nor by them exercising the ancillary powers set out in the objects clause of its memorandum; even if the Company's memorandum provides that each of the powers in the objects clause shall be deemed a main object, the Court will discover what objects the company was really formed to attain, and will wind it up if they have been abandoned. If it is obvious that the company will never have sufficient resources to commence business, the Court will wind it up within the year. Moreover, even if the company has not carried on business for a year, the Court will not wind it up if there are reasonable prospects of its doing so at not too remote a date, and there are good reasons for the delay. AIR 1963 Orissa 1 (5, 6) (Pt B) (Prs 20, 21).

——S. 433 (c) — Suspension of business — Winding up of Company — Discretion of Court — Exercise of — Grounds.

Where the past delay is sufficiently accounted for and where the Court is satisfied that there is a likelihood of the business being resumed it may not exercise its discretionary power against the company, but if the Court is satisfied, that no business has been or is likely to be commenced, it should pass an order for winding up of the company on the petition of the shareholders. Suspension of a business for a whole year is usually deemed as an indication of absence of intention to carry on the business unless suspension has been satisfactorily accounted for. (1961) 31 Com Cas 461: AIR 1962 Punj 151 (152) (Pt A) (Pr 3).

7. Inability to pay debts.
(a) Inability should amount to commercial insolvency.
(b) Non-payment of disputed debts.

7. Inability to pay debts.

——Ss. 433 (e), 434 and 439 (1) (b) — Winding up — Application by creditor on ground of inability of Company to pay debts — Pleading and proof — Practice — Duty of petitioner—Affidavits of third parties and balance-sheet of Company produced at hearing — Admissibility — Petition filed not for benefit of creditors but for ulterior purposes — Substainability.

It is well established that a petitioner who applies for the winding up of a Company on the ground that the Company is unable to pay its debts must make out sufficient grounds in the petition itself and if such grounds have not been so made out, the Court is not entitled to take notice of other evidence that may be produced in the affidavits of other parties; and before a winding up order is made the Court must be satisfied that the petitioner is in fact a creditor. An order for winding up will not be made if sufficient evidence is not stated in the petition, even if such a case is proved by evidence. The balance-sheet of the Company produced at the hearing of the petition for winding up should not be taken against the Company as proof that the Company is unable to pay its debts. If the coercive machinery of winding up is sought to be set in motion for purposes other than to secure a winding up of the Company for the benefit of the general body of creditors but for something else, for example, to secure release of the Company's assets from the occupation, possession and exploitation by a party whom it has inducted into the company's undertaking and who has advanced large sums of money for the working of the Company's undertaking and business, the Court will not lend its aid to the petitioning creditor; such an application is an abuse of the process of Court. From the mere fact that the liabilities of a company as found in the affidavit of the Registrar of Companies filed in Court, far exceed its assets, it does not necessarily follow that the company is unable to pay its debts within the meaning of Ss. 433 (e) and 434 (1) (a) of the Companies Act, 1956. A company may have liabilities more than its assets, but it still may have in particular circumstances the capacity to meet demands from its creditors. Where the debt due to a creditor is barred by limitation on the date of his application for winding-up, his petition for winding up the company based on his notice of demand for payment and failure to comply with it, cannot be sustained under S. 439 (1) (b) of the Companies Act.

A resolution passed by the Board of Directors of a Company to request the managing director thereof to waive his claim to the remuneration due to him and a letter addressed to him in pursuance of the resolution requesting him to waive his claim do not amount to an acknowledgment of liability under S. 19 of the Limitation Act, 1908. Even assuming that the Board of Directors expressly acknowledged the debt in writing signed by them, it would not operate as an acknowledgment made by a director of a debt due to himself, when the managing director continues as a director, though not as managing director, although he might not be a party to the proceedings of the Board of Directors in which the resolution was passed. The word 'wages' in Art. 102 of the Limitation Act would cover also salary and Art. 102 would therefore apply to a claim by the Managing Director of a company for payment of the salary or remuneration payable to him as managing director. Art. 120 of the Limitation Act would not apply.

To sustain a plea of waiver there must be clear and specific evidence and it cannot be implied or inferred from circumstances. From the circumstance that the managing director of a company had waived his claim to remuneration for certain prior years, and that he did not appear or figure as a creditor in the Company Court in response to an advertisement in connection with an application for winding up the Company, it does not necessarily follow that he waived his claim to remuneration for the subsequent years and the plea of waiver cannot be upheld. (1963) 2 Com LJ 301: (1964) 1 M.L.J. 18: (1964) 34 Com Cas 6: AIR 1964 Mad 191 (194) (Pts A, B) (Prs 7, 8).

by virtue of Section 616, Companies Act, 1956, a provision of the Banking Companies Act is to prevail in the case of a banking company where there is an inconsistency between a provision made in it and a provision made in the Companies Act. The discretion given to the Court under S. 433 of the new Act is taken away by S. 38 (1) of the Banking Companies Act where a banking company is found to be unable to pay its debts, and, in that case, it becomes obligatory for the Court to order the winding up of that company. 1959 BLJR 98: (1959) 29 Com Cas 487: AIR 1959 Pat 288 (290) (Pt C) (Pr 13).

The basis of an order for winding up of a Company is that the company has ceased to be commercially solvent and it is therefore fit and proper in the interests of the creditors and shareholders not to allow it to function as a company. The expression 'commercially insolvent' is not to be understood in any technical sense. It means that the company is plainly and commercially insolvent, that is to say that its existing and probable assets are such as to make the Court feel satisfied that they would be insufficient to meet the existing liabilities. ——Ss. 433, 434 — 'Unable to pay debt' — Application by creditor — There must be existing debt — Denial of debt by Company — Effect.

Under Ss. 433 (e) and 434 (1) (a) before a company could be sent to liquidation, it must be 'unable to pay its debts'. This presupposes that there exists a debt and the company is unable to pay it. Prima facie this must relate to the solvency of the company. So far as the creditor is concerned, who cannot obtain payment of his debts, he is entitled, as between himself and the company ex debito justitiae to an order for winding up, if he brings his case within the Act. But he must first of all establish that there is a debt owing and secondly, must satisfy the Court that the company is unable to pay the same.

Where notice is given and the company after the requisite period neglects to pay a debt, then there arises under S. 434 a presumption of inability to pay. But here again, the words used are 'neglects to pay'. In either case, that is to say, under S. 433 or S. 434, if the debt is disputed bona fide. then in that case there is neither inability nor negligence to pay. It will not do for a creditor merely to put forward a claim. Where there is a genuine dispute of the description, it cannot be resolved by having recourse to winding up proceeding. If the denial of the dispute is neither bona fide nor reasonable, then the Court does not lose its power of granting relief by passing a winding up order. Under certain circumstances, counter claim against the petitioning creditor may also amount to a bona fide claim. AIR 1920 Cal 1004, Relied on.

The Court is entitled to investigate the question as to whether a dispute has been manufactured in order to delay and defeat the realisation of the dues of the petitioning creditor and is merely a cloak for the inability of the company to pay its just debts. AIR 1962 Cal 613 (615, 616) (Prs 5, 6, 7) (DB).

Section 433 of the Companies Act, 1956, provides that a company may be wound up by the Court if it is unable to pay its debts. Section 434, states that if a creditor who is entitled to receive a sum of more than Rs. 500, from the company has made a demand in the prescribed manner on the company and the company has, for three weeks thereafter, neglected to pay his dues, it must be deemed to be unable to pay its debts. The effect of the statutory notice is that unless the debt is paid within three weeks or some arrangement is made with the creditor, the company is in the position of being conclusively estopped from denying that it is unable to pay its debts, and in such a case it would really be unnecessary to inquire whether the company is in fact solvent or not.

Where the petitioning creditor makes a demand of two sums of money one of which is disputed by the company but the other is well founded, it will be competent for the Court to direct the winding up of the company, if otherwise the petition can be held to be well founded on the basis of the inability of the company to pay that sum. It is not open to the Court to refuse an order for winding up on the ground that the company was financially sound. Where the statute requires the Court to treat a company as if it were insolvent, that is, unable to pay its debts, if certain things were done, the question which the Court has to consider is whether the event has happened on the happening of which the statute requires the Court to deem it insolvent.

Where in a particular case the debt is disputed, the Court hearing the winding up petition will have to decide whether the dispute rests on any substantial ground. Once it is proved that the debt is due to the petitioning creditor, it should proceed with the winding up petition.

The object of S. 434, is to create a fiction as to when a company can be deemed to be unable to pay its debts; and within the area of its operation such a fiction must be regarded as a reality. Section 434 (1) (a) is distinct from S. 434 (1) (c) which relates to a state of commercial insolvency. In the latter case, it will no doubt be open to the Court to find out, on a consideration of the value of existing assets and liabilities of the company whether it is really in insolvent circumstances. But in the former case, S. 434 (1) (a), no such investigation is called for, nor can it even be undertaken. It is sufficient for the purpose if there be a failure on the part of the company to meet the demand in terms of the statute. For the purpose of application of S. 434 (1) (a) all that is necessary is to find whether the amount was due to the creditor on the three dates, viz., the date of issue and service of the notice under that provision, the date of the presentation of the petition and the date of the passing of the order of winding up. If by any of these three dates the claim happens to be discharged, the fiction will cease to operate and the company cannot be regarded as one unable to pay its debts. The mere fact that the other creditors of the company have not made demands for payment cannot prevent a winding up of the company, if the amount due to the petitioning creditor continues to remain unpaid. The Court, however, in appropriate cases, would make an order directing the company to be wound up on the ground of its inability to pay its debts, but at the same time direct the order to be kept in abeyance for a period of, say, three weeks, in order to enable the company to pay up the debt due to the petitioning creditor, and in default to provide for the winding up and further proceedings thereon.

When a company declares a dividend on its shares, the debt immediately becomes payable to each shareholder in respect of his dividend for which he can sue at law. The right to participation in the profits of the company in a shareholder even exists independently of any declaration of dividend. A declaration is necessary only for its becoming payable. Therefore a shareholder to whom dividend is payable and who had made the statutory demand for payment thereof in accordance with S. 434, and failed to get satisfaction for more than three weeks is competent to apply for an order of winding up under S. 433, of the Act. The mere fact that he will be a contributory in case the company were to be wound up, would not affect the position. S. 426 (1) (g) only applies in the course of winding up proceedings and, so long as the company is functioning, it cannot be said that even outside the winding proceedings a shareholder to whom a dividend has become due is not a creditor of the company.

Section 205, only lays down that the dividend should be paid out of the profits. A resolution of the company enabling payment of the declared dividend conditional on the receipt of profits cannot be declared invalid as contravening S. 207, of the Act. Section 207, provides a penalty in the event of non-payment of dividend within the period prescribed and is intended to protect the shareholders against the arbitrary acts of the company in delaying payment of the dividends beyond the period prescribed. But on that account, the declaration of dividend itself would not be invalid. The debt becomes due, and if at all, only the condition postponing payment to a future date would be invalid as contrary to the mandatory provisions of S. 207, and, in that view, the original but separate resolution relating to the declaration of dividend should be regarded as the resolution actually passed and the dividend would become payable forthwith. It cannot be held that because a shareholder to whom a dividend is payable happens to be a director or even the managing director, he should have paid himself out within 42 days, of the declaration of dividend as laid down in S. 207, and that if he defaults to do so, it would not be open to him to make a claim later on for the dividend and to sustain a petition for winding up on the basis of that unpaid debt, which is a debt for purposes of S. 433. Declaration of dividend and the non-payment thereof within the time limited by S. 207, are respectively the act and default of the company. There can be no estoppel, by reason of that act or default, in the shareholder (director or managing director) from claiming what is due to him in his individual capacity from the company.

A transfer of shares, effected after a dividend had been declared by the company, cannot, as against the company, convey title to receive payment of the dividend to the transferee even if he expressly bought it cum dividend. Such a transfer can only create an equity between the buyer and seller of shares, the former being entitled to such dividend. Under S. 206, of the Companies Act, dividend can be paid by the company only to the registered shareholder at the time of the declaration.

The maxim, quilibet potest renunciare juri pro se introducto, which means that anyone may, at his pleasure, renounce the benefit of a stipulation or other right introduced entirely in his own favour, has exceptions. An individual cannot waive a matter in which the public have an interest, nor a public body, entrusted with powers to be exercised for the benefit of the public, waive their right to exercise any of those powers. Where there is an express statutory direction enjoining compliance with certain prescribed forms, it cannot be dispensed with. S. 207 of the Companies Act mandatorily requires the dividends declared by a company to be paid within the time specified therein. The failure to pay within that time is an offence, and it would not be open to the shareholders to contract out of that provision or to waive the default. L. R. (1866-1867) 2 Ch. App. 405; L. R. When the Court is called upon to wind up a company under Cl. (e) of S. 433, what has to be considered is not whether the company, if it converted all its assets into cash, would be able to discharge its debts, but whether in commercial sense, the company is solvent, that is, whether it is unable to meet its current demands although the assets when realised may exceed its liabilities. 7 (b). Non-payment of disputed debts.

——Ss. 433 (e) and (f), 434 (1) and 430 (1) (b) — Applicability — Winding up by creditor — Burden of proof — "Unable to pay its debts" — Meaning of — Presumption under S. 434 (1) — When arises — Essentials to be proved — Company setting up valid counter-claims and raising bona fide disputes — Effect.

Where in an application by a creditor under S. 439 (1) (b) read with S. 433 (e) and (f) of the Act, to wind up the company on account of its inability to pay its debts and that it is being run in a manner prejudicial to the interest of the petitioners, if the company, by setting up counter-claims which are prima facie valid, raises, bona fide disputes regarding its liability to pay the debts claimed by the petitioning creditor, it must be held that it has reasonable excuses for non-payment and cannot be deemed unable to pay its debts on account of any legal presumption arising under S. 434 (1) of the Act and when the company is perfectly solvent and flourishing, winding-up would not be an appropriate remedy.

In order to raise the presumption under S. 434 (1) as to the company's inability to pay its debts, it is not sufficient to show merely that the company has omitted to pay the debt due to the petitioning creditor despite service of the statutory notice. It has further to be shown that the company has omitted to pay without reasonable excuse. The existence of valid counter-claims constitutes reasonable excuse for non-payment. (1964) 2 Comp LJ 159: (1964) 34 Com Cas 963 (All).

——Ss. 433 (e) and 434 — Winding up for inability to pay debts — Basis of order is insolvency —Debt not disputed by company as regards a substantial part — Petition for winding up cannot be refused.

The basis of a winding up order on the ground of a Company's inability to pay its debts is always insolvency. A winding up petition is not a legitimate means of seeking to enforce payment of a debt which is bona fide disputed by the Company. Where the Court is satisfied that a debt upon which a petition to wind up is founded, is a hotly contested debt and doubtful, then the Court should not make a winding up order based upon such a debt. But it cannot be held that the company has not neglected to pay the amount demanded and that the presentation of the winding up petition is an abuse of the process of the Court where far from there being a bona fide dispute as to substantial part of the debt there is an admission that a substantial part is due and owing by the Company to the petitioner. (1962) 32 Com Cas 64: AIR 1963 Andh Pra 243 (245, 247) (Pt B) (Prs 15, 28, 31).

Facts justifying an order for dissolution of a partnership would equally justify the making of a winding up order in the case of a small private Company.

There were serious misunderstandings among the shareholders of the Company; one of the shareholders was actively engaged in promising the interests of a firm which was conducting the same business; and there had been no satisfactory accounting with regard to the sum of Rs. 50,000 by two of the shareholders.

Held, that if the petitioner and the other shareholders were carrying on their business as a partnership, there would be every justification for directing a dissolution of the partnership. The fact that they were conducting the business by means of the machinery of a limited company would not make any difference. (f) — Just and equitable jurisdiction — Small private company — Winding up — Principles relating to dissolution of partnership firm applicable — General allegation regarding oppression of minority by majority shareholders is of no avail — New venture by company when its substratum remains intact not improper.

In the case of a small private company, consisting of a small number of shareholders, the principles relating to the dissolution of a partnership firm should be applied and when the Court feels that it is not possible to put the affairs of the Company in order, it should have recourse to the winding up under its just and equitable jurisdiction. The general allegation regarding the oppression of the minority by the majority is of no avail in an action for winding up. That is a question relating to internal management of the Company. When the substratum of a Company remains intact, it is the duty and privilege of the majority of the shareholders to embark upon a new venture and the only restriction will be that the venture falls within the four corners of the objects clause.

Where one of the objects of the company of supplying electricity energy at Akola, which was the only business that the company was carrying on, had failed by reason of the fact that the period of licence to run the company granted by the Government had expired and the undertaking was taken over by the Government, and there were other independent objects mentioned in the memorandum of the company, and it was not established that there was no chance of carrying on the objects, it cannot be held that the substratum of the company had disappeared.

——S. 433 (f) — 'Just and equitable'.

Where a petition is filed for winding up of a company on the ground that it is just and equitable to do so, the onus is on the petitioner. The words 'just and equitable' do not limit the jurisdiction of the Court to any case. It is a question of fact and each case must depend on its circumstances. No general rule can be laid down as to the nature of the circumstances which have to be borne in mind in considering whether the case comes within the phrase 'just and equitable' for purposes of winding up. The decisive question must be the question whether at the date of the presentation of the winding up petition, there was any reasonable hope that the object of running the mills at a profit, with a view to which the company was formed, could be attained.

When an application for winding up is made on just and equitable grounds the Court is to examine the factual position as it is on the date of the presentation of the petition for winding up. It is not for the Court to assess or apportion the blame by reason of which the company had been brought to such a position that it has become just and equitable that the company should be wound up. Where, the fact remains that the company is in utter financial difficulty the decisive question in such a case is finance. 8 (a). Disappearance of substratum of company.

——S. 433, Cl. (f) — Just and equitable jurisdiction — Disappearance of substratum of company — Relevant considerations.

The question as to whether the company is really in a position to start a new business is very relevant in considering the question as to whether the substratum has disappeared. The existence or non-existence of a concrete scheme at the time the petition comes before the Court is wholly irrelevant. 63 Bom LR 815: 1961 Nag LJ 672: (1962) 32 Com Cas 215: AIR 1962 Bom 133 (142, 143) (Pt C) (Pr 14).

——S. 433 (f) — Disappearance of substratum.

When on the date of the winding up petition, the Company owns undertakings to carry on its business the fact that the Company at one time thought that it might be desirable to dispose of one of its undertakings and subsequently thought that it might be desirable to dispose of the other undertaking also and sold them, is very far from saying that its substratum was disappearing. (1964)

——S. 433 (f) — Winding up of Company — Just and equitable grounds — Disappearance of substratum of company alleged — Tests to determine.

The usual tests for determining whether the substratum of the company has disappeared are when (a) the subject-matter of the company is gone, or (b) the object for which it was incorporated has substantially failed, or (c) it is impossible to carry on the business of the company except at a loss which means that there is no reasonable hope that the object of the trading at a profit can be attained, or (d) the existing and probable assets are insufficient to meet the existing liabilities. Failure of any one of these tests is deemed a good ground for winding up of the company. 8 (b). Complaints relating to management.

——S. 433 (f) — Just and equitable grounds — Dishonest conduct or unauthorized business resulting in profits to company — There is no just and equitable ground to wind up the Company simply because in the past the directors had carried on unauthorised business when that business has only resulted in profit to the Company. AIR 1959 All 276 (309, 310) (Pt F) (Pr 49) (DB).

——S. 433 (f) — Scope of — Mere acts of omission and commission — No ground for winding up — Charges not substantiated — Charge held frivolous and made out of interested motives.

Where nothing more is established than that the directors have misappropriated the funds of the Company, an order for winding up would not be just or equitable because if it is a sound concern, such an order must operate harshly on the rights of the shareholders. But if in addition to such misconduct, circumstances exist which render it desirable, in the interests of the shareholders, that the Company should be wound up, there is nothing in S. 433 (f) which bars the jurisdiction of the Court to make such an order.

Held, on facts that none of the charges made by the petitioner against the management had been substantiated. Even assuming those charges to be true it did not amount to more than that there were certain acts of omission and commission on the part of the office holders and it would not be proper to pass an order for winding up. The charges levelled against the management were of a frivolous nature and made out of interested motives. (1963) 33 Com Cas 949 (Andh Pra).

——S. 433 — Misdeeds of agency company no ground for winding up of main company.

Where the allegations of the petitioner are that the Agency Company is guilty of misappropriation of non-payment of the Company's dues, that is not a ground for winding up the Company. It is open to the company to proceed against the Agency Company for its alleged misdeeds. It is again open to the shareholders of the Company to consider the matter and take whatever steps they decide. ——S. 433 (f) — Close relationship between directors whether ground for winding up.

Close relationship between the several directors of a company is no ground for winding up of the Company although it is a factor to be considered in cases where that close relationship has fostered misconduct and mismanagement and has enabled the directors to dominate the other shareholders and monopolise the company for their own individual benefit. (1964) 1 Com LJ 257: 1964 Ker LJ 550: (1964) 2 Ker LR 241: AIR 1964 Ker 212 (214) (Pt B) (Pr 4).

Misconduct and mismanagement are not by themselves sufficient for a winding up order, especially where almost all the alleged acts of misconduct and mismanagement related to periods before the new Board of Directors took charge. 8 (c). Other grounds.

——S. 433 (f) — Just and equitable — Matters for consideration.

In a winding up petition the decisive question must be whether on the date of the petition, there was any reasonable hope that the object of trading at a profit with which the Company was formed, could be realised. Where on the material placed before the Court the only conclusion possible is that the object for which the company was incorporated had substantially failed, that it is impossible to carry on the business of the Company except at a loss and that the existing and probable assets are insufficient to meet the existing liabilities, the Court is justified in making the winding up order. It is not the function of a Court to determine on its own views as to probable success or failure in the future, but to form the best opinion it can upon the evidence given by person with a practical knowledge of the trade in question and the local conditions where these affect the matter. SECTION 434.

SYNOPSIS.

(Companies Act (1956), S. 434)

1. Scope.
2. Sub-section (1) (a).
3. Sub-section (1) (b).
4. Sub-section (1) (c).

1. Scope.

——S. 434 (1) (a) and (c) — Inability of company to pay claim of creditor — Company can be wound up even though it is commercially solvent.

A company can be wound up on the petition of a creditor for its inability to pay his claim after proper demand had been made by him and on the lapse of three weeks from the date of service of such demand, even though the company is commercially solvent.

The object of S. 434, is to create a fiction as to when a company can be deemed to be unable to pay its debts. If the case comes within the scope of that fiction, it will not be open to the company to say that in reality it is in a position to pay its debts. It would follow that in such a case it will be really unnecessary to enquire whether the company is in fact solvent or not. AIR 1927 Cal 625; C. A. No. 432 of 1961; 49 Law Times (Rep) 147, Rel. on. Cl. (a) of S. 434 (1) is distinct from Cl. (c) which relates to the state of commercial insolvency. No doubt in the latter case, it will be open to the Court to find out on a consideration of the value of the existing assets and liabilities of the company whether it is really in insolvent circumstances. But in the former case no such investigation is called for nor even can it be undertaken. (1964) 34 Com Cas 209: (1964) 1 Com LJ 339: (1964) 2 Mad LJ 12: 77 Mad LW 255: ILR (1964) 1 Mad 832: AIR 1964 Mad 519 (522, 523) (Pt A) (Prs 10, 11) (DB).

See Banking Companies Act (1949), S. 38 (1). AIR 1959 Pat 288.

——S. 434 — Scope — Banking Companies Act (1949), S. 38 (3) — Effect of.

The provision in S. 38 (3) of the Banking Companies Act, 1949, is an alternative one, and not in addition to the provisions of S. 434 of the Companies Act, 1956. (1960) 30 Comp Cas 324: AIR 1959 Tripura 41 (43) (Pt B) (Pr 9).

——S. 434 (1) (a) — Provision requires a creditor to serve on Company a demand requiring to pay sum due — Notice need not mention any time — Provisions of law give the Company three weeks to pay — Right of creditor to take any action on ground of Company's inability to pay its debts is postponed by three weeks from date of service of notice — Mention of any period not being of essence, recital of any shorter period in notice for payment would not nullify the notice. (1965) 2 Com LJ 215 (All).

——S. 434 (1) — In order to raise the presumption under S. 434 (1) as to the Company's inability to pay its debts, it is not sufficient to show merely that the company has omitted to pay the debt due to the petitioner creditor despite service of the statutory notice. It has further to be shown that the company has omitted to pay without reasonable excuse. The existence of valid counterclaims constitutes reasonable excuse for non-payment. (1964) 34 Com Cas 963 (All).

under O. 40, R. 1 (d), C. P. Code — Can file a winding up petition for realisation of property — Debt due to joint family from company — Court receiver is creditor of company entitled to give notice under Ss. 434 and 439, Companies Act and file a winding up petition. ——S. 434 — Notice by creditor calling upon company to pay debt to a third party — Validity.

Section 434 nowhere requires that by the notice contemplated by it the creditor should make a demand on the debtor to pay the debt to himself. The creditor is perfectly competent to direct his debtor to make payment to a third party under such notice. A Court receiver appointed in a suit for partition of joint family properties issued a notice under S. 434, Companies Act calling upon the company to pay the debt due to the family to the Additional Collector, Bombay, who had attached the debt by issuing a prohibitory order on the company, for satisfaction of the family dues on account of income-tax.

Held, that the notice was not defective but was in accordance with S. 434, Companies Act. It would have been perfectly open to the Company, on receipt of such notice from the Court Receiver, if so minded, to secure or compound for the debt to the reasonable satisfaction of the Court Receiver. 67 Bom LR 294: ILR (1965) Bom 531: AIR 1966 Bom 4 (10) (Pt B) (Pr 10) (DB).

——S. 434 (1) (a) — Company unable to pay its debts — Presumption as to, when arises — Debt due by company to creditor attached by prohibitory order — Notice calling upon company to pay debt to attaching creditor — No such presumption arises.

If the conditions which have been laid down in Cl. (a) of sub-section (1) of S. 434 are complied with, there is a presumption that a company is unable to pay its debt. For such a presumption to arise, there must be a creditor to whom the Company is owing a sum exceeding Rs. 500, secondly such a creditor must serve a notice making a demand for the sum so due, upon the Company by delivering the same at its registered office and lastly, if the Company neglects to pay the said amount within three weeks of such service of the notice the Company would be deemed to be unable to pay its debt. Where by the statutory notice issued under S. 434, the Court Receiver, had in fact called upon the company to make payment to the income-tax authorities in order to liquidate the income-tax dues for non-payment of which the debt had been attached, it cannot be contended that because of the subsisting attachment of the debt at the instance of the income-tax authorities, the company was unable to comply with the requisitions contained in the statutory notice served by the Court Receiver. On the contrary, direct compliance of the statutory notice would have resulted in the payment of the income-tax dues and the attachment obviously would have fallen to the ground. 67 Bom LR 294: ILR (1965) Bom 531: AIR 1966 Bom 4 (11, 12) (Pt C) (Prs 12, 13) (DB).

——S. 434 — Inability to pay debt — Under S. 433 or S. 434 if the debt is disputed bona fide there is neither inability nor negligence to pay. See Ibid, S. 433. AIR 1962 Cal 613.

——S. 434 (1) (a) — General Clauses Act (1897), S. 27 — Evidence Act (1872), Ss. 114, 16 — Delivery of letter of demand — Letter sent by registered post returned as refused — Effect — Omission of word 'private' in the name of a Private Ltd., company — Effect.

The meaning of the expression 'delivered' in respect of a registered letter cannot be limited to cases where the registered letter is accepted by the addressee. A tender of a registered letter which is refused by the addressee is as good a delivery as a letter which is accepted. Where a registered letter of demand, which is properly addressed to the company, comes back with the endorsement of refusal made by the postal peon, the ordinary presumption which arises in the case of service by registered post under S. 27 of the General Clauses Act and Ss. 114 and 16 of the Evidence Act is available to the creditor. The creditor can rely on the endorsement of refusal for proof of the fact that the letter had been duly delivered or tendered to the company, but it refused to accept the letter. A letter of demand cannot be said to be not properly addressed by mere omission of the word 'Private' in the name of a private limited company, if there is no other company of similar name at the address given. (1962) 32 Comp Cas 575: AIR 1961 Cal 439 (440, 441, 442) (Pt B) (Prs 13, 14) (DB).

——S. 434 (1) (a) — Transfer of share effected after declaration of dividend — It cannot convey title to transferee to receive payment of dividend already declared — In such case transferor alone can be regarded as creditor of the company so as to entitle him to sustain a petition for winding up of the company if the dividend is not paid in compliance with the provisions of S. 206. See Ibid, S. 206. (1964) 2 Mad LJ 12: AIR 1964 Mad 519 (DB).

——S. 434 (1) (a) — Existence of debt disputed by company — Discretion of Court.

Where a creditor's petition for winding up is contested by the company on the ground that no debt is due to him, the Court should ordinarily investigate the question and if it finds that the defence is a substantial one it has a discretion to direct the creditor to establish his claim in an independent action. It has also an equal discretion to decide the dispute particularly in cases where the defence to the claim is unsubstantial and once it is proved that the debt is due to the petitioning creditor, it should proceed with the winding up petition. ——S. 434 (1) (a) — Scope — From the mere fact that the liabilities of a Company as found in the affidavit of the Registrar of Companies filed in Court far exceed its assets it does not necessarily follow that the Company is unable to pay its debts within the meaning of Ss. 433 (e) and 434 (1) (a). See Ibid, S. 433 (e). AIR 1964 Mad 191.

——S. 434 (1) (a) — 'Creditor' — Who is.

The word 'creditor' is not defined in the Companies Act and therefore that term must be construed in the ordinary broad sense, as including one who has a pecuniary claim against the company. (1960) 30 Com Cas 324: AIR 1959 Tripura 41 (44) (Pt C) (Pr 11).

——S. 434 — Judgment-debt — If can form foundation for winding up petition.

The mere fact that an appeal is pending does not prevent the judgment-debt from being made the foundation of a winding up petition unless stay of execution of the decree is obtained pending the disposal of the appeal. So also, the mere fact that the company has put forward a claim against the decree-holder and the claim is pending adjudication by the Court, does not make the claim based on the judgment-debt which arises out of a decree passed after contest, a disputed debt. (1962) 32 Comp Cas 575: AIR 1961 Cal 439 (441, 442, 443) (Pt C) (Prs 3, 4, 5) (DB).

4. Sub-section (1) (c).

——Ss. 434 (1) (c) and 433 (e) — Inability to pay debts — Factors to be considered — Fixed assets, plant and machinery necessary for carrying on business of Company must be taken into account in determining its solvency.

On an application to wind up a Company on the ground of its insolvency, the fixed assets and the plant and machinery, which are necessary for carrying on the business of the Company, cannot be ignored. The question to be considered is whether the company is able to meet its current demands and whether its existing and probable assets would suffice to meet future demands. That, if all the demands were forthwith made upon it, it would be able to meet the demands only by mortgaging or selling its capital assets, perhaps closing down, does not mean that it is insolvent. ——S. 434 (1) (c) — 'Liabilities' — Meaning of— Liability must be a debt — Paid-up share capital is not liability.

A company does not owe its members the share money paid by them; the members have no right to ask for the return of the money paid by them. Even in a winding up, what the members get if they get anything at all, is not a return of their share money, but their rateable share of any surplus left after satisfying the creditors, and this share may be less or more than the share money paid. It is true that ordinarily the Court does not go behind the Company's balance sheet to ascertain its financial position, but this does not mean that the mere fact that a particular item appears in the balance sheet under the head 'liabilities' conclusively establishes that that item is a liability of the company in the sense in which the word 'liability' is used in S. 434 (1) (c). Notwithstanding that the word, 'liabilities' and not the word 'debt' is used in that provision when referring to the contingent and prospective liabilities of the company, it is quite apparent that the liability referred to therein must be a debt which the company has, or might or will have, to pay, something which cannot be said with regard to its paid-up share capital. ——S. 434 (1) (a) and (c) — Demand under Cl. (a) found to be invalid — Creditor can still prove under Cl. (c) debtor's inability to pay debts.

A proper demand made in accordance with the provisions of S. 434 (1) (a) only gives the benefit of the presumption that arises under it, but if the demand is found to be invalid for any reason then it is still open to the creditor to fall back upon S. 434 (1) (c) and prove that the company cannot pay its debts. SECTION 437.

——S. 437 — Applicability — Proceedings for winding up in Court having no inherent jurisdiction — Power of High Court to direct proceedings to be retained and continued in that Court.

S. 437 can apply only to a case where there is a defect of territorial jurisdiction and not a case where there is an inherent want of competence regarding the subject-matter of the proceeding. Where in respect of a matter (winding up) regarding which no jurisdiction whatsoever has been conferred on a District Court under S. 10 (2) of the Act, a District Court can never be the Court within the meaning of that term as defined in S. 2 (11) and as used in S. 437, and the High Court cannot direct under S. 437 that the District Court in which proceedings for winding up have been commenced retain and continue the proceedings. ILR (1961) 1 Ker 230: 1961 Ker LT 481: 1961 Ker LJ 702: (1961) 31 Com Cas 641: AIR 1962 Ker 64 (65, 66) (Prs 2, 3, 4).

SECTION 439.

SYNOPSIS.

(Companies Act (1956), S. 439.)

1. Scope.
2. Form of petition.
3. Creditor's application.
4. Contributory's application.

1. Scope.

——S. 439 — Company incorporated outside India carrying on business in India — Winding up as unregistered company — Foreign creditors can prove their claims. See Companies Act (1913), S. 156. AIR 1962 SC 500.

——S. 439 — Winding up petition — Motive of petitioner irrelevant when proper materials are before Court.

Once a party had put proper materials before the Court making out a prima facie case for winding up, it would be irrelevant to consider the motive with which the petition was presented. AIR 1955 Bom 355, Foll. 67 Bom LR 294: ILR (1965) Bom 531: AIR 1966 Bom 4 (12, 13) (Pt D) (Pr 15) (DB).

——S. 439 — Rule of estoppel — Applicability — Person making winding up petition not denying truth of various things to which he was party but raising contentions on basis that those things were injurious to interest of company — Rule of estoppel does not apply. See Evidence Act (1872), S. 115. AIR 1965 Cal 98.

——S. 439 — Petition under S. 153-C of Companies Act (1913) with alternative relief of winding up — Petitioner can abandon relief under S. 153-C and claim relief of winding up. See Companies Act (1913), S. 166. AIR 1962 Guj 269.

——Ss. 439, 442 — Companies (Court) Rules (1959), R. 96 — Winding up petition — Duty and power of Court — Petition if admitted can be stayed or admission can be revoked.

The very institution of a winding up petition against a company, more so its advertisement, adversely affects the reputation of the company, and, if done without reasonable and probable cause, is a wrong which can be restrained by suit. It is also the duty of the Court before admitting a winding up petition especially one brought by a contributory, to satisfy itself that there are prima facie grounds; and even after the Court has admitted a petition, it can, on being moved for the purpose by the company or some other interested person, stay proceedings and revoke the admission. (1964) 1 Com LJ 257: 1964 Ker LJ 550: (1964) 2 Ker LR 241: AIR 1964 Ker 212 (213, 214) (Pt A) (Pr 2).

——S. 439 — Winding of Banking Company — Court's power to act suo motu — (Banking Companies Act (1949), Ss. 37, 38, and 45-K (2)).

A winding up order cannot ordinarily be passed without a petition under S. 439 of the new Act. Such a petition is not necessary, however, in two cases: (1) when the affairs of a Bank come to the notice of the Court by reason of an application for moratorium under S. 37 and the Court is satisfied on materials before it that the Bank is unable to pay its debts and that moratorium cannot be granted or should not be continued; and (2) when a scheme has been sanctioned by the Court and it feels satisfied that the scheme is not capable of being worked satisfactorily. In the former case, the Court has no option but to order winding up, irrespective of whether a petition under S. 439, is or is not filed. In the later case, it may, in its discretion, take action only after a petition is filed. 1959 BLJR 98: (1959) 29 Com Cas 487: AIR 1959 Pat 288 (292, 293) (Pt E) (Pr. 29).

2. Form of petition.

——S. 439 — Companies (Court) Rules, 1959, Rr. 95 and 21 — Winding up petition can be decided on affidavits alone.

There are no provisions in the Act or the rules made thereunder to show that an order of winding up has to be made on oral evidence alone and not on the affidavits, statutory or otherwise. The Companies Act like some other enactments also speaks of affidavits and counter-affidavits. Of course that does not mean that oral evidence is barred. All that it contemplates is that for proceedings like these which need expeditious disposal affidavit evidence is more appropriate. No doubt even in case of affidavit evidence which must be based as a rule on personal knowledge of the deponent and not on his mere belief, it is open to the other party if he challenges the correctness of the statements made therein to request the Court to summon the deponent for cross-examination. It is thus clear that the affidavit evidence is not only permissible in matters like this, but also is the most desirable way to effectuate the speedy disposal of matters justly and properly. There is nothing in the Act to suggest that for the disposal of the petition oral evidence is a sine qua non and that the Court cannot act upon affidavits alone and dispose of the case if it is satisfied that the averments in the petition have been substantiated and there are justifying grounds for passing a winding up order. On the other hand, the Act and rules refer only to affidavits which being statutory must have their due weight and significance.

Specially when the affidavit by petitioner creditor for winding up has not been opposed or when opposition affidavits have been withdrawn and the opposition has consented to the winding-up, there can be no occasion for calling any other evidence in support of the petitioner's affidavit. (1965) 2 Com LJ 317: (1966) 1 Andh WR 38: (1966) 1 Andh LT 289: AIR 1966 Andh Pra 285 (287) (Pt A) (Prs 3, 4) (DB).

——Ss. 439, 443 — Winding up petition — Amendment to introduce new matter — Subsequent events.

In the ordinary circumstances the petitioners for winding up must be kept confined within the bounds of the allegations made by them in the petition. Where, however, an extraordinary situation has arisen on account of subsequent events and when it is possible for the Court to consider the new material in the existing petition itself, it would not be proper to drive the petitioners to file a fresh petition merely on the technical ground that the amendment would introduce new matter when neither the company nor the shareholders were likely to be taken by surprise, if the amendment was allowed. 63 Bom LR 815: 1961 Nag LJ 672: (1962) 32 Com Cas 215: AIR 1962 Bom 133 (137) (Pt A) (Pr 7).

——S. 439 — Petition for winding up not properly signed — Effect — If fatal.

The legal consequence of a petition for winding up not being properly signed by the petitioner is a mere irregularity which can be cured at any time. ——S. 439 — Petition for winding up on ground of indebtedness of company — Petition itself must be self-sufficient to prove the case — (C. P. Code (1908), O. 7, R. 1 and O. 6, R. 2.)

A petitioner who applies for winding up of a company on the ground that the company is unable to pay its debts, must make out sufficient grounds in the petition itself and if such grounds have not been so made out, the Court is not entitled to take notice of other evidence that may be produced in the affidavit of other parties. Nor should the Court allow the petitioner an opportunity to introduce further evidence regarding indebtedness by fresh affidavit to be filed by him. 3. Creditor's application.

——S. 439 (1) (b) — Petition for winding up — Creditor's application — Creditor whether a corporation or department of State Government — Test to determine whether institution is corporation — Held petitioner was State Government and not corporation and as Art. 149, Limitation Act, applied its claim was not barred.

Held, (1) that the recitals in the mortgage-deed and the Hyderabad Industrial Fund Rules, 1347 (H), as amended by the Hyderabad Industrial Fund Rules, (An. P. Amendment) Act, 1957, showed that the Industrial Fund was a department of the erstwhile Government of H. E. H. the Nizam, (2) that none of the attributes essential to a corporation existed in the case of this Fund which had no separate legal existence. It was a department of the State. One of the tests to find whether an institution is a corporation or a department of the Government is to enquire whether the undertaking functions as a responsible independent organisation and not as part of any department of State. Another test would be to see whether it is endowed with the capacity to contract obligations and of suing and being sued. Further, the power to possess, use and change a seal is incidental to a corporation and a corporation aggregate can, as a general rule, only act or express its will by deed under its common seal. (1949) 2 All ER 327 and (1898) AC 667, Disting.; (3) that the claim made by the petitioner, namely, the State of Andhra Pradesh, was governed by Art. 149, Limitation Act, 1908, and was not barred by limitation. ILR (1962) Andh Pra 195: AIR 1963 Andh Pra 479 (481 to 484) (Prs 10, 14, 16, 18) (DB).

——S. 439 (1) (b) and (2) — Trust deed for repayment of debentures — Petition for winding up by trustees — Burden of proof — Procedure.

As between the company and a creditor, a creditor, who is unable to obtain payment of his debts is entitled ex debito justitiae to an order for winding up of the company on proof that the company is unable to pay its debts. The Court will dismiss a winding up petition by a person claiming to be creditor of the company if the petitioner does not affirmatively establish that he is in fact such a creditor. (1865) 11 HLC 389, Relied on; (1879) 10 Ch D 681 and AIR 1917 Cal 39 (FB), Distinguished. The objection that the petitioners are not creditors can be taken by an opposing unsecured creditor. Every creditor of the company is entitled to appear at the hearing and oppose the order for winding up. If the petition is liable to be dismissed on the ground that the petitioners are not creditors of the company or on the ground that there is a serious dispute on that question and that dispute cannot be resolved on the affidavits, that contention is open to all those who are entitled to oppose the petition.

Where the petitioners present the winding up petition on the ground that they are trustees for holders of debentures appointed by the debenture trust deed and as such creditors within the meaning of sub-section (1) (b), read with sub-section (2) of S. 439 and there is a serious dispute on the questions whether the debentures were issued without any consideration and whether the debentures and the debenture trust deed were fictitious documents and were brought into existence by the company with a view to defeat and delay the claim of its creditors, which cannot be resolved on affidavits the Court will not pass a winding up order. AIR 1960 Cal 764 (767, 768) (Prs 12, 16, 17, 18, 13, 15) (DB).

——S. 439 — Winding up petition by creditor — Disputed debt — Effect of.

A petition for winding up with a view to enforcing payment of a disputed debt is an abuse of the process of the Court. But if it is shown that the alleged dispute is not a bona fide one, the objection to the petition fails.

Where a company after again and again begging for time, for payment of a debt, sprang on the petitioner, at the last moment the assertion that the debt was a disputed one and hinted at conspiracies and frauds in the taking over the assets of another company and the formation of the present company:

Held, that it might not be a case of a disputed debt and the petition for winding up would be allowed. (1961) 31 Comp Cas 84: AIR 1960 Mad 254 (255, 256) (Prs 5, 6).

——S. 439 — Winding up of banking company — Application by Depositors' Association — Maintainability.

Section 439 of the Companies Act, 1956, gives a list of those who can apply for the winding up of a company. Hence an application for winding up of a Banking Company filed by the Depositors' Association of the Bank is not maintainable under S. 439 when it has not been shown that the Association is a legal entity or that it is one of the parties in the list given in S. 439. 1959 BLJR 98: (1959) 29 Com Cas 487: AIR 1959 Pat 288 (289) (Pt A) (Pr 6).

——S. 439 — Shareholder's petition for winding up — Majority of shareholders against winding up — Considerations for Court — Wishes of majority to prevail. See Companies Act (1913), S. 166. AIR 1962 Guj 269.

——Ss. 439 (3) and 443 (2) — Winding up — Fully paid-up shareholder is entitled to make petition — Order cannot be made unless he makes out special case on just and equitable grounds — Ground of Company's insolvency is virtually unavailable to him.

A fully paid-up shareholder is contributory under S. 428 and though, therefore, he is entitled to bring an application for winding up, the fact remains that ordinarily he has nothing to lose by the continuance of the Company and nothing to gain by its winding up, or, in other words, he has no interest in a winding up. Although, in the fact of sub-section (3) of S. 439 this is no disqualification, it has an important bearing on the 'just and equitable' aspect of the matter as also on the exercise of the discretion vested in the Court by S. 433. The Court is not readily moved to exercise its discretion by a person who is not really aggrieved; nor is it readily persuaded by such a person that it is just and equitable that a company should be wound up. In the generality of cases, he would have some adequate remedy other than a winding up so that sub-section (2) of S. 443 would come into play. Unless, therefore, he makes out a very special case, the ground of Company's inability to pay its debts is virtually unavailable to him. The case usually made out is that it is just and equitable that the company should be wound up because the substratum of the company is gone, in other words, because the main object for which the company was formed has become impracticable. ——Ss. 441, 450, 456, 457, 536—Disposition of property by directors and disbursement of the amount thus obtained towards salary arrears of staff and directors' remunerations, between date of presentation of winding up petition and winding up order are void.

The effect of S. 536 (2) is that Director or any other employee who has disposed of the property of the company becomes liable for all monies of the company expended by him since the commencement of the winding up. It is, of course, open to a Court to validate transactions bona fide entered into by the company for its benefit. Under Ss. 456 and 457 (3) the company's property, after the appointment of provisional liquidator has to be in his custody, subject to the control of the Court. So long as the order of the appointment of the provisional liquidator is operative, the powers of the Directors must remain in abeyance. Since under S. 441 (2), the winding up of a company by the Court in cases other than those of voluntary winding up shall be deemed to commence at the time of presentation of the petition for the winding up, all dispositions of the property of the company made between the date of the presentation of the petition for winding up and the winding up order, unless of course the Court otherwise orders, are void: 1897 A. C. 575 and AIR 1930 Mad 1012, Rel. on.

The compromise made by the directors of the company (Bank in liquidation) with the company's judgment-debtor and selling the property mortgaged by the judgment-debtor with the company free of the mortgage, after the appointment of a provisional liquidator of the company is not in accordance with law.

On proof of disbursement towards the remuneration of the manager which was not due and towards the remuneration of the directors (even though they refunded the amount later on), the case falls within the purview of S. 543 (1) (a). The Court has to satisfy itself that there has been a breach of trust; and, further, that this has resulted in a pecuniary loss to the company. Once a case is made out under (a) it is not further necessary to bring the case under (b) as well, in view of disjunctive 'or' inserted between (a) and (b) of S. 543 (1). The applicant must show (i) mis-application, retention or liability or accountability for any money or property of the company, (ii) breach of trust or misfeasance in the nature of breach of trust or duty, (iii) resultant loss therefrom, and (iv) an interest in the result of the application. (1963) 33 Com Cas 1043: AIR 1962 Punj 433 (438, 439, 440) (Pt B) (Prs 29, 30, 33, 37).

——Ss. 443 and 484 — Ex parte petition for winding up — Procedure and practice — Appeal — — (High Court Rules and Orders — Bombay High Court Original Side Rules, R. 733).

The principle underlying R. 733 is that a petition should not be heard on merits without giving an opportunity to all persons who are interested in the company from coming up before the Court and putting before the Court their point of view. It is open to present a petition ex parte for the winding up in which case the company Judge may accept or may not accept it. He may, on perusing the petition, reject it. Where he chooses to accept it, the practice followed by the Bombay High Court indicated is for the company Judge to direct that a notice should be given to the Company.

Failure of the company Judge to exercise his jurisdiction and hear the party, would make his order appealable under S. 202, Companies Act of 1913. (S. 484 of 1956 Act). 60 Bom LR 1240: (1959) 29 Com Cas 127: ILR (1958) Bom 1237: AIR 1959 Bom 170 (171, 172) (Prs 2, 3, 4) (DB).

——S. 443 (1) (a)—Winding up — Powers of Court — Object of winding up on ground of indebtedness only ostensible and not real—Court cannot order winding up of company.

Where the machinery of winding up is sought to be set in motion for purposes other than to secure a winding up of the company, and where the real object is something other than winding up, and the claim for winding up is the ostensible but not the real object of the petitioner, the Court will not lend its aid to the petitioning creditor by making an order for winding up of the company. (1894) 2 Ch. 349, Rel. on.

The petitioner-Company P had applied for an order for winding up of C Company on the ground that C was indebted to P, C did not raise any objection, but on the contrary, had readily obliged P by sending it an acknowledgment of its liability and also an admission of its inability to pay debts. It was proved that same group of persons were controlling both P and C and one of them besides being a director of P and C, was also a director of another company which claimed to be a creditor of C. The application was resisted by A, who was in possession of a colliery of C under an agreement, and had advanced considerably large sums of money for the working of mines. But the directors of C, after having failed to obtain further loans from A, were trying to oust him from the possession of C's colliery and after having failed to gain that object, they caused P to commence winding up proceedings in order to remove him from the possession of C's colliery.

Held, on facts and circumstances of the case, that the application was an abuse of the process of Court. The fact that C did not raise any objection lends strong support to the conclusion that this application was collusive and the real object of the P was not to obtain a winding up order of C for the benefit of the creditors but something else, namely, to compel A to part with possession of the colliery in favour of the Official Liquidator to be appointed by the Court. (1964) 2 Com LJ 178: (1965) 35 Com Cas 180: ('65) 69 Cal WN 1.

In an application for winding up it can either dismiss the petition or make an order for winding up of the company and once it is found that the winding up petition cannot be sustained, it will be the duty of the Court under S. 443 to dismiss it. —Ss. 445 (3), 530 — Industrial Disputes Act (1947), Ss. 2 (OO), 25-FFF — Words and Phrases — 'Retrenchment' — Termination of services of employees upon winding up of Bank — Compensation payable to them in terms of contract of employment and statutory retrenchment compensation distinguished — Discharge under S. 445 (3) of Companies Act whether 'retrenchment' under S. 2 (OO) of the Industrial Disputes Act — Benefit under S. 25-FFF, if employees entitled to.

'Retrenchment' connotes in its ordinary acceptation that the business itself is continued but that a portion of the staff or the labour force is discharged as surplusage. The termination of the services of all workmen as a result of the closure of its business cannot properly be described as retrenchment. AIR 1957 S. C. 95; AIR 1957 S. C. 121, Rel. on. S. 25-FFF of the Industrial Disputes Act has nothing to do with retrenchment compensation as such. The section creates a new right in the employees for compensation in case of closure. It does not merely provide for method on which compensation is to be awarded in cases of closure of business. In order to bring the assets of a company under a liability with regard to the termination of the services of its employees, there must be voluntary, active, intelligent discontinuance by the company of the employment at a time and under circumstances, when it is optional either to continue or to discontinue it. (1871) 16 Solicitor's Journal 46, Rel. on.

Held on facts, that (i) the tripartite agreement clearly showed that only those employees whose services were terminated as the result of retrenchment should get the benefit of it and the appellants whose services were continued after the retrenchment could not get the benefit of the agreement. (ii) The agreement only contemplated a gradual and phased reduction in the staff and implied that the Bank had the option of terminating the services of some employees and did not contemplate a discharge of all its employees by reason of a total closure of the business for any reason whatever. The discharge of the employees of the Bank under S. 445 (3) by reason of the winding up order excluded all possibility of a phased reduction of the staff and did not amount to retrenchment. (iii) Even assuming that there was a contract under which the employees were given the benefits claimed by the appellants, the claim made by them must fail because upon the winding up order being made, the Bank had no longer the option either to retain or retrench the services of the appellants. (iv) Consequently, the appellants, who were employees on the date the winding up order was made, could not claim the benefits, which had been rejected by the Official Liquidator, either on the basis of the tripartite agreement or on the basis of oral contracts. But they were entitled to the benefits conferred upon them by S. 25-FFF of the Industrial Disputes Act. (1871) 16 Sol. Jo. 46, Rel. on. S. 445 (3) of the Companies Act provides that once a winding up order is made, it shall be deemed to be a notice of discharge to the officers and employees of the company, except when the business of the company is continued. Where, however, though an order for winding up of the Company is made by the Company Judge that order is expressly stayed by the appellate Court which approves of and adopts a scheme for continuing the business of the company, there is no scope for holding that there is a discharge of the workers under S. 445 (3) of the Act. It would also follow that there is no closure of the mills so as to entitle the workers to closure compensation under S. 25-FFF of the Industrial Disputes Act, albeit that there might be a lay off of the workers.

"Closure" under S. 25-FFF of the Industrial Disputes Act implies complete stoppage of business and discharge of the workers thereby. It is different from a lay off. Where the Industrial Tribunal contemplates the possibility of the undertaking being reopened and the business being carried on as before, there could be no "closure". Retrenchment or "transfer", "lay off" and "closure", all these involve in one sense or another a change or stoppage of services by the workers. But there is a distinction between retrenchment or transfer, lay off and closure. Retrenchment means discharge of surplus labour by the employer otherwise than by way of punishment. The business continues to be run by the same employer. In the case of a transfer of the business, there is a change of employer which ordinarily imports a fresh contract of service between the workers on the one hand and the new employer on the other. In the case of a transfer, in one sense, the old service ceases and a new one comes into existence. The case of closure is different. The business stops and there is a termination of service thereby. It may be that as a result of the stoppage of business, its undertaking and goodwill are sold to a third party and the latter employs the same workers. That would be a case of a new contract of service between the workers and the purchaser. The old employer in such a case has no further interest in the business. The Industrial Disputes Act provides for compensation in all these cases by Ss. 25-F, 25-FF and 25-FFF.

Where there is only a lease of the factory or undertaking as a going concern and the employer (company) continues to have title to and owns the undertaking (mills) and the factory continues to work with the same old employees who were being engaged when the company was directly managing the affairs of the mills, there cannot be said to be any closure or discharge of workmen or retrenchment or transfer, there having been no transfer of the goodwill of the Company. Hence, in such a case, the provisions of S. 25-FFF have no application and the workers cannot have any claim to closure compensation under that section. (1963) 2 Mad LJ 273: (1963) 2 Comp LJ 113: AIR 1964 Mad 158 (159, 160, 161, 162) (Prs 5, 12, 13, 14, 17) (DB).

C., O. 29, R. 1 — Companies Act (7 of 1913), S. 172 — Representative of company need not be arrayed as party — Naming the company as party without indicating who its representative is, is sufficient.

Held, 'proceeding' mentioned in S. 446 of the Companies Act, 1956, comprehends only the steps in action, taken by a party, but not the Court's orders thereon, and therefore a dismissal of a suit instituted by a company, is not a proceeding against the company within the meaning of that section. It is not essential that the representatives of a company should appear on the array of parties to an action concerning the Company. A comparison of the provisions of Ss. 29 and 32 of the Civil Procedure Code and of the several illustrative forms of Title of suits in Appendix A to the Code would show that it is enough to name the company itself as a party to the proceeding, without indicating who its physical representative is. 3. Suit or proceedings against the company.

——S. 446 — Proceedings against company — Decree-holder attaching debt due to Bank in execution of decree — Final order passed under C. P. Code, O. 21, R. 46-B (Ker) before winding up of bank — Proceedings in execution of order against garnishee are not proceedings against Bank, order having been passed before winding up.

As the order nisi having been served on the garnishee (respondent) and having been made final and absolute, on the terms of O. 21. R. 46-B (Ker), C. P. C. before the winding up of the bank (judgment-debtor) the appellant decree-holder is entitled to execute that order as a decree against the garnishee regardless of the fact, that the right of the decree-holder had sprung from the judgment recovered against the bank. A proceeding to execute the final order against the garnishee cannot be construed to be a proceeding against the bank and is not within the prohibition of S. 446 of the Companies Act. 1964 Ker LJ 21: (1964) 1 Com LJ 83: ILR (1964) 1 Ker 475: (1964) 1 Ker LR 259: AIR 1965 Ker 47 (48, 49) (Pt B) (Prs 4, 5, 6).

——S. 446 (as amended by Companies Act (1960) — Scope — 'Proceeding' meaning of — Permission of Company Judge to continue proceedings started by the Company when necessary.

Where a company has initiated a proceeding in a Court of law whether before or after the winding up order, no permission of the Company Judge is needed for continuing the proceedings. Permission of the Company Judge under the section is required only where proceedings are started with the object of fastening liability on the company or with the intention of escaping a liability in respect of a claim which has not been brought into Court by the Company itself. The word 'proceeding' in S. 446 comprehends only the steps on action taken by a party, but not the orders passed thereon by the Court. A dismissal of a suit instituted by a company, therefore, is not a proceeding against the company within the meaning of the section. 4. Application for leave—Requirements.

——S. 446 (as amended by Act 65 of 1960) — Application for leave to file suit against company in liquidation — Practice and procedure — Annexing of copy of intended plaint — No provision either in the Companies Act or the Rules thereunder compelling applicants to do so — Application for leave cannot, therefore, be dismissed for non-affixing copy of intended plaint, though such production could be said to have been more satisfactory. 69 Cal WN 628: (1965) 1 Com LJ 328.

5. Leave by Court.

——Ss. 446 and 483 — Scope — Order refusing leave to institute suit — Appeal.

The object of S. 446 is to save the company which is being wound up, from unnecessary litigation and to protect its assets for equitable distribution among its creditors and its shareholders. The consequence of the winding up order, therefore is that no suit can be filed against the company without obtaining leave of the Court. In dealing with an application for leave, the Court has necessarily to consider the interest of the company and to see its assets are not wasted in frivolous and unnecessary litigation. An order or decision on such an application is, therefore, clearly an order or decision in the matter of winding up. It is not a procedural order. An appeal, therefore lies against such an order or decision under S. 483 of the Act. The opening words in Cl. (2) of S. 446 of the Companies Act, (1956), no doubt confer jurisdiction on the winding up Court to entertain or dispose of any suit or proceeding by or against the company. They enable the winding up Court to do what it otherwise could not. These words are capable of taking away the jurisdiction of other competent Courts or confer exclusive jurisdiction on the winding up Court in conjunction with other words or provision of the section. However, this sentence does not contain any words which expressly take away the jurisdiction of other competent Courts. The word "jurisdiction" in Cl. (2) is not preceded by the word 'exclusive' or words to similar effect as in the Bombay Rent Act.

The words "suit has been instituted", "claim or question has arisen" in sub-cl. (d) of Cl. (2) of S. 446 have reference to suit or application or claim or question pending in a Court other than the winding up Court. The words "is instituted", "arises" or "is made" also suggest that such a suit or claim or application is made after the date of winding up of the Company. Thus sub-cl. (d) of Cl. (2) presupposes concurrent jurisdiction of the winding up Court with any other competent Court. This is made patent by Cl. (3) which gives discretionary power or jurisdiction to the winding up Court to transfer such claim, question and application pending in a Court other than the winding up Court. In such matters, therefore the winding up Court has no exclusive jurisdiction, but its jurisdiction is concurrent.

In the instant case the property was situated in Bombay, the alleged lease was given in Bombay, the monthly tenancy after the expiry of the original lease was also created in Bombay; further the notice to quit was given from Bombay and possibly, the actual occupant, if any, was also an ordinary resident of Bombay. Consequently prima facie, it would be onerous upon the applicants to direct them to file the suit in Calcutta, for such a suit would entail inter alia considerable extra expenses to the applicants who were intended to be relieved by the Bombay Act. Leave was therefore, given to the applicant to file a suit for recovery of possession of premises in the Small Cause Court at Bombay, on condition that the applicants deposit Rs. 300 in the Court here towards the expenses of the liquidator. 69 Cal WN 628: (1965) 1 Com LJ 328.

——S. 446 — Winding-up — Institution of proceedings after the passing of winding-up order — Leave, whether condition precedent — Subsequent leave, whether can be granted — Words and Phrases — 'Commenced'.

The institution of proceedings is not affected by the want of leave and the worst that can be said is that any proceeding taken by the Court before the grant of the leave would be bad, a defect which can be remedied, if necessary, by taking the proceeding afresh after leave has been granted. The bar is not against the party instituting the legal proceeding but against the Court commencing the adjudication thereof by the issue of process. The word 'commenced' occurring in S. 446 of the Companies Act, 1956 must, in relation to the words 'suit or other legal proceeding' be understood in the English sense as meaning the issue of process by the Court rather than the presentation of the plaint or other paper by which a legal proceeding is instituted. 6. Secured creditor — Position of.

——S. 446 — Company winding up — Secured creditor — Decree creating valid charge—Decree-holder can proceed against assets without leave of winding up Court.

A secured creditor is outside the winding up and he can realise his security without the leave of the winding up Court and when there is a valid charge in favour of the decree-holder it is open to him to proceed against the assets of the company without the leave of the Court. AIR 1955 SC 604, Foll. 1960 Andh LT 460.

——Ss. 446 and 460 (6) — Winding up proceedings — Position of secured creditor in — Leave of Court to enforce security — Discretion of Court.

A mortgagee cannot against his will be dragged into the winding up proceedings. His remedy to realise his security remains unaffected by the insolvency of the debtor. The rights of the mortgagee are paramount and when a company goes into liquidation it is only the property of the company which comes under the control of the Court or its Official Liquidator. The interest which had previously passed to the mortgagee is separate and distinct and is not brought in. The liquidator may redeem the mortgage but he cannot prevent the mortgagee exercising his rights under the mortgage. If, however, the secured creditor seeks the assistance of the Court for the purpose of enforcing his security he must obtain the leave of the winding up Court under S. 171 of the old Act of 1913 which corresponds to S. 446 of the Indian Companies Act, 1956. AIR 1955 SC 604 and AIR 1929 All 353 (FB), Rel. on. Even when leave has not been obtained under S. 446 in the first instance the defect can be cured by subsequently obtaining the leave. ('50) Cal WN 812, Rel. on.

The expression 'other legal proceeding' in S. 446 should not be construed ejusdem generis with the word "suit", preceding it, but the expression includes all legal proceedings.

Where the provisional liquidator dispossessed the mortgagee Bank and obtained possession of the mortgage security and the mortgagee Bank applied under S. 446 for obtaining possession of the mortgage security without previously obtaining leave of Court and in the alternative for leave to file a suit for possession against the liquidator.

7. Winding up order — Effect.

——S. 446 — Winding up order — Effect of — Winding up order must be deemed to have had the effect of, even in the absence of any formal order, of automatically confirming an interim stay order. 1958 Cr LJ 1439: ILR (1958) Punj 2014: AIR 1958 Punj 445 (449) (Pt B) (Pr 4) (DB).

8. Appointment of provisional liquidator.

——S. 446 (1) — Applicability — Industrial dispute between company and workmen pending — Proceedings and award after liquidation without leave of Court — If void.

On the wording of S. 446 (1) of the Companies Act, 1956, which makes a significant departure from the language of S. 171 of the Act of 1913, the appointment of the provisional liquidator does not affect the continuance of a pending proceeding, and leave of the winding up Court is required only for commencing a new proceeding. But, once a winding up order is made, even the continuance of a pending proceeding can only be, by leave of the Court and subject to such terms as the Court may impose.

Section 446 of the Companies Act can have no application to proceedings pursuant to a reference under S. 10 of the Industrial Disputes Act. AIR 1957 Pat 722, Rel. on. The proceedings must be for the enforcement of something in the nature of a personal right against the assets of the company and not one in vindication of a public interest.

A suit or proceeding for which leave is necessary under sub-section (1) must be a suit or proceeding capable of being withdrawn and disposed of by the winding up Court.

No part of this amount had been deposited in the bank or kept in the office of the company. This money had been retained by the directors. In consequence of the orders made by the Court a sum of Rs. 4,854.90 nP. had been deposited in the company's account with the State Bank of Patiala at Bhatinda. Thus out of Rs. 91,000 received as consideration for the sale of transport vehicles there was left with the company a very small sum of Rs. 5,015.45 nP.

Under an agreement with a limited banking concern, the appellant was appointed the chairman of the company on a term of 20 years from the date of registration of the company on a salary of Rs. 2,000 p.m. The appellant was not to be removed from the said office except for fraud or gross mismanagement. After continuing to function for 10 years, the Bank stopped its business following the order of the Central Government.

Then in consequence of an application by a creditor of the Bank it was wound up.

The appellant claimed that, he was entitled to his salary at the contractual rate for the agreed period.

Held, (per Gurtu and C. B. Agarwala, JJ., Upadhya, J., dissenting) that the contract had not become void because of the Banking Company going into liquidation. The appellant must be deemed to have been dismissed and therefore, he could enforce the contract. The doctrine of frustration of contracts as embodied in Ss. 56 and 32 of the Contract Act, was not applicable to the default which led to the winding up order by the Bank (the promisor).

In a case like this, justice, equity and good conscience dictate that deduction to be made should be of half the amount which is found to be the present value of the appellant's claim. (1957) 27 Com Cas 310 : ILR (1958) 1 All 407 : AIR 1957 All 143 (146, 148, 149, 150, 151) (Pt C) (Prs 12, 13, 16, 33, 35, 36, 48) (DB).

●——S. 457 — Companies Act (1913), S. 179 — Sanction of Court for criminal prosecution of managing director — Sanction when not necessary.

There is nothing in S. 179, Companies Act, 1913, which can be construed as restricting the powers of the Court to take cognisance of an offence or the powers of the police to initiate prosecution or even of a private citizen to move the machinery of the Criminal Courts to bring an offender like the managing director of a company to justice. For a prosecution for breach of trust even by a director of a company no such condition precedent as the previous sanction of any authority is contemplated by law, unless it is a prosecution in the name and on behalf of the company by the official liquidator who has to incur expenses out of the funds of the company. Section 179 is an enabling provision to enable the liquidator to do certain things with the sanction of the Court. It does not control the general law of the land. Jaswantrai Manilal Akhaney v. Section 457 can only mean that the liquidator can finally dispose of the property once he has got the sanction of the Court, and it does not mean that he has power merely to invite offers and to submit them to the Court for approval. The fact that, the sale is subject to the confirmation of the Court does not mean that the Court can refuse to accept the highest bid because at a later stage some one on second thought says that he is willing to pay more. The subsequent offer of a higher bid should not be a ground for refusing confirmation of the sale provided the price is adequate. Where the property was sold by a public auction by the Official Liquidator subject to the confirmation by the Court the question whether sale should or should not have been confirmed is a matter which lies within the discretion of the Court and the discretion cannot be interfered with unless sufficient grounds have been disclosed which would justify the conclusion that the Court's discretion was not judicially exercised.

In computing the period of limitation for any suit by a company which is being wound up the period from the date of commencement of the winding up to the date on which the winding up order is made and a period for one year following the date of winding up order has to be excluded under section 458-A of the Companies Act, 1956, as amended in 1963. Article 14 of the Limitation Act, 1963 (corresponding to Article 52 of the Limitation Act, 1908), applies to a suit for recovery of the price of goods sold and delivered and not Article 120 of the Limitation Act, 1908. ——Ss. 467 and 426—English mortgage over call money — Liquidation of Company subsequent to call — Liquidator has power to settle shareholder on list of contributors.

It is competent for the official liquidator to include a shareholder whose name appears in the share register in the list of contributories in respect of the share money due from him, albeit there has been a valid mortgage (English mortgage) created over such call money by the company while it was functioning. By the execution of the English mortgage over the unpaid call-money it cannot be said that the company and the liquidator have lost all rights to call in the money and therefore, the liquidator cannot include such shareholder in the list of contributories.

S. 156 of the Companies Act, which creates a statutory liability on the part of a shareholder who was in arrears of call money or in respect of whose shares there remained moneys uncalled includes even a case where a mortgage had been created over the call moneys. AIR 1939 SC 14; (1890) 44 Ch D 534; 1895 AC 244, Rel. on.

The fact that the right of the company in regard to the unpaid shares has been assigned, cannot alter the real character of the transaction, namely, that such assignment was intended only by way of security — The assignor's right to redeem would subsist till it is put an end to or barred.

Notwithstanding the creation of a mortgage by the company over its uncalled capital, the proper procedure for the mortgagee would be to ask the company, if it is a going concern to call in the unpaid share money and pay the mortgagee, or in case the company has been directed to be wound up, to ask the liquidator to call in those moneys. 75 Mad LW 209 : (1962) 32 Com Cas 395 : ILR (1962) Mad 593 : (1962) 2 Mad LJ 17 : 1962 Mad WN 166 : AIR 1963 Mad 149 (151, 152, 153, 154) (Pt A) (Prs 7, 9, 10) (DB).

In the liquidation practically all the assets have been realised and a dividend has been declared. The object of S. 185 of the Companies Act (1913) is protection and preservation of moneys, property or documents and not the enforcement of any claims or obligations. If an officer of the company or a director were to cause loss to the company on account of his acts of misfeasance, power is given to the Court to assess damages against delinquent directors under S. 235 of the Companies Act, 1913, which corresponds to S. 543 of the present Act. Under S. 235, compensation is granted against a director or other officer of the company who has been guilty of misfeasance by way of damages for the loss caused to the company. The scope of proceedings under S. 185 is restricted. For purposes of S. 185 it has to be shown that, there is in existence a property or money or document actually in the hands of the respondent director against whom an order is to be made.

Where the allegations in the petition under S. 185 by the official liquidator itself showed that the entries in the books of the company relating to various amounts in the free gift account were false and had been fraudulently made with a view to avoid threatened action under S. 52-A, Insurance Act by the Controller of Insurance, and that payments and withdrawals in the books were fictitious and in reality nothing was given and nothing was withdrawn.

Held, that proceedings under S. 185 were misconceived and could not be resorted to by the official liquidator for ordering the Managing Director to pay back the amounts alleged to be in his hands. AIR 1962 Punj 543 (546, 547, 548) (Pt A) (Prs 28, 33).

Section 186, Companies Act, 1913, deals with recovery of debts, that is, the recovery of money due upon a contract. Where a liquidator makes an application for recovery of such moneys, then obviously the claim has to be within time. Where the demand by the liquidator for the unpaid share money is not based on the resolution of the Board of Directors, the liquidator cannot have recourse to the provisions of S. 186. 62 Bom LR 400 : (1960) 30 Com Cas 491 : AIR 1960 Bom 516 (518, 519) (Pt B) (Pr 12) (DB).

——S. 469 (1) — Application under — Limitation Act will apply — Expression "at any time" — Effect of — Any money due — Meaning of — Claim by company barred under Art. 120, Limitation Act — Application should be dismissed as barred by time.

Though an application under S. 469 (1) may not itself fall under any one or the other of the Articles of the Limitation Act, inasmuch as only an amount due can be ordered to be paid under S. 469, if the claim for the amount were barred so far as the company was concerned under Art. 120 of the Limitation Act, the application will have to be dismissed on the ground that it is barred by limitation.

The effect of the words "any time" in S. 469 (1) is not that the Court can make an order under the section without reference to the limitation prescribed by the law.

It is true that the application under S. 469 is not a suit or an application within the purview of any of the articles in the Limitation Act. But the expression "any money due" means that before an order for payment can be made under S. 469, the applicant must show that, the amount is due, and if under the law of limitation governing actions for recovery of money, the claim would be barred, it cannot be said that the amount is a sum due within the meaning of S. 469. The test will be whether if the company were to institute a suit as on the date of an application under S. 469, it would or would not be barred by time under the Limitation Act. Section 187 of the Act is a provision which empowers the Court to order in certain circumstances the payment of the liquidator of moneys which he can claim under the Statute. The Companies Act provides a form for making an application in this behalf. The liquidator should make an application in that particular form and give all the particulars which are required to be mentioned in the application. Before the Court can grant an application under S. 187, it must be satisfied that, the payment of the money sought by the liquidator is necessary to satisfy the debts and liabilities of the company and costs, charges or expenses of the winding up or for the adjustment of the rates of the contributors themselves. There is no time limit for making an application under this section. 62 Bom LR 400 : (1960) 30 Com Cas 491 : AIR 1960 Bom 516 (519) (Pt C) (Pr 14) (DB).

An article in the Articles of Association of a Company ran thus: "(a) The preference shares shall carry a dividend of six per cent subject to deduction of income-tax at source. Such dividends are calculable from the date of allotment on the amounts received by the company. (b) The preference shares shall carry the right to preferential repayment of capital in priority to the ordinary shareholders in the event of winding up, voluntary liquidation or amalgamation, with any other company for the amount paid up on the preference shares, including all dividends whether accrued or declared (current and all arrears) till the date of such winding up, liquidation or amalgamation with any other company."

Held, that the article clearly conferred on the preference shareholders a right to be paid both their share money as well as the dividends which had accrued year after year and which remained unpaid from out of the surplus assets of the company after payment of the preference share capital. Under R. 243 an application for an order for examination under S. 477 may be made ex parte, and the Company Judge may, if he is satisfied that the interest of the company will be served by the examination of a person, make the order. The order which is made ex parte is not final; it is always open to a person summoned to apply for vacating or modifying the order. The Court has jurisdiction in proper cases, i.e., where it is satisfied that the order is vexatious, or oppressive, or where other adequate grounds exist, to discharge the same.

Thus where the person sought to be examined under an order under R. 243 had been a director of the company during the period when it was alleged the affairs were mismanaged, and was likely to be in possession of information conducive to effective prosecution of the winding up, if the Judge thought it fit to order that the person be examined the order could not be regarded vexatious or oppressive.

A director of a company, past or present, is ordinarily in a position to give useful information about the affairs of the Company in winding up. In the circumstances, it must be held that the High Court was right in holding that no case was made out for modification of the ex parte order. (1879) 12 Ch. D 77, Rel. on. Satish Churn Law v. Section 477 of the Companies Act read with Rules 243 to 248 of the Companies (Court) Rules, 1959, show that a proceeding under S. 477 is a private proceeding. The statement of a liquidator produced before the Court under R. 243 of the Companies (Court) Rules, 1959, being a secret document is not open to the inspection of any person other than the liquidator save by order of Court. The Companies (Court) Rules, 1959, do not specially require that the statement of the liquidator must be kept on the file of the liquidation proceedings.

Under R. 10 of Chapter 4 of Original Side Rules also the witness cannot be allowed such inspection as he is not a party to the proceedings. AIR 1962 Cal 23 (25, 26) (Pt A) (Prs 11, 13, 14, 15) (DB).

——S. 477 — Ex parte order at instance of liquidator — Power of Court to discharge or modify on ground of being vexatious—Companies (Court) Rules, 1959, R. 9.

The inherent power of the Court which has passed an ex parte order under S. 477 of the Companies Act upon a statement by the liquidator, to discharge or modify the ex parte order where that course is necessary for the ends of justice has been preserved by R. 9 of the Companies (Court) Rules, 1959. Therefore, when a person who has been affected by the order moves the Court complaining that it is vexatious and oppressive and amounts to an abuse of the process of the Court, the Court can modify or discharge the order. Where on an application by the Official Liquidator under R. 243 (1), an ex parte order for examination of the applicants under S. 477 is drawn up and completed, the jurisdiction of the Company Court drawing up the order comes to an end and it has no jurisdiction to recall, vacate, set aside or modify the order. Nor are the applicants entitled to the inspection of the file of the proceedings of the liquidation and the statement of the Liquidator which accompanies the ex parte summons in Form No. 109. The statement of the Official Liquidator which accompanies the summons in Form No. 109 is not on oath or affirmation and as such cannot be legal evidence to form part of the proceedings of the liquidation. Rule 360 (1) of the Company Rules cannot include such statement of the Official Liquidator which merely contains certain confidential informations for the Court's consideration. (1962) 32 Com Cas 458: AIR 1961 Cal 405 (406) (Prs 5, 6, 9, 14, 17).

More particularly so, when the Rules framed under the Companies Act, 1956, have given to the party the right to a notice of the date when the report of the liquidator would be considered by the Court. If the Rules have given him the right to come to Court at the time when the matter is being considered by the Court, there is no ground for saying that, although an order is going to be made to his prejudice and in his presense, yet he must be denied the right to be heard by the Court: AIR 1955 SC 425, Foll. (1964) 34 Com Cas 952: (1964) 2 Com LJ 10: 68 Cal WN 938: AIR 1965 Cal 372 (376) (Pt B) (Prs 24, 25).

Section 478 of the Companies Act expressly states that it is only that person against whom fraud is alleged that the Court may, after considering the report, summon for public examination. It is not as if on a prima facie case of fraud by any person whatsoever, all the persons mentioned in S. 478 are liable to public examination. Such examination can only be of the particular person who has committed the fraud. The proviso to sub-s. (7) of S. 45-G of the Banking Companies Act necessarily, implied that, only a person against whom some charge has been made or suggested can be so examined. It would not proper to assume that every loss must be the result of some act or omission on the part of one or more of the persons mentioned in S. 45-G and that every director at the time must have been party to that act or omission. 1958 Ker LT 908: 1958 Ker LJ 1301: (1959) 29 Com Cas 171: AIR 1959 Ker 388 (389) (Pr 3).

But even in the case of voluntary winding up the exercise by the liquidator of the powers to make compromise or arrangement with creditors' contributories. etc., is subject to the control of the Court, and once the supervision order is made, these powers can be exercised only with the sanction of the Court. 66 Pun LR 510 : (1964) 1 Com LJ 222 : (1964) 34 Com Cas 713 : AIR 1964 Punj 472 (473, 474) (Pt B) (Prs 5, 9).

When a company goes into liquidation the effect is not to bring about a dissolution of the company. A company which has been dissolved no longer exists as a separate entity capable of holding property or of being sued in Court; but a company in liquidation, though the administration of its affairs has passed to the liquidator, retains its complete existence. If the liquidation should be annulled, the company will resume its powers. It is only after the final meeting under S. 509 of the Companies Act, 1956, that a company is deemed to be dissolved. Under S. 528 of the Act in every winding up case debts of all description are admissible to proof against the company. It cannot, therefore, be said that a money decree cannot be executed against the company in liquidation. 1958 All LJ 620 : 1958 All WR (HC) 714 : AIR 1959 All 245 (245, 246) (Prs 3, 4).

——S. 512 (1) (a) and (b) and S. 518 — Members' voluntary liquidation — Sale of movable and immovable properties by liquidator — Sanction of Court.

The meaning to be given to the words used in S. 512 (1) (b) must be the same when a company is being wound up in a members' voluntary winding up as in the case when a company is being wound up in creditors' voluntary winding up. It seems fairly clear that as far as a creditors' voluntary winding up is concerned, no sanction of the Court is required for the exercise of the power referred to in S. 512 (1) (b). The same meaning should be given to the same words when they are applied to a member's voluntary winding up. Reading the provisions of S. 512 as a whole, it is not necessary for the liquidators in a voluntary winding up to obtain the sanction of the Court for the sale of the immovable and movable properties of the company. However, as in this case the amount of the purchase price was very large and the language of the section was far from happy at the request of the parties the Court exercising its power under S. 518 of the Companies Act, 1956 accorded such sanction. 59 Bom LR 1016 : (1958) 28 Com Cas 150.

The liquidators in a creditor's voluntary winding up, do not require a sanction as contemplated by S. 512 for filing a suit. In a creditor's voluntary winding up the liquidator has to take necessary sanction to exercise any of the powers given by clauses (i) to (iv) of S. 457 (2) and not for the exercise of any other power. Clauses (i) to (iv) of S. 457 (2) do not relate to institution or defence of suits; that is covered by sub-section (1) of S. 457, for which no sanction is required. (1962) 2 Ker LR 381: (1963) 33 Com Cas 262.

——S. 518 (2) and (3) — Madras Revenue Recovery Act (2 of 1864), S. 52 — Rent due from company — Proceedings for recovery by collector — S. 518 cannot be invoked to restrain Government from recovering money in manner laid down in S. 52 of Madras Act.

Sub-section (2) is confined to situations contemplated by sub-s. (3). Consequently S. 518 does not come to the rescue of the liquidator in cases falling outside the purview of sub-s. (3). It is only when the attachment, etc., is levied or put into force either in a High Court or in any other Court, the stay would be applied for in the High Court or in the other Court having jurisdiction to wind up the company. It is clear from Ss. 52 and 59 of the Madras Revenue Recovery Act that the functionary under S. 52 is altogether different from a Civil Court. By no stretch of imagination can a collector acting under S. 52 of the Revenue Recovery Act be regarded as a Court before whom execution is levied, or attachment or distress is to be enforced. Even where a tribunal shares some of the characteristics of a Court, it cannot be called a Court. The basic, essential of a Court is that it is constituted by a State and invested with its inherent judicial power. An executive or administrative officer like a collector cannot answer the description of a Court within the connotation of sub-ss. (2) and (3) of S. 518. Hence S. 518 cannot be invoked to restrain Government from recovering money due from a company in the manner laid down in S. 52 of the Madras Revenue Recovery Act. AIR 1963 SC 874. Held, on facts (i) that once a debt (deposit) that the bank owed to A was transferred nothing was due to or could be recovered by A. AIR 1945 Bom 11, Rel. on. There can be no doubt whatsoever that if the deposit in question has been transferred to the bank, even if the transfer be not absolute but only by way of security. nothing would be due to the depositor in respect of the deposit until the loan is repaid and the security, namely the deposit, reduced. Therefore, at the commencement of the winding up, nothing would be due to the depositor, either present or future, certain or contingent, ascertained or sounding in damages, which could be admitted to proof under S. 528 of the Companies Act, 1956, and which could be set off against the loans under S. 529 of the Act read with S. 46 of the Provincial Insolvency Act, 1920, (ii) that the transaction, however, did not effect a transfer of the deposit. Because a debt can be transferred by way of security, it does not necessarily follow that a transfer is the only means by which a debt can be given as security. The word 'security', is a word of general import meaning nothing more than an assurance. Anything that makes the money more assured in its payment or more readily recoverable, is security and may range from a mere personal bond or promissory note or guarantee or even a mere pledge of something of no intrinsic value to a mortgage of property from out of which the money can be realised. (iii) that the documents namely the delivery and instruction letters did not amount merely to letters of set-off; they amounted to much more than mere letters of set-off even if they did not effect a transfer of the deposit. (iv) that the transactions created an agency in respect of the deposit by way of security for the loan an agency which, being coupled with an interest was irrevocable until repayment of the loan in full had been effected. (v) that at the most a just estimate of the value of the deposit, subject to the contingency of release from the security would be only the dividend payable in respect of the deposit and not its face value. The dividend alone would, therefore, be available for being set off. That it was by reason of the insolvency of the bank that the value of the deposits fell could make no difference. A company had entered into a contract with a firm of Builders for construction of certain buildings. The firm of Builders had defaulted in payment of Income-tax due by them, for recovery of which the Income-tax Officer issued to the Company on 11-2-1963 a notice under S. 46 (5-A) of Income-tax Act requiring the Company to pay to the Officer the money due by it to the defaulting assessee. The Company replied that the final bill had not been signed by partners. The Company did not make any payment to the Department. Steps to recover the dues under S. 46 of Income-tax Act were taken. But before any recovery could be made petition to wind up the Company was presented to High Court on 17-11-1958. The liquidator declined to accept the Department's claim on two grounds. Firstly the Company did not accept any liability in favour of the firm of Builders and that no mention of the continued existence of any such liability had been made in the Statement of Affairs filed by the Company. The second ground was that the claim had become barred by limitation. In application to the High Court the Department contended that the effect of the entries in the books of account was that the company did recognise the existence of the liability in favour of the firm. The question of limitation was also there :

Held, that the company's reply to Department read with entries in the books of account amounted to not a disclaimer for purpose of S. 46 (5-A) but an acceptance of liability. Because the Company was so statutorily bound to pay, that the Income-tax Officer could lawfully make a claim against the Company for payment of that amount. When the Company went into liquidation, it was open to the Income-tax Officer to prove the same under S. 528 of the Companies Act.

Held, further that for the money claimed on behalf of the Central Government, the Article of Limitation governing that claim would be, not Art. 56, but Art. 149. According to the latter Article, a suit by or on behalf of the Central Government is governed by a period of 60 years counted from the point of time from which limitation would have had to be computed in respect of a like suit by a private person. ILR 30 Mad 533, Applied.

The I. T. Officer, however, not entitled to preferential payment.

Taxes which are to be paid in preference according to S. 530 (1) (a) of the Companies Act are those that are due from the company to Central Government. Because the officer is statutorily entitled to make a claim against a company to pay over to him amounts due by the company to another assessee, the nature of the liability of the company corresponding to that statutory claim of the officer cannot be described as tax liability owing by the company itself. (1963) 2 Mys LJ 236.

——Ss. 528, 529 — Winding up of insolvent company — Claims by creditors — Proof of debts — Application of insolvency rules — Affidavit not the only way of proof.

S. 529 recognises the application of insolvency rules in winding up of insolvent companies. S. 49 of the Provincial Insolvency Act requires that a debt may be proved by delivering or sending by post in a registered letter to the Court an affidavit verifying the debt. It means that proof by means of affidavit is one of the ways for proving a debt. It does not mean that the debt cannot otherwise be proved by an equally satisfactory mode, as for example by the agreement transacted between the parties. 64 Punj LR 624: (1962) 32 Com Cas 454 : AIR 1963 Punj 22 (23, 24) (Pt B) (Pr 3).

When a landlord brings a suit for the recovery of rent and the tenant alleges that the amount claimed is in excess of the standard rent, it is the duty of the Court to determine the standard rent even though the tenant's application for determination of the standard rent is barred by time.

Thus where, in an application under S. 528 of the Companies Act, the creditor makes a claim for rent due for the premises occupied by the debtor company in liquidation and the latter moves for the determination of standard rent, the Court is required to determine in these proceedings the standard rent of the premises and the proviso to S. 8 (7) makes it incumbent upon the Court that the date from which the standard rent should be deemed to have effect shall in no case be earlier than six months prior to the date of taking proceedings in which the standard rent is determined. AIR 1960 Punj 164 (166, 167, 168) (Pt C) (Prs 5, 8, 10, 19, 21).

Held, the provisions of O. 8, R. 6. Civil P. C., confer upon the defendant not only the right to have the debt due by him wiped out or reduced but also enables him to make a counter-claim against the plaintiff. Independent of this provision, the defendant has a right to plead set off against the plaintiff's demand provided his claim against the plaintiff was not dead at the time the action was laid by the plaintiff and it does not exceed the plaintiff's claim. In such a case, the question of limitation has to be decided with reference to the date on which action has been brought and not with reference to the date when the claim for set off is made.

It is only where a counter-claim is made by the defendant against the plaintiff i. e., when the defendant's demand exceeds that of the plaintiff, the point of limitation has to be determined with reference to the date on which the counter-claim is made. But, if by adjustment the plaintiff's claim is to be wiped out or reduced, then, it is the date of the claim of the plaintiff that is determinative of the question.

The plaintiff cannot be allowed to leave out of account the amount due to the defendant and recover the whole of the debt due to him by the defendant. An account will have to be taken of what is due by the one to the other in respect of dealings and the balance alone should be claimed and no more.

Section 529 of the Companies Act, 1956, extends the Law of Insolvency with respect to the estates of persons adjudged insolvents to the winding up of insolvent companies in regard to provable debts. Under S. 46 of the Insolvency Act, it is imperative on the part of the creditor to claim only the balance of the account in regard to the mutual dealings between them. The Official Liquidator or the Official Receiver is also under a duty not to pay anything more than what is due to the creditor after setting off any amount due by him to the bankrupt company. Therefore, even assuming that the general principles governing mutual dealings and set off are inapplicable to a case where the fiduciary relationship does not xist between the parties. S. 46 of the Insolvency Act read with S. 529 of the Companies Act, 1956 compels a creditor to set off against his claim any sum alleged to be due by him to the company. (1963) 1 Andh W R 290 : (1963) 1 Comp L J 207 : (1963) 2 Andh L T 62 : A I R 1964 Andh Pra 88 (89, 90, 91) (Prs 6, 7, 11, 12, 14) (DB).

A customer opened an overdraft account in a Bank in order to be able to draw money to the limit of Rs. 25,000. He hypothecated his goods as security for the loan on the same day and executed hundies by way of further collateral security. Subsequently he executed two fresh hundis in favour of the Bank which were endorsed in favour of the Reserve Bank.

The Bank repledged the securities to the Reserve Bank. The bank obtained an order for moratorium. The customer went to the Reserve Bank and obtained release of his goods on payment to the Reserve Bank of the entire sum due from him. The Reserve Bank intimated to the bank that it (the Bank) had been credited with the amount. On the amount being applied to the satisfaction of the customer's debt to the bank, there was certain surplus which stood to the customer's credit. Subsequently the bank was ordered to be wound up.

Held, that the securities were given to the Bank for a specific purpose and the money into which the securities were converted was stamped with the same purpose. That being so, the surplus could not become the property of the bank or a part of its general assets liable to distribution among the general body of ordinary creditors. The customer was therefore entitled to claim that he must be ranked as a preferential creditor in respect of the surplus. (1956) 26 Com Cas 374 : 60 Cal W N 999.

Where a person does not acquire title to a property but merely obtains possession of the subject-matter, he is not chargeable as constructive trustee. The result is the same where the property is obtained by fraud and no title is acquired. If however, the wrongdoer exchanges the property for other property and obtains title to the other property he is chargeable as constructive trustee of the other property. If the property has been converted into money and mixed by the wrongdoer with his own funds the person wronged will have an equitable lien or charge on the whole fund and he can reach the product of his property even though the wrongdoer is insolvent.

Where the company, which later went into liquidation, entered into a contract of sale with the sellers but obtained delivery of the goods not by paying the price as provided in the contract but by means of fraud practised on the agent of the sellers, and pledged a portion of the goods so obtained and sold the rest:

Held, that the company became constructive trustee of the money obtained by sale and pledge of the goods and to that extent the sellers were entitled, in the winding up proceedings, to be paid in preference to the ordinary creditors of the company. 1963 Ker L J 638 : 1963 Ker L T 741 : I L R (1963) 2 Ker 723 : AIR 1964 Ker 135 (139, 140) (Pt F) (Prs 12, 14, 15).

——S. 529 — Bank guaranteeing payment to car dealer of sum deposited by intending purchaser when car ready for delivery — Bank holds money in fiduciary capacity as agent for payment to dealer — Bank going into liquidation—Depositors if entitled to preferential claim—Banker and Customer—Deposit.

The petitioners who wanted to purchase new cars obtained the guarantee as required by cl. 5 of Motor Cars (Distribution) Control Order, 1959 from a bank after depositing Rs. 2000 each with the bank for the purpose in fixed or short notice deposits. The letter of request written by the intending purchasers of cars to the Bank stated that the money deposited was to be earmarked for the purpose of issuing the guarantee and that, as and when necessary, the sum of Rs. 2000 should be paid to the dealer in pursuance of the guarantee and debited to the deposit account. When the bank closed down, the guarantees given by it ceased to be in force, the dealers having rejected them, and the petitioners being creditors of the bank in respect of their deposits filed proof claiming payment in full. The liquidator rejected this claim for preference and admitted the debts only as ordinary debts. The petitioners appealed against that order.

Held that the bank accepted the money for the special purpose of payment to the dealer when demand was made in terms of the guarantee given by it and that the particular machinery it adopted for effecting the payment and adjusting accounts could not alter this fact. The bank was only an agent for payment to the dealer, at the proper time of the money deposited with it by the intending purchaser, and therefore it held the money in a fiduciary capacity. Hence the petitioners were entitled to the priority they claimed. 1962 Ker L T 885: (1963) I Com L J 38 : ILR (1962) 2 Ker 99.

Having regard to the provisions of Ss. 230 (5), 171 and 168 of the Companies Act (1913), in respect of the debts recoverable from a company ordered to be wound up compulsorily the date material for determining the question of limitation would be the date of the winding-up order. Under the terms of S. 231 (1), Companies Act, 1913, in order to amount to a fraudulent preference no cash payment is necessary. Any act relating to the property would suffice, provided certain other conditions are satisfied.

The onus is on the Official Liquidator to establish that the dominant intention was to favour a particular creditor. But the intention of a person can normally be gathered only from all the circumstances surrounding the transaction.

(1) The Court has an absolute discretion to validate a transaction. (2) This discretion is controlled only by the general principles which apply to every kind of judicial discretion. The position being well settled that any transactions entered into by the company in respect of the assets of the company except those entered into bona fide and in the ordinary course of the management of the company after the date of the filing of the petition are void under S. 227 (2), a transaction of the transfer of liability of the defendant to a chit fund in favour of the plaintiff to whom the fund owes certain moneys, after filing a petition of winding up is void and a promissory note executed by the defendant after the transfer in favour of the plaintiff for the amount due and owing by him to the fund and to the plaintiff is unenforceable being unsupported by any valid consideration. 1956 Mad W N 886 (1) : AIR 1956 Mad 692 (692, 693) (Pr 1).

After a winding up petition in respect of a Company is presented in the Court, it is not proper for the Company to enter into long-term contracts or make disposition of its property in such a manner as to cause delay in winding-up proceedings in case the Company is ordered to be wound-up by the Court. 1963 Raj L W 299 : ILR (1963) 13 Raj 507 : AIR 1963 Raj 187(188) (Pt A) (Pr 9) (DB).

——S 536 — Winding up — Lease of property for particular period with approval of Court— Court has no power to shorten period of lease subsequently.

Where once a factory owned by a Company is leased for a particular period with the approval of the Court entertaining winding-up proceedings against the company, the Court has no power to alter or revoke the terms of the lease subsequently, so as to shorten the period of the lease. Once a contract is made by a Company, it cannot commit a breach thereof with impunity. Similarly even if a Court is a party to the contract, it is in no better position than any ordinary person unless the authority for revoking the contract in certain circumstances is given by law. 1963 Raj L W 299 : ILR (1963) 13 Raj 507 : AIR 1963 Raj 187 (188) (Pt B) (Pr 9) (DB).

The Act does not empower the Court to make any order with regard to the propety of the Company before the winding up order is passed except by the appointment of a provisional liquidator. S. 536 (2) does not contemplate any previous order of the Court about disposition of the property of the Company. The result of the passing of winding up order according to S. 536 (2) is that all dispositions made subsequent to the presentation of the winding-up application become automatically void unless the Court orders otherwise. 1963 Raj L W 299 : I L R (1963) 13 Raj 507 : AIR 1963 Raj 187 (189, 190) (Pt C) (Prs 13, 14) (DB).

The words 'after the commencement of the winding up' in S. 537 (1) (a) of the Companies Act, 1956 must be read as meaning 'after the presentation of the petition for winding up the company', and not 'after the winding up order'. Section 537 read with S. 441 (2) of the Act fixes the date of commencement of winding up as the date of the presentation of petition for winding up and not the date of the winding up order. The object of S. 537 is to preserve the assets of a company for fair and equitable distribution to all the creditors and to generally negative all possibilities of a preference between creditors inter se from the date of the commencement of the winding up proceedings. The words 'is being wound up' in S. 537 (1) may be suggestive of a process, but the starting point of that process has been clearly laid down by S 441 of the Companies Act, and the language of S. 537 has to be understood by reference to S. 441. The doctrine of 'relation back' has been imported and the date of commencement of winding up has been given a fixed meaning. Hence a sale by auction of the properties or assets of a company, held after the presentation of a petition for winding up, without leave of the Court must be held to be null and void. It cannot be said that the company Judge must be deemed to have accorded leave under S. 537 of the Act, because he makes an order discharging an interim stay granted by him under S. 442 of the Act, on the ground that the creditor who obtained the interim stay and the other creditors were not pursuing their application for winding up the company diligently.

There is no warrant for the contention, that S. 537 must yield to the provisions of the State Financial Corporation Act, 1953, in view of the overriding effect of S. 46-B of latter Act. Section 32 (10) of that Act clearly lays down that the Financial Corporation will have no preference excepting that conferred by any other law where liquidation proceedings have commenced before the making of an application under S. 31 of that Act. In the case of companies incorporated under the Companies Act, winding up proceedings are undoubtedly 'liquidation proceedings' within the meaning of S. 32 (10). In the absence of any inconsistency between the Companies Act, and the State Financial Corporation Act, the overriding effect of S. 46-B does not operate : AIR 1958 Punj 341, Ref. ; AIR 1959 M P 95, Disting. (1963) 2 Comp L J 309 (Raj.).

——Ss. 542, 543 — Directors — Liability of — If can rely on skill and integrity of officers of company —Failure by director to examine books of account or to exercise control over officers after knowing about defalcations — Director is liable — (Company — Director — Liability of).

In a case where there is no ground for suspecting the officers of a company, the director may be justified in relying on their skill, honesty and integrity. But once he is told or he knows that the officers have disregarded the directions and resolutions passed by the Executive Committee and the Board of Directors in the matter of making advances and have made false entries in the books of accounts the director should be careful in placing blind and complete reliance and trust on the said officers thereafter. If he fails to exercise control over them even after such knowledge or if he fails to scrutinise the advances made by them in flagrant violation of the directions of the Executive Committee and the Board of Directors, at least then he must be presumed to be acting in complete disregard of his responsibilities as a director. (1963) 1 Com L J 169 (Ker).

——S. 542 (1)—Existence of "fraudulent purpose" sufficient to attract section — Directors becoming parties to concealment of an already committed fraud is "fraudulent purpose" within S. 542 (1).

The fraudulent intent contemplated by S. 542 (1) need not be the dominant intent to defraud the creditors or any other persons. The sub-section does not speak of the intent to defraud creditors or any other persons alone : it is enough if there was any fraudulent purpose ; and there need not necessarily be the intent to defraud creditors or any other persons.

Concealment of an already committed fraud is itself a fraud. Where the employees of the Bank misappropriated large amounts belonging to the Bank and the directors who knew about it allowed the manipulation of the accounts of the Bank obviously with the idea of concealing the real position from the shareholders, the creditors and the public, the action of the directors in concealing the fraud from people who were entitled to know about it, is a fraudulent purpose coming within the mischief of S. 542 (1) : AIR 1962 S C 1821, Ref. ——S. 542 (1)—Persons found guilty under—Extent of liability—Discretion is in Court to assess and fix, liability.

Under S. 542 (1) Companies Act, 1956 any persons who were knowingly parties to the carrying on of the business for any fraudulent purpose, are personally responsible for all or any of the debts or liabilities of the company as the Court may direct. The discretion is in the Court to assess and fix the liability of the persons and that discretion is a judicial discretion. It does not appear from the wording of the sub-section that the liability of such persons is merely co-extensive or coterminous with the particular amount or amounts for which their actions are responsible. The Court has to fix their liability considering all the circumstances and the justice of the case.

Though under S. 542 (1) technically all the persons found guilty may be jointly and severally liable for all the debts and liabilities of the company, Court may in the interests of justice apportion the liability inter se among the persons found guilty under S. 542 (1) (1963) 1 Com L J 169 (Ker).

——S. 543—Companies (Court) Rules (1959), R. 10—Discretion under —Exercise of—Petitioner Company directed to take steps in consolidated proceeding under S. 543.

The discretion vested under R. 10, must be exercised on sound judicial principles and having regard to the Scheme of the Act and the Rules, an application under S. 543 (Schedule 11) being an independent petition, the Court will not be justified in lightly departing from the procedure laid down by the rules unless there are very strong and cogent grounds in support of any such prayer.

Held, that having regard to the materials on the record, the petitioner Company should review those materials and take such steps as it may think necessary or expedient in one consolidated proceeding under S. 543, against such of the persons against whom the record reveals a prima facie case of misfeasance. ——S. 543—Scope and effect—Company—Voluntary winding up—Suit by Liquidator against legal representatives of deceased managing director for recovery of moneys retained by deceased — Maintainability — C. P. Code (1908), S 9— Bar of civil suit — Principles.

Section 543 of the Companies Act, 1956 does not oust the jurisdiction of an ordinary civil Court to entertain a suit by the Liquidator of a company which is being voluntarily wound up, against the legal representatives of a deceased managing director of the company for recovery of amounts or properties of the company retained or held by him. The Liquidator in a voluntary winding up is within the section and a claim for recovery of a specified sum of money is plainly within its compass. The section is not confined to unliquidated claims for damages against a director or officer. Nor does the section bar a civil suit in a civil Court as regards matters covered by it. The liability of a director to pay or return the company's money or property is a general or common law liability and the obligation to restore any money or property is a legal liability and the right of the company to realise its money from the hands of a fraudulent or dishonest director is in no sense a special statutory right. S. 543 is only an enabling provision and it cannot be construed as depriving an aggrieved party of a remedy by way of suit by reason of the special procedure provided for by the section. Further, proceedings under S. 543 against the director of a company cannot be continued after his death; misfeasance proceedings under the Companies Act are only available against the specified persons enumerated therein and not against their executors, administrators, heirs or legal representatives.

As the liquidator could not proceed against the legal representatives under S. 543 a suit by him against them is clearly maintainable and not barred. Unless a right of suit is taken away expressly or by necessary implication, the suit must be held to be maintainable under S. 9, Civil Procedure Code. A I R 1958 Mad 583, Rel. on. (1963) 2 Comp L J 304 : (1964) 1 Mad L J 20 : 77 Mad L W 49 : ILR (1964) 1 Mad 969 : AIR 1964 Mad 230 (232) (Pt B) (Prs 9, 10) (DB).

——S. 543—Voluntary winding up — Misfeasance—Suit against liquidator — Whether ordinary civil Court has jurisdiction to entertain — S. 235, Companies Act, 1913.

There is a good deal to be said for the view that even in a case of a voluntary winding up it is necessarily implied that proceedings by share-holders against liquidators in respect of the conduct of the winding up proceedings are intended to be dealt with by the Court under the Act, i.e., the High Court particularly in case where allegations of misfeasance and nonfeasance are being made against the liquidators. An ordinary civil Court cannot exercise such jurisdiction. ——S. 543—Scope—Liability of director for dividend wrongly distributed on his shares.

Under S. 235 of the Act of 1913 a person could be held liable only for his acts and omissions as a director and not for what he had received as a dividend on his shares in his capacity as a share-holder. See Companies Act (1913), S. 235. AIR 1962 All 486 (DB).

——S. 543—Companies Act (1913), S. 235—Scope—Manager of company advising directors to lend money to concern of which they are partners.

Section 235, Companies Act, 1913, covers misapplication of any money or property of the company or liability or accountability for any money or property of the company in addition to any act of misfeasance or breach of trust.

A manager of a company who knowingly advises the directors to lend money to a concern of which they all are partners is liable for misfeasance even though he himself has not been proved to have retained any such money. (1957) 27 Com Cas 390 : AIR 1956 Cal 648 (652) (Pt B) (Pr 14).

6. Misfeasance or breach of trust.

——S. 543—Applicability — Conditions—In order to bring a case within S. 235 of the Companies Act of 1913 it is essential to establish that there has been a breach of trust and that the breach has resulted in pecuniary loss to the company. AIR 1959 Cal 625.

——S. 543—Failure of directors to call for monthly statement of accounts — Failure to look into account books—Held directors were not guilty of reckless indifference or wilful misconduct. See Companies Act (1913), S. 235. AIR 1959 Cal 625.

——S. 543—Companies Act (1913), S. 235—'Misfeasance'—Meaning—Director lending money to a concern of which he is partner.

The word 'misfeasance' in S. 235, Companies Act 1913, covers every misconduct by an officer of the Company as such for which such officer might have been sued apart from the section. (1896) 1 Ch 331, Rel. on.

Where the directors and manager of a company lend money to a concern of which they are either the sole proprietors or partners, they are guilty of misfeasance. The plea that they did something bona fide and in good faith and in the belief that these loans will ultimately turn out to be for the good of the company cannot avail against the charge of misfeasance and misapplication oi Company's moneys. (1957) 27 Com Cas 390 : AIR 1956 Cal 648 (651, 652) (Pt A) (Prs 12, 13).

7. Onus.

——S. 543 — Banking Companies Act (1949), Ss. 45, 45-H—Misfeasance application — Burden of proof. See Banking Companies Act (1949), S. 45. (1964) 34 Com Cas 34 (Mys).

——S. 543—Onus.

The burden of proof of misfeasance is on the applicant under the section.

The applicant has to show not only the misfeasance but also the damage in respect of which the Company is to be compensated. An act of misfeasance will not without damage suffice any justification of action against misfeasor. The principal object of this provision is to compensate the company in respect of the losses resultant on misfeasance. ——S. 543 — Application under — Appraisement of evidence—Nature of proof required—Burden of proof. See Companies Act (1913), S. 235. AIR 1962 Raj 118 (DB).

8. Sanction of Court.

——S. 543—Companies Act (1913), S. 235—Leave of Court is not nccessary.

Section 235, Companies Act, 1913, under which the liquidator makes an application does not require sanction or leave of the Court to make such application. Want of leave of the Court is therefore not a legal objection to the application under S. 235. (1957) 27 Com Cas 390 : A I R 1956 Cal 648 (654) (Pt E) (Pr 21).

9. Form and contents of application.

——S. 543 — Allegations must be specific — Respondent is not liable for anything that is discovered in course of enquiry. See Companies Act (1913), S. 235. A I R 1963 All 55.

——S. 543 —Amendment petition—Bona fide mistake —Company (in liquidation) described as petitioner instead of official liquidator — Application for amendment beyond five years—Maintainability.

A misdescription in a petition under S. 543 of the Companies Act describing the company (in liquidation) as the petitioner instead of the official liquidator is not fatal when the verification and other contents of the petition leave no room for doubt that the official liquidator was the petitioner. In such a case the principle underlying the maxim 'Falsa demonstratio non nocet and Nihil facit error nominis cum de corpore constat' applies. The misdescription is remediable in spite of the fact that an application under O. 1, R. 10, Civil P. C to amend the heading has been made beyond five years, since this case does not fall within the mischief of S 22 of the Indian Limitation Act as correction sought does not amount to substitution or addition of a new plaintiff or defendant. (1963) 1 Com L J 365 : A I R 1963 Punj 196 (197, 198) (Prs 2, 3, 4).

11. Amendment of petition.

——S. 543—Application by Official Liquidator under S. 46 II, Banking Companies Act and S. 3, Contempt of Courts Act — Objection that application under S. 543, Companies Act being condition precedent to application under S. 45-II, Banking Companies Act, application under S. 45 II, Banking Companies Act was not maintainable and that application might be treated as one under Contempt of Courts Act alone—Since petition included all material required to be alleged for petition under S. 543, Companies Act and since omission of 'S. 543 had created no prejudice in minds of opposite parties, the Court allowed the petition to be amended indicating in heading that it was also under S. 543, Companies Act. See Civil P. C. (1908), O. 6, R. 17. A I R 1962 Punj 433.

12. Limitation.

——S. 543—Limitation—Computation — Application within three years of appointment of liquidator — Misapplication of money more than three years earlier can be charged See Companies Act (1913), S. 235. A I R 1963 All 55.

——S. 543—Retrospective operation—Companies Act (1913), S. 235—Application under, already barred b time on the date it was filed — Limitation, if can be extended with the help of S. 45-O Banking Companies Act. See Banking Companies Act (1949), S. 45-O. A I R 1962 All 486 (DB).

——S. 543—Companies Act (1913), S. 235—Delay in making application.

Even if an application under S. 235, Companies Act, 1913, is made on the last date of limitation, the liquidator has the whole period granted by S. 235 within which to move. This delay in bringing this application is, legally and technically, no defence to the application. (1957) 27 Com Cas 390 : A I R 1956 Cal 648 (653) (Pt C) (Pr 19).

——S. 543 - Scope.

Application by liquidator under S. 235, Companies Act (1913) against delinquent director for compensation—Period of three years provided in the section is period of limitation. See Companies Act (1913), S. 235. (1965) 2 Com L J 16 (Guj).

——S. 543—Winding up— Misfeasance by Directors —Application to Court to assess damages—Limitation for—Act of 1956 coming into force pending winding up proceeding—Limitation - If governed by Act of 1913 or new Act Proceedings for misfeasance - If can be continued against legal representatives of officers —Companies Act (7 of 1913), Sections 235 and 281—Companies Act (I of 1956), Sections 543, 633 —Legal Representatives Suit Act (12 of 1955)—Indian Succession Act, S. 306 — Banking Companies Act (10 of 1949), Sections 45-H and 45-O—Civil Procedure Code (5 of 1908), Order 21— Applicability—Extent to which directors can rely on skill and integrity of managing director — Duties of directors.

Neither section 306, Indian Succession Act nor the Legal Representatives Suit Act (12 of 1955) nor Order 21, Civil Procedure Code, can be availed of for continuing misfeasance proceedings against the legal representatives of a deceased promotor, director, manager, liquidator or officer of a company. The action thereunder being purely personal against the said named persons, which does not survive their death, it is not possible to invoke any of the statutory provisions mentioned above.

The rule of limitation prescribed in section 235, Companies Act, 1913, stands except in regard to cases for which express provision is made in section 45-O (2), Banking Companies Act. A demand made by the applicant in a misfeasance application has the essential feature of a claim as normally understood, namely, the right to make a demand on the part of a litigant and the power of the Court to enforce that demand. Therefore, a misfeasance application comes within the expression "all other claims" appearing in sub-section (2) of section 45-O of the Banking Companies Act. It is obvious that the right to make a misfeasance application, which could be made only in the course of winding up a company, arises only after a winding up order is made which is necessarily subsequent to the presentation of the winding up petition. It follows, therefore, that the application referred to in section 45-O (1) can never be a misfeasance application.

In the present case, all that could be said on the basis of the Articles of Association was that they did authorise the Board of Directors to entrust the day-to-day administration to one of them appointed as a managing director. The Articles did not, however, say that the mere appointment of a Managing Director discharged the Board of Directors of its ultimate responsibility for the management of the company which, in express terms, was vested in them. The Managing Director was to work under their supervision.

Where the case of the directors, on their own showing, is that there never was any formal resolution defining the functions and responsibility of the Managing Director or indicating the extent to which he can, on his own and independently of the board, exercise powers in relation to the management of the affairs of the company, or providing for the manner in which the Board should exercise supervision over the work of the Managing Director, and the general effect of the evidence appears to be that to a large extent the directors proceeded on a footing of mutual trust and that many details were settled by informal discussions rather than by formal resolutions, the directors, other than the managing director, are also liable for the loss, because they must be held to have failed in their duty of providing for good and efficient management of the affairs of the company and because they cannot, in the circumstances, claim that they were entitled to rely upon either the Managing Director or any members of the supervisory staff.

When a person joined the directorate after the first inspection by the Reserve Bank had already taken place and he was on the Board when the subsequent inspection took place, but he took no steps to inform himself about the correct position or to dissociate himself from the management if he thought that it was beyond his capacity or capabilities to do anything useful as a director, such an attitude actually comes to this, viz., that taking up the position of director of a banking company is a matter of no consequence.

So long as a director acts honestly, he cannot be made responsible in damages unless guilty of gross or culpable negligence in a business sense. But as pointed out by Neville, J., in L. R. (1911) 1 Ch. 425, 437 one cannot say whether a man has been guilty of negligence, gross or otherwise, unless one can determine what is the extent of the duty which he is alleged to have neglected. The care that he is bound to take has been described as 'reasonable care' to be measured by the care an ordinary man might be expected to take in the circumstances on his own behalf. In saying this, Neville, J., was only following what was laid down in (1870) L. R. 5 H. L. 480 (486) as being the proper test to apply. While the general principle may briefly be stated to be that a director should always act honestly and that the standard of care expected of him is to take such care as in the circumstances of the case and having regard to his knowledge and experience and his association with the affairs of the company, may be described as reasonable, the nature of the duty resting on him and the extent of care expected of him must depend upon the facts and circumstances of each case. Section 281 of the Indian Companies Act of 1913 and the corresponding section 633 of the Companies Act of 1956, which empower the Court to relieve a director of any liability which he may incur under the law, clearly state that before so relieving him the Court should be satisfied not only that he has acted honestly but also that he has acted reasonably and that having regard to all the circumstances of the case including those connected with his appointment, he ought fairly to be excused.

Misfeasance proceedings in the course of winding up of a company are independent of whether or not the person proceeded against may be criminally responsible for any offence disclosed by the facts of the case and for assessing the civil liability of the person under section 235 of the Companies Act, 1913, it is unnecessary to consider or express any opinion on the question whether he may also be criminally liable. A Company Court, while examining the case of an alleged misfeasance, is not to be deterred by the possibility of the person whose conduct it is investigating rendering himself liable for criminal prosecution also. In proceedings for misfeasance the interests involved are not merely those of the parties actually present before the Court but of many others who are not before the Court. The liquidator who is very often an applicant in such cases is discharging a statutory duty. In the event of the applicant being a creditor or a contributory, he is representing the interests of other creditors or contributories also. The possibility of the personal interests of the parties actually present being in some respects or to some extent adverse to those of the absent parties, or the parties actually present not being in a position to place all materials that may be relevant, cannot always be ruled out. Indeed, when it becomes apparent that the parties present, particularly those whose conduct is under investigation of relevant details, refrain from placing such details before the Court, it is the duty of the Court to compel them to give evidence so that the ultimate decision may, as far as it is humanly possible, be a fair and just decision upon the facts in controversy. The winding up proceedings of a Banking Company, which were pending when the Companies Act of 1956 came into force are governed by section 235, Companies Act of 1913 and not by section 443 of the Companies Act of 1956. They are also governed by section 45-H, Banking Companies Act, which to a considerable extent lightens the burden of providing the entire case which rests on the liquidator. (1865) 1 Eq. In such a situation, if the liquidator has realised the assets of the company, with the permission of the auction-purchaser, credit must be given for these sums to the auction-purchaser. Where in liquidation proceedings of a company an administrator is appointed by Court directing him to do certain acts and giving him powers to act in a specified manner, but he disobeys the orders and directions of the Court and commits acts of misappropriation and diversion of the funds of the company (in liquidation), the liquidator can proceed against such funds in the hands of the transferees. Election is a question of fact and must be ascertained as such. It may be implied from the acts of the person bound to elect. To constitute implied election, there must be clear proof that the person put to his election was aware of the nature and extent of his rights and that having that knowledge, he intended to elect. The doctrine of election implies a knowledge of alternatives and a choice of one of two alternatives. When applying the doctrine to the trust pursuit rule, i. e., pursuing trust property in the hands of transferees from the trustee, if there is a clear and sharp conversion of trust moneys into other forms of property, the pursuing beneficiary, having knowledge of such conversion and a choice of alternatives, has the right to elect either to take the property purchased or to have a charge on it for the amount of the trust money, but not both. But this principle cannot be applied to a case, where for instance, there has been a partial conversion, to a limited extent and the beneficiary seizes the property so made available under the trust pursuit rule, that does not imply that his claim to the balance of funds, not embodied in some other form of property, is also extinguished or lost, so as to estop the beneficiary from further progress under the trust pursuit rule. Shares issued by a company are goods within the meaning of S. 2 (7) of the Sale of Goods Act and the delivery of share certificates with blank transfers signed by the transferor amounts to a conveyance of good title in the shares to the purchaser; registry of shares in the books is not necessary for vesting title. Where there is a breach of contract by the action of the seller, in failing to implement the agreement, unless restitution in interim is possible the party who stands to lose would be entitled only to compensation and the purchaser should pay to the extent he has taken delivery of goods. Where the party in whose hands trust moneys are sought to be pursued is a transferee for valuable consideration without notice of the claims of the beneficiary who seeks to pursue them, the beneficiary must stop short of such pursuit in respect of such moneys. The beneficiaries cannot recover moneys, whether obtained by fraud or misuse by a fiduciary, which are in the hands of persons who are alienees for valuable consideration, without notice of the fraud on the trust, as such a transferee is protected under S. 64, Trusts Act. If the claimant's moneys are handed over by way of transfer to a person who takes for value without notice of the claimant's equity, the claim (like all equitable claims in like circumstances) is extinguished. Equity will follow the trust money only to the extent to which it can be identified; where there is a mingling which makes identification impossible, tracing cannot be further pursued. The trial of the offences defined and punished by the Companies Act is not assigned to any special Courts created by the Companies Act but the ordinary Criminal Procedure subject to the provision contained in S. 622 of the Act under which the power of jurisdiction to take cognizance of offences defined and punished by the Companies Act can be exercised only by a Presidency Magistrate or a Magistrate of the First Class and no other Magistrate. A section defining the limits of the jurisdiction of a criminal Court or specifying the conditions for taking cognizance of an offence creating by a special statute, cannot be read as a section created a special Court or designating a particular person to discharge a judicial function. Ss. 624-A and 624-B of the Companies Act do not indicate an intention of the Companies Act to exclude altogether the operation of the Code of Criminal Procedure. They do nothing more than empower the Central Government to appoint a separate Public Prosecutor to conduct prosecutions under the Companies Act and also to authorise him to present appeals against orders of acquittal by Courts other than a High Court in the absence of which the conduct of the prosecution would necessarily have been within the competence of an appropriate Public Prosecutor appointed under the Code of Criminal Procedure by the State Government. Therefore an order of conviction under Sec. 551 (5), Companies Act is open to appeal and revision under the provisions of the Code. (1963) 14 S T C 628 (Mys), Dist. The accused, an official liquidator of a company was convicted on his plea of guilty under S. 551 (5), Companies Act for his default in filing the information required by S. 551 and was sentenced to a fine of Rs. 434 at the rate of Rs. 2 per day of the period of his default. The accused placed before the Court certain circumstances for invoking the jurisdiction under S. 633 (1) for condoning the default but they were not accepted. His only argument was that the company in liquidation was one with small assets, that excepting in regard to the default which is the subject of this prosecution he had never been in default and that the interest of either the company in liquidation or its creditors has not suffered to any extent and does not require the special protection afforded by the statute by way of prosecuting a negligent liquidator.

Held, that there was no ground for the exercise of jurisdiction under S. 633 (1) of the Act resulting in total acquittal of the accused. The previous good conduct of the petitioner did not in itself furnish sufficient basis for an inference that in regard to the present default he can be said to have acted reasonably especially when two reminders had been issued to him before prosecuting him. But his previous conduct should have been taken into acconnt by the Courts below in determining the nature and extent of the punishment. The Court in determining the sentence must have regard for the extent of the prejudice caused to the company in liquidation and its creditors in cases where the accused is a liquidator. The ends of justice will be met by imposing a fine of Rs 25 which is to come out of his own pocket and not the assets of the company. —S. 560 (6) — Power of restoration—When used—Discretion.

Apart from the Court's power to declare the dissolution of a company void under S. 559, the power of the Court to restore the company, is really provided in S 560 (6) of the Companies Act, 1956. The reason for restoration must be sought in the satisfaction of the Court that the company, at the time when struck off, was carrying on business or in operation or otherwise that it was just that the company should be restored to the register.

Further, this power of the Court to restore the company is discretionary. This is not a mandatory provision. No doubt, the Court's discretion must be well reasoned. One of such reasons for exercising the discretion in favour of restoring a company must be that after restoration the company will be in a position to carry on the business of the company. 63 Cal W N 889 : (1960) 30 Com Cas 172 : I L R (1960) 1 Cal 273 : A I R 1959 Cal 493 (497, 498) (Pt B) (Prs 35, 36).

It may be that because of the express provision in Art. 296 of the Constitution, the Companies Act, 1956 in India, which copied in S 560 the major provisions of S. 354 of the English Companies Act, 1948 did not introduce the further provisions of Ss. 355 and 356 of the English Statute. 63 Cal W N 889 : (1960) 30 Com Cas 172 : ILR (1960) 1 Cal 273 : A I R 1959 Cal 493 (498) (Pt D) (Prs 37, 40).

—Ss. 592 to 596—Company—Foreign Companies—Jurisdiction of High Court to entertain and try suit against — Absence of cause of action in Madras—

Defendant company furnishing name of principal place of business within jurisdiction and naming person within jurisdiction as person authorised to receive processes, notices, and documents in return submitted to Registrar under Companies Act—Effect of—Defendant pleading on merits besides protesting jurisdiction—If submission to jurisdiction—Liability of defendant outside jurisdiction mixed up with that of defendant within—If ground for exercising jurisdiction over such defendant—Letters Patent (Madras), Cls. (12) and (14) — 'Dwell' — What amounts to — Grant of leave to sue when no cause of action has arisen within jurisdiction — If can be availed of by plaintiff to sustain jurisdiction — Rules of Private International Law — Scope and effect of — Tests under.

In order to sustain the jurisdiction of the High Court on the basis of the Rules of Private International Law relating to foreign companies as defendants, so that the plaintiff can secure a judgment of the High Court which will be recognised as internationally valid by, say, the Courts in Toronto (Canada) and in the United Kingdom, if it becomes necessary to enforce the judgment in the respective places of incorporation of the defendants (Toronto and U. K.), the tests to be applied for deciding the jurisdiction of the High Court to entertain the suit against the foreign companies must be judged according to the Rules of Private International Law and, in particular, the Rules by which a foreign Court, say of Canada or the United Kingdom, will recognise a judgment of the High Court, that is, those rules of Private International Law relating to foreign companies figuring as defendants. If the High Court can pronounce a judgment which can be expected to be recognised by those foreign countries under the rules of Private International Law, it has jurisdiction to try the suit irrespective of the criteria prescribed by Cl. (12) of the Letters Patent (Madras). Further, in so far as jurisdiction can be derived with reference to the relevant provisions of the Companies Act, 1956, it would also be valid ground for the existence of jurisdiction in view of Cl. (44) of the Letters Patent which provides that the provisions of the Letters Patent are subject to the powers of Parliament under the Constitution of India, List I—the Union List, VII Schedule, under Art. 246 of the Constitution of India.

The Companies Act, 1956, is a valid Act, passed under the provisions of Sch. VII, in particular under Item 16 (foreign jurisdiction) and Item 44 (Incorporation, regulation and winding up of corporations, etc.). Section 596 of the Companies Act provides that any process, notice or other document required to be served on a foreign company shall be deemed to be sufficiently served if addressed to any person whose name has been delivered to the Registrar under S. 592 (d) and (e) of the Act and left at, or sent by post to the address which has been so delivered. If the provisions of Ss. 592 to 596 of the Companies Act are sufficient to confer jurisdiction on the High Court with respect to any defendant or all the defendants, the existence of jurisdiction derived from such provisions will be saved by Cl. (44) of the Letters Patent from the limiting provisions of Cl. (12) of the Letters Patent. The criteria in Cl. (12) of the Letters Patent are primarily intended to demarcate the sphere of jurisdiction of the High Court and the subordinate Courts in the State or of other Courts in this country and are not directed to the determination of the jurisdiction from the international point of view. If the cause of action wholly arises within the jurisdiction of the High Court, that alone is sufficient to confer jurisdiction on the High Court under Cl. (12). But in Private International Law, the cause of action is irrelevant. The two criteria which have to be satisfied under the latter are : (1) the presence of the foreign company within the jurisdiction of the High Court at the time of the institution of the suit or the service of summons, and (2) submission by the foreign company to the jurisdiction of the High Court. The furnishing of an address within the jurisdiction of the High Court under S. 592 (e) and the name of a person within the jurisdiction under S. 592 (d) of the Act would be sufficient to confer jurisdiction on the High Court according to the rules of Private International Law in respect of the foreign companies (defendants).

The plaintiff brought a suit in the High Court of Madras for damages for breach of contract of lifetime service and for wrongful dismissal against two foreign companies : the first defendant was M. F. Limited, Toronto, Canada and the second defendant was M. F. (India) Limited, 12, McLean Street, Broadway, Madras-1. The first defendant company was incorporated in Toronto and the second defendant in the United Kingdom. The plaintiff who was employed in the Tata Oil Company Ltd., Bombay, went over to Canada in 1944, to undergo training and for higher studies. While there he came into contact with a foreign company called M. H. Co., Ltd., Toronto who employed him as their representative in India on a permanent basis. This was in 1945. He got his release from his former employer and on his return to India, he worked as the representative of M. H. Co. (India), Ltd., with headquarters in Delhi till 1954. In August 1953, M. H. and Co., of Toronto, took over the entire world interest of a company called Harry Ferguson Ltd , Coventry, in England and changed their name into M. H. F. Limited. The English Company taken over by M. H. & Co., was operating in India, through its subsidiary, H. F. (India), Ltd., Bangalore, whose activities also were absorbed by M. H. & Co. Ltd., i. e., M. H. F. Limited, Toronto, and the trading in India was continued in the name of M. H. F. (India), Ltd. The New Delhi Office of the plaintiff and others was transferred to Bangalore on and from 1st April 1954, though his employer was still M. H. F., Ltd., Toronto. M. H. F. (India), Ltd., made a return to the Registrar under S. 593 (a) of the Companies Act, 1956, showing that the name of the company was changed from M. H. F., Ltd., (India) to M. F. (India). Ltd., (which was the second defendant in the suit) with effect from 1st April 1958, and that M. H. F. (India), had its established place of business in India at No. 4, Cunningham Road, Bangalore. The name of the Company at Toronto was also changed into M. F. Limited (the 1st defendant in the suit). In 1960, the Toronto company, of which the United Kingdom company was a part, evolved a plan to start a new company to be registered in India to manufacture M. F. Products. The company thus formed was T. and F. E. (P.), Ltd. (TAFE) ; all the permanent employees of M. F. (India), Ltd., Bangalore, except, the plaintiff and some others, were absorbed by the newly formed company (TAFE), and the plaintiff's services were terminated by a notice dated 30th November 1960, with effect from 1st January 1961. The plaintiff alleged that this was a breach of the permanent contract of service entered into by the 1st defendant in 1945 and that the 1st defendant was liable for breach in damages and that the second defendant, as the representative of the 1st defendant, was also liable, as the party who actually issued the notice of termination. The suit was filed in the Madras High Court on 30th November 1960, after obtaining leave under Cl. 12 of the Letters Patent. M. F. (India), Ltd., who had given No. 4, Cunningham Road, Bangalore, as their address, shifted their office to No. 12, McLean Street, Broadway, Madras-1 with effect from 3rd March 1961 which they duly notified to the Registrar, and they also stated under S. 592 (1) (d) of the Companies Act, 1956, that the name of the person resident in India authorised to accept service of process and other notices or documents on their behalf was M/s. Fraser and Ross, at No. 12, McLean Street, Broadway, Madras-1. The defendants, inter alia, raised the plea of want jurisdiction on the ground that no part of the cause of action arose within the jurisdiction of the High Courts and that the grant of leave could not avail the plaintiff to any extent. The plaintiff relied on the Rules of Private International Law relating to foreign companies to sustain the jurisdiction of the High Court.

Held : (1) The very furnishing of the address at No. 12, McLean Street, Broadway, Madras-1, as the principal place of business of the second defendant and the name of M/s. Fraser & Ross, 12, McLean Street, Madras-1, as the persons authorised to accept on its behalf service of process, notice or document, under S. 592 (e) and (d), was sufficient to confer jurisdiction on the High Court of Madras according to the Rules of Private International Law, so far as the second defendant was concerned, and that by his furnishing of address and the name of the persons authorised to receive process, etc., had in advance submitted to the jurisdiction of the High Court and such submission would clothe the Court with jurisdiction in the international sense, so as to be recognised by Courts in England where the second defendant was incorporated. (2) The second defendant, in addition to the plea of want of jurisdiction under Cl. 12 of the Letters Patent, had also gone on to plead on the merits of the case ; and it is well settled that where a defendant has, besides entering protest against the jurisdiction of the Court, gone on to plead on the merits of the case, must be held to have voluntarily appeared and submitted to the jurisdiction of the Court, which submission itself would give jurisdiction to the High Court, in the international sense, to try the suit against him, and the second defendant could not afterwards turn round and plead that the Court had no jurisdiction against him. To constitute submission in the international sense, it would not be necessary that the defendant should actually participate in the trial, it would be enough if he has pleaded on the merits of the case, because thereby he has disclosed an intention to take the chance of a decision on the merits of the case. Therefore, having regard to the Rules of Private International Law, and the provisions of Ss. 592 to 596 of the Companies Act, and on account of the returns submitted by the second defendant to the Registrar, it must be held that the said defendant was present in Madras and had submitted in advance to the jurisdiction of the High Court ; in addition the second defendant having pleaded on the merits also, must be held to have submitted to the jurisdiction. Though the first defendant had not submitted any returns to the Registrar under Ss. 592 to 596 of the Companies Act, it must be held that the High Court has jurisdiction against the first defendant also from the international point of view, as the liability of the first defendant, as set out in the plaint, was so mixed up with the liability of the second defendant that, for a proper adjudication of the claim of the plaintiff, it was necessary to have the presence of the first defendant also. When any person out of the jurisdiction is a necessary or proper party to an action properly brought against some other person duly served within the jurisdiction, the Court would have jurisdiction against the former party as well.

The first defendant also had pleaded on the merits of the case besides protesting the jurisdiction of the Court on the ground that no part of the cause of action had arisen in Madras. The first defendant had also given a power-of-attorney to M/s. King & Patridge, Solicitors, Madras, for defending the suit not merely in the High Court but also in any appeal therefrom and in execution, thereby disclosing a clear intention to submit to the jurisdiction of the High Court, and had also participated in the trial to some extent.

The offences which have been created by the Companies Act are not punishable under the Penal Code. They have been specially created by the Companies Act and under Regn. 14 framed under S. 248 (2 for the State of Delhi the Registrar has been given the authority to initiate criminal proceedings in respect of them. This can only mean that the Registrar or a person duly authorised by him is alone competent to initiate proceedings and a member of the general public cannot (as he can under the Criminal Procedure Code in respect of offences punishable under the Indian Penal Code) initiate proceedings against the offender. ——S. 610 (2) — Object of — Production of original documents from Registrar of Companies — Leave of Judge is essential —Subpoena issued by Master without leave is invalid — High Court Rules and Orders — Calcutta High Court Rules, Chap. 6, R. 11, Cl. (12).

The Master has no jurisdiction or power to issue any subpoena under Cl. Section 610 (2) of the Companies Act was introduced in the Companies Act of 1956, in public interest and was designed for the purpose of ensuring that the public was not inconvenienced with regard to the right of inspection of documents or with regard to obtaining certified copies of documents. ——S. 614—Applicability.

Section 614 contemplates an application by a member or a creditor of the company or by the Registrar of the Companies for an order directing the company or any officer thereof to make good the default in filing or registering or delivering or sending to the Registrar any return, account or other document, etc. Obviously S. 614 can have no application to extend the time for filing the balance sheet and the profit and loss account in question with the Registrar of Companies. 60 Bom L R 1346 : (1959) 29 Com Cas 34 : AIR 1959 Bom 245 (246, 247, 248) (Pt B) (Prs 8, 9, 12).

SECTION 614-A

——Ss. 614-A and 633 — Issue of direction against a Director of a company under S. 614-A — Non-compliance with — High Court under S. 633 (2) cannot grant relief.

Where a Magistrate refusing to grant relief prayed for under S. 633 (1) of the Act, passes an order convicting the director of a company and also directs him under S. 614-A to file certain documents with the relevant fee with the Registrar within a specified period the High Court cannot by granting him relief under sub-s. (2) of S. 633 of the Act prevent action being taken against the defaulting director under S. 614-A(2).

Sub-section (2) of S. 633 deals with a stage anterior to the initiation of proceedings whereas sub-s. (1) deals with a stage subsequent to its initiation. Further, the default in both the sub-sections is obviously a default in complying with the requirements of one or the other of the provisions of the Act. The offence punishable under sub-s. (2) of S. 614-A is clearly not a default of the type contemplated by that section. In express terms that offence is described to be one of failure to comply with an order made by a Court referred to in sub-s. (1) of S. 614-A namely a Court trying an offence for default in compliance with any of the provisions of the Act. Hence it is not possible to contend that the proceedings the initiation of which could be prevented by the High Court by granting relief under sub-s. (2) of S. 633, includes a proceeding to get an offence under S. 614-A punished.

The view flowing from the language employed in the two sections and the context of events dealt with by them should be taken because the power under S. 633 to relieve a person from liability cannot with propriety be exercised to prevent the operation of an order made by a Court of law after hearing the parties and after exercising its powers under sub-s. (1) invoked by any party. (1963) 2 Mys L J 469.

——S. 614-A—Section does not contemplate an order under sub-s. ——S. 628—Offences—False statements—Notice of extraordinary general meeting issued to shareholders by directors — False statement signed by Secretary attached to the notice—Directors, whether liable.

A false statement signed by the Secretary of a company to the effect that notices under S. 81 of the Companies Act. 1956, were sent to all the shareholders, was attached to the notice issued by the directors of the company calling for an extraordinary general meeting of the share-holders to consider and pass certain resolutions. A share-holder of the Company filed a private complaint in the Magistrate's Court against the Secretary and eight directors alleging that they all committed offences under S. 628 of the Companies Act, 1956. The learned Magistrate convicted the Secretary but acquitted the directors. The share-holder filed appeal against the judgment of the Magistrate so far as it related to the acquittal of the directors.

Held, that there was no proof that the directors had knowledge about the falsity of the statement made by the Secretary of the company and therefore the directors were not guilty. ——S. 630— Investigation in respect of offences under Ss. 406, 409 and 477-A, Penal Code— If barred—(Companies Act (1913), S. 282-A).

The scope of S. 282-A of the Companies Act of 1913 corresponding to S. 630 ot the Companies Act of 1956 is quite distinct and different from the scope of Ss. 406, 409 and 477-A, Penal Code. There can be no bar therefore to the investigation by the Police in respect of alleged offences punishable under Ss. 406, 409 and 477-A, Penal Code. (1957) 27 Com Cas 142: 70 Mad L W 81: 1957 Mad W N 238: AIR 1957 Mad 432 (Pr 2) (DB).

——S. 630 — Scope - Offences under Ss. 406 and 409, Indian Penal Code—Investigation — Jurisdiction vested in police officers by Ss. 154, 156 (1) and 157 (1), Criminal Procedure Code—If barred—(Criminal Procedure Code (1898), Ss. 154, 156 (1) and 157 (1))—(Penal Code (1860), Ss. 406 and 409).

Section 630 of the Act provides for a summary procedure. The benefits conferred by S. 630 of the Act are confined to the company, to its representative specified by S 630 itself. Hence S. 630 provides no statutory bar to the exercise of the jurisdiction vested in a police officer by Ss. 154. 156 (1) and 157 (1), Criminal Procedure Code. 1957 Cri L J 205: (1957) 27 Com Cas 97: (1957) Mad L J (Cri) 27: AIR 1957 Mad 65 (67) (Pt C) (Pr 15).

——Ss. 630, 621—Criminal breach of trust committed by officer or employee of Company—Prosecution under S. 409, Penal Code—S. 630 does not repeal S. 409, Penal Code—Offences being distinct, prosecution could proceed under S. 409, Penal Code—Penal Code (1860), Ss 405, 409 - General Clauses Act (1897), S. 26 - Interpretation of Statutes—Repeal by implication—General and Special Statutes.

Section 630 of the Companies Act pro tanto does not repeal S. 409 of the Penal Code so far as it relates to the offence of criminal breach of trust committed by any officer or employee of a company, on the ground that the offences under S. 409, Penal Code and S. 630 Companies Act are identical and since the Companies Act of 1956 is a special Act enacted long after the Penal Code the provisions of that Act must override those of the Penal Code. AIR 1952 Punj 89, held overruled by AIR 1957 S C 458; AIR 1957 S C 458; AIR 1957 S C 592, Rel. on. In order to determine whether there has been pro tanto repeal by implication, one has to examine the scope of the two provisions and find out if they can co-exist and relate to identical offences. The offence created by S. 630 is not identical to that under S. 409, Penal Code and the two provisions can co-exist. A I R 1957 Mad 432; AIR 1961 S C 578, Rel. on. Further, under S. 26, General Clauses Act even if the offences created by two different Acts are identical, it is open to the prosecution to prosecute the offender not only for one of those offences but also to proceed against him under both the Acts, the only restriction being that the offender cannot be punished twice for the same offence. SECTION 633

——S. 633 (1) and (2) — Applicability — Sub-s. (2) does not apply to apprehended prosecution but only to apprehended claim — Sub-s. (1) applies to prosecution. but only when prosecution is started and relief can be given only by Court before which prosecution is pending.

Sub s. (1) is wide enough to cover all kinds of liabilities, both penal and civil, but sub-s. (2) applies only to apprehended claims, i. e., claims for civil liability, and does not cover penal liabilities or prosecutions.

In respect of possible claims or civil liabilities, relief can be granted even in advance under sub-s. (2) of the section without the proceedings being started.

Where no relief is being claimed in respect of an apprehended claim, sub-s. (2) of S. 633 is not attracted at all. It does not apply to a case of an apprehended criminal prosecution. AIR 1959 Bom 245, Dissented from. (1960) 30 Com Cas 405: AIR 1960 All 160 (162, 163, 164) (Prs 12, 13, 14, 17, 18, 19).

——S. 633 (1) and (2) — Relative scope and distinction - 'Claim' — Jurisdiction to grant relief in respect of future penal proceedings.

Whereas sub-s. (1) of S. 633 refers to proceedings already commenced, sub-s. (2) contemplates a claim which is anticipated as one which might be made in future. Under sub-s. (1) the words 'the Court hearing the case' mean that it would not be the High Court which can grant relief under sub-s. (1) but the Court before whom the proceeding has commenced and is pending. Sub-section (2), on the other hand, provides that in respect of an apprehended claim the High Court shall have the same power to grant relief as it would have had under this section if it had been the Court before which proceedings for negligence, default, breach of duty, misfeasance or breach of trust had been brought. The word 'claim' occurring in sub-s. (2) of S. 633 would also include proceedings such as penal proceedings, under S. 162 read with S. 220 of the Act. There is no clear demarcation made in S. 633 between proceedings of a penal nature and a civil remedy by way of a claim provided in sub-s. (2) of this section. The High Court has the jurisdiction to grant relief under sub-s. (2) of S. 633 in respect of a proceeding which the petitioners apprehend might be adopted against them for their omission to file the balance sheet and the profit and loss account with the Registrar of Companies. 60 Bom L R 1346 : (1959) 29 Com Cas 34 : AIR 1959 Bom 245 (246, 247) (Pt A) (Prs 4, 7, 10).

——S. 633 (1), as amended by Act 65 of 1960, applies to criminal prosecutions also — Conviction of directors under Ss. 162, 168, 210 (5) and 220 (3) — Held that in the circumstances directors were not entitled to any relief in the matter of punishment as they had not acted either honestly or reasonably — Fact that directors were quarrelling among themselves was not an extenuating circumstance either in fixing the guilt or assessing the punishment, but was a material consideration for awarding adequate punishment under the Act. 66 Cal W N 852 : (1962) 32 Com Cas 1143 : 1963 (1) Cri L J 521 (525) (Pt D) (Prs 12, 13).

——Ss. 633 and 555 — Every default does not mean want of reasonable care —Default by sheer inadvertence —Court can relieve the liquidator from liability.

It cannot be said that every default in respect of a statutory duty under the Companies Act will mean that the person concerned has acted unreasonably. The Companies Act is not a simple enactment and it is possible for a liquidator even if he exercises a reasonable care to commit a default in paying the unclaimed dividends and undisbursed assets into the Company's Liquidation accounts as required by S. 555. Where therefore a liquidator has committed a default by sheer inadvertence and has neither acted unreasonably nor derived any benefit therefrom the Court can relieve him from the liability. ——S. 633 — Liquidator of a company is an officer of the Company and is entitled to be granted a relief under S. 633. See Ibid, S. 2(3). 1965 Ker L T 1124.

——Ss. 633 and 555 (9) — Relief under S. 633 (2 can be granted in respect of liability under S. 555 (9).

Under S. 633 (2) the Court can relieve the officer in the same manner and to the same extent as a Court before which a proceeding in respect of the default has been initiated, could do under sub-s. (1). Therefore it follows that relief can be granted under sub-s. (2) only in respect of a matter for which a proceeding could be brought in a Court and that, only to the extent to which the Court before which it could be brought could itself grant. Since the liability in respect of which a Court can grant relief under sub-s. (1) of S. 633 can only be a liability which that Court itself could enforce, the Court cannot give the defaulter complete absolution in respect of all liability arising from his default. 1965 Ker L T 1124 : ILR (1966) 1 Ker 1.

——S. 633 — Who can apply for relief.

Under S 633 it is only an officer of the company and not the company itself that can apply for relief. (1960) 30 Com Cas 284 : 1959 Ker L T 839 : 1959 Ker L J 897 : 1959 Mad L J (Cri) 812 : ILR (1959) Ker 1031 : AIR 1960 Ker 15 (15, 16) (Pt A) (Pr 3).

——S. 633 (1) and (2) — Scope — High Court has power under S. 633 (2) to grant relief against apprehended prosecution.

The word 'proceeding' in S. 633 (1) is undoubtedly wide enough to cover a criminal prosecution. But under that sub-section it is for the Court before which the proceeding is pending and not for the High Court to grant relief. The High Court can grant relief only under sub-s. (2). The scope of sub-s. (2) is co-extensive with that of sub-s. (1), and no intention is apparent to confine the scope of sub-s. (2) to those only of the proceedings covered by sub-s. (1) that can properly be designated as claims. Hence the High Court has power under S. 633 (2) to relieve against an apprehended prosecution. Where the directors of a company filed an application under S 281 (2) in the High Court after institution of prosecution against them by the Registrar, though the High Court is satisfied that the default was due to unavoidable circumstances and grants them the relief, this relief will be confined only as far as the future liabilities for the default are concerned. Under the express provisions of S. 281 (1) it is only the Magistrate before whom the proceedings are pending who can grant relief regarding the subject-matter of the prosecution and the High Court cannot relieve them from liability of pending prosecution. 22 Cut L T 231 : (1956) 26 Com Cas 218 : AIR 1956 Orissa 205 (205, 206) (Pr 4).

——Ss. 645 and 646—Inspector appointed under old Act—If can continue under new Act—Ss. 235 and 239.

Undoubtedly under the Act of 1956 an Inspector could have been appointed under S. 235. Where there is an Inspector appointed under S. 138 of the Act of 1913 and he had carried on part of his investigation under S. 140, by reason of S. 645 of the new Act his appointment is to continue in force and if his appointment could have been made under the Act of 1956 it shall have effect as if it was made under this Act.

What S. 645 does is by a legal fiction to equate the appointment of the Inspector under S. 138 of the old Act with his appointment under S. 235. The law looks upon the Inspector, as being appointed under S. 235 after the Act of 1956 came into force, and if he is appointed under S. 235 then with the prior approval of Government under S. 239 (2) he can exercise the powers under S. 239.

Section 646 does not furnish any answer to the plain interpretation of S. 645 which does cover the case of an Inspector appointed under S. 138 of the old Act. S. 646 cannot be read as being an exception to the provision made in S. 645 that all appointments made under the old Act should be deemed to be appointments made under the new Act.(1960) 30 Com Cas 72 : 61 Bom L R 220 : ILR (1959) Bom 952: AIR 1959 Bom 320 (324, 325) (Pt A) (Prs 5, 7) (DB).

— Ss. 647 and 648—Scope — Pending proceedings for liquidation—Transfer to High Court — (General Clauses Act (1897), S. 6).

It is open to a District Judge in whose Court a winding up proceeding was pending before the Act of 1956 came into force to retain the said proceeding in his Court and to pass judgment thereon in accordance with the provisions of the Act of 1913. It is not necessary under the provisions of the Act of 1956 to transfer the said proceedings to the High Court. To mitigate the harshness of the common law rule the legislature has considered it expedient from time to time to enact saving clauses which expressly provided that whenever a statute shall be repealed, such repeal shall not affect pending action founded thereon. Hence the Company accused under S. 303 (2) cannot be acquitted in the preliminary stages on the strength of the provisions of S. 652 of the Act. 60 Pun L R 617: (1959) 29 Com Cas 162 : 1959 Cri L J 79 : ILR (1958) Punj 2406 : AIR 1959 Punj 22 (23) (Prs 6, 7) (DB).

● ——S. 658—Proceedings under S. 153-C of Act of 1913—Repeal of Act—Applicability of S. 6, General Clauses Act.

Section 658 of the Companies Act, 1956 might have been enacted ex abundanti cautela, but, by virtue of it, S. 6 of the General Clauses Act, remains applicable with respect to the effect of the repeal of the Companies Act of 1913. The latter section preserves the rights and liabilities created by S. 153-C of the Act of 1913 and a continuance of the proceeding in respect thereof would be competent in spite of the repeal of the Act of 1913, inasmuch as a contrary intention is not indicated in the later Act. The provisions of S. 153-C of the Act of 1913 have been substantially re-enacted by the Act of 1956 and this would indicate an intention not to destroy the rights created by S. 153-C.

Further, S. 24 of the General Clauses Act does not cancel the notification empowering the District Judge to exercise jurisdiction under the Act of 1913. Since under S. 6 of the General Clauses Act the proceeding in respect of the application under S. 153-C of the Act of 1913 is continued after the repeal of that Act it follows that the District Judge continues to have jurisdiction to entertain it. ——Sch. I, Table A, Regn. 31 – Forfeiture of shares for non-payment of calls or instalments—Strict compliance with conditions precedent essential — Omission of minute details as to interest and expenses in notice preceding forfeiture — Notice defective and forfeiture is invalid.

When a power of forfeiture is provided in the articles of a company, it is to be exercised for the benefit of the company. When the company forfeits the shares, the shareholder whose shares are forfeited ceases to be a member of the company. He loses the privileges and rights of the membership. The money he paid on the shares is irrecoverable. But, on the other hand, he continues to remain liable to pay to the company the moneys which are due and payable by him on the date of forfeiture in respect of his shares and he becomes a qua debtor of the company. Any irregularity in the procedure or any departure from the rules laid down, however slight, will as against the company, invalidate the forfeiture.

Where the notice preceding the forfeiture of shares, issued by the company to the shareholders, lacked details in regard to the interest claimed and the amount of expenses incurred, the notice is defective and the forfeiture of the shares for default is invalid. 75 Mad L W 306 : ILR (1962) Mad 697 : (1962) 2 Mad L J 113 : 1962 Mad W N 211 : 1963 Com C. ——Sch. I, Table A, Regn. 32 — Surplus sale proceeds of forfeited share—Defaulting member's right to.

A share of a joint stock company can enormously appreciate in value and may be very much more than its normal price or face value. When the share is sold to meet the debts and obligations imposed upon a member whose share is about to be forfeited, it is quite in the fitness of things that the share should be sold at the market value and, if the share is highly appreciated, it is better to sell it at such price, for by so selling, it would be possible to liquidate the liabilities of the particular member out of the sale proceeds of such share. The balance, if any, may be appropriated by the Company (in this case the Calcutta Stock Exchange Association) without being given back to the defaulting member. Payment to him would be ultra vires the Articles of the Association. Since the decision, in ILR (1945) 2 Cal 313, the surplus of the balance of the sale proceeds in such cases is always added to the Capital Reserve in the Balance Sheet of the company. Held, that the Article also applied to the extraordinary general meeting of the Company, and was not restricted to the annual or statutory general meeting, and the use of the definite article 'the' instead of the indefinite article 'a', in the article in question was only bad English. An extraordinary general meeting is as much a general meeting as an annual general meeting or a statutory meeting, and there is nothing in the Companies Act which would justify the restriction of the term 'General Meeting' to annual general meetings. On the contrary, Reg. 47 of Table A of Schedule I makes it clear that extraordinary general meetings are also general meetings, and there are a number of provisions in the Act, such as Ss. 170, 171, 177 and 193 which indicate that the term 'general meeting' includes all kinds of general meetings. annual, extraordinary or statutory. 1964 Ker L T 467: 1964 Ker L J 846 : (1964) 2 Com L J 105 : (1964) 1 Ker L R 434 : AIR 1964 Ker 273 (274) (Pr 2).

The chairman of a meeting is not entitled to stop the meeting at his own will and pleasure. If a meeting is called for a particular purpose of the company undoubtedly, a person should preside at that meeting and invariably the constitution of the company provides for the same. It is not open to the chairman to stop the meeting and dissolve it before the business of the meeting is finished. It is the privilege and the right of the shareholders assembled at the meeting to decide whether they should continue the business of the meeting on that day or adjourn it for a subsequent date. If the chairman unjustly and without the consent of the shareholders stops the meeting and declares it dissolved it is perfectly witnin the powers of the meeting to elect a chairman and conduct the business remaining unfinished; but there is nothing to prevent the chairman giving up his right to preside at the meeting. A person cannot be compelled to continue to act as chairman of a meeting of the shareholders. There is nothing in law to compel a man to do that which he is not willing to do.

Until recently, both in England and in India, a member had no right to vote by proxy unless the articles provided for such a right as common law did not recognise voting by proxy. The articles, however, generally conferred such a right subject to such conditions and limitations as are prescribed thereunder. This right has now been recognised by the statute both in England from 1947 now enacted as S. 136 of the Act of 1948 and by S. 79 of the Indian Companies Act as amended in 1936. The relationship brought about between the share-holder and his proxy is that of a principal and agent and the incidents of that contract have to be determined by applying the law of contracts, whether it is in the form of a statute as in India or is ascertainable from judicial decisions, as in England. It cannot be said that all the rights and liabilities which flow from a contract by reason of the application of the general law of contracts do not attach themselves to a contract unless they are enumerated in the contract itself. In the absence of anything in the contract to the contrary (by some provision in the Articles of Association) there is no reason to exclude the right of a share-holder to revoke the proxy.

The effect of the want of notice to the agent of the revocation does not invalidate the revocation or the termination of the authority but makes the principal liable for any damage that results to the agent by reason of such want of notice.

The ruling of a chairman given at one stage of a meeting is final and binding on the chairman or his successor at a later stage. The successor cannot go into the sufficiency or otherwise of the stamp or a proxy which had already been admitted as sufficiently stamped. He cannot at any rate reject such proxies without giving an opportunity to the party to make good the deficient stamp duty after ascertaining the opinion of the Collector on the matter. So long as a shareholder complies with the formalities laid down by the articles regarding stamp duty on the basis enacted in the articles, it is bounden duty of the chairman to accept the proxy and he is not entitled to reject it.

A proxy providing "do hereby appoint as my attorney or substitute to vote for me and on my behalf at the (Ordinary or Extraordinary, as the case may be) general meeting of the company to be held on the 30th September, 1948 and at any adjourned meeting thereof, or at any meeting of the company that may be held within the period of one year from the date hereof, or generally as the case may be," means at any meeting of the company within a period of one year or generally without any limitation as to time. The instrument in the circumstances must be construed as intended to authorise the person to vote at any one meeting though the power is given in the alternative and the proper stamp duty payable will be two annas as a proxy within the meaning of Article 52 of the Stamp Act. It need not be stamped as a power-of-attorney. Assuming that the proxy is a general power-of-attorney the document would fall under clause (g) of Article 48 of the Stamp Act. ——Sch. I, Table A, Regn. 72—Directors— Power of —Authority to sue challenged — Plea by way of defence to suit—Competency—Procedure.

If authority is wanted to use the name of the company, it must be authority got from the proper quarter, either from the directors or from the shareholders conveved for the purpose. The onus is on the defendants to prove that the action was unauthorised.

The directors and the share-holders in general meeting are primary organs of the company between whom the company's powers are divided. The general meeting cannot restrain the directors from conducting action in the name of the company. Th appropriate authority to start an action on the company's behalf is the Board of Directors to whom this power is delegated as an incident to the management of the company. The only way in which the general body of the share-holders can control the exercise of the powers vested by the Articles in the directors is by altering the Articles, or, if opportunity arises under the Articles by refusing to re-elect the directors of whose action they disapprove. They cannot themselves usurp the powers which by Articles are vested in the directors, nor can the directors usurp the powers vested by the Articles in the general body of the share-holders.

Where in a suit by the director restraining the defendants from invading the powers of the director, the defendants question the authority of the plaintiffs to sue in the name of the company, the defendants cannot ask for a general meeting of the share-holders to be convened to ascertain the wishes of the shareholders as to the continuance of the suit. Such a general meeting is conditioned upon a prior notice. 65 Cal W N 32:(1961)31 Com Cas 301:AIR 1961 Cal 251 (254, 256, 257) (Prs 13, 14, 19, 20, 22).

Held, that in the eye of law, directors are agents of the company, for which they act, and the general principles of the law of principal and agent regulate in most respects the relationship of the company and its directors. Hence, where directors make a contract in the name of, or purporting to bind the company, it is the company — the principal — which is liable on it, not the directors; they are not personally liable unless they undertook personal liability by contracting in their own names, except in cases where under the law of principal and agent or under the provisions of the Companies Act they are made personally liable. The same principles apply to Managing Directors and Managing Agents. The clerks and employees of a person engaged in the promotion are not promoters, but if they in fact take part, outside their duties as such clerk or employee, in the promotion, they will themselves be promoters.

The word 'amalgamation' has no definite legal meaning. It contemplates a state of things under which two companies are so joined as to form a third entity, or one company is absorbed into and blended with another company. Amalgamation does not involve the formation of a new company to carry on the business of the old company. Held on facts that having regard to the provisions of S. 153-A of the Companies Act, and the resolution of the company that the assets and liabilities continue to remain those of B company, it can be said that there has been no amalgamation of the two companies A and B. Even granting that the assets of A (now in liquidation) are with B company, the remedy of D the Branch Manager of the A company at Guntur is to make the liquidator follow those assets and realise them, but not claim a decree against B. ——Sch. I, Table A, Regn. 73 — Director's liability by conduct.

——Sch. I, Table A, Regns. 74 and 76 — Board of directors — Meeting — Chairman of Board elected under Regn. 76 (1) has only casting vote and not the Chairman of a meeting chosen under Regn. 76 (2).

Whereas every meeting of the Board of Directors must have a chairman of the meeting, it is not necessary for the Board to elect a chairman for presiding over all its meetings for a particular period. It is only the latter who is termed 'Chairman of the Board.' A Chairman chosen by directors to preside at one single meeting is only referred to as the chairman of the meeting. Under the general law the chairman of meeting has no casting vote. He has a vote like an ordinary member. The right to give a casting vote has therefore to be conferred by statute before it can be exercised. Under Regn. 74 (2), this right has only been conferred on the Chairman of the Board elected under Regn. 76 (1) and has not been conferred on the chairman of a meeting chosen under Regn. 76 (2). R. 3—Petition for removal of directors and manager of a company — Union of India, petitioner before the Companies Tribunal — Mismanagement, fraud and misappropriation of funds, the grounds—Affidavit based on information and belief—Further affidavit of particulars also on information and belief — Petition maintainable—Companies Act (1 of 1956), Ss. 10-C and 388-B and 398.

By a Petition No. 9 of 1964, dated 30th September, 1964 the Government of India applied under S. 318-B read with Ss. 401 and 403 of the Companies Act to the Companies Tribunal in New Delhi for the removal of certain Directors of the Bennett Coleman & Co. on grounds of mismanagement, fraud, misappropriation of the Company's funds by the said directors for restraining the manager of the Company and for the appointment of a special officer to conduct the business of the Company. The Government had applied for interim relief. The affidavit in verification of the Petition sworn by an officer of the Central Government stated that the statements in the said Petition were based on information which he believed to be true. Shri S. P. Jain, the 2nd respondent, one of the Directors of the Company on the 1st December, 1965 filed an application before the Tribunal asking for better and further particulars in respect of certain averments made in the Petition. A reply was filed by the Central Government and the verification was once again based on information and belief but gave the sources of information on which the particulars were given. Nearly one year later on the 20th April 1965, Shri Jain filed an Application No. 37 of 1965 to have the Central Government's Petition dismissed on the ground that the said petition, was not properly verified, that the said petition and interim application should have been supported by affidavit of persons having personal knowledge and, as such, did not fulfil the necessary requirements of the Companies Act, and that these defects were fatal and could not be cured by filing further affidavits. The Tribunal after hearing both the parties by its order dated 12th/13th May, 1965 dismissed the application of Shri Jain. Against the said order, Shri Jain appealed to the Bombay High Court.

Shri Jain contended firstly that the petition of the Central Government must be dismissed as it was not made on the personal knowledge of Mr. Dang who made the affidavit for the Central Government and that no further affidavits could be filed. Secondly, he contended that no further evidence could be adduced by the Central Government.

Held, the Companies (Court) Rules, 1959 (framed by the Supreme Court) govern the proceedings under the Companies Act (1 of 1956). Rule 11 (a) of the Rules provides that certain applications under the said Act shall be by petitions; application under S. 398 is one of them. Rule 17 provides that Forms in Appendix I, where applicable shall be used. Rule 18 (a) provides for drawing up of affidavits and R. 21 prescribes that every petition shall be verified by the petitioner or one of the petitioners, the manner of swearing is prescribed by Form 3. Rule 24 relates to advertisements of petitions and R. 26 relates to service of petition on respondents. Rule 34 requires every person, intending to appear at the hearing of the petition, to give notice to the petitioner within the time fixed and further requires a person intending to oppose the same, to furnish the grounds of his opposition. Rule 36 relates to the procedure at the hearing. Rule 9 states that nothing in the Rules shall be deemed to limit or affect the inherent powers of Court to give such directions or make such orders as may be necessary for the ends of justice. The Companies Tribunal Regulations, 1964, are substantially similar though not in identical words. Regulation 4 of Chap. 7 relating to affidavits verifying petitions corresponds to R. 21 of the Rules and Form 2 of the Regulations is the same as Form 3 of the Rules. Section 10-C of the Act and Regulation I of Chapter 20 empower the Tribunal to receive oral and documentary evidence or receive affidavit evidence at its discretion. The Code of Civil Procedure is made applicable, so far as may be. Thus, the proceedings under S. 398, in Courts or before the Tribunal, are civil proceedings as indicated above (just as suits are instituted by plaint, summonses are issued, written statements filed, etc., the only difference is as to veryfication of pleadings in that the petition is required to be verified by the statutory affidavit). The purpose of the affidavit, to be filed along with the petition is nothing but the verification of the averments in the petition. The affidavit in verification of the contents of the petition under S. 398 of the Act can be made by the deponent on his personal knowledge as well as information received by him and believed by him to be true. Rule 21 read with Form 3 is identical with O. 6, R. 15, Code of Civil Procedure. Order 19 of the Code relates to affidavits directed to be filed in Courts in proof of facts at the stage of hearing. Rule 3 of the said Order requires that the affidavit be confined to facts within the knowledge of the deponent. It cannot be inferred therefrom that affidavits filed for any purpose whatsoever must conform to the said rule. Rule 36 of the Rules relates to the powers of the Court at the hearing; similarly S. 10-C of the Act confers on the Tribunal the powers vested in Courts trying suits, in respect of matters detailed therein. Regulation 1 of Chapter 20 of the Regulations makes inter alia O. 18 (in respect of examining witnesses) and O. 19 (in respect of reception of evidence on affidavits) applicable to the Tribunal.

No case cited has laid down as a proposition of law that a petition verified by an affidavit based on information and belief is liable to be dismissed in limine for want of personal knowledge of facts on the part of the deponent; nor has it been laid down that the affidavits of the petitioner or the supporting affidavits of other persons are to be the only evidence on the side of the petitioner (excepting the (1965) 1 Comp. L. J. 35 : (1965) 35 Com Cas 187). That apart, the petitioner, the Union of India, are not likely to know all the material facts personally; necessarily, the averments have to be made on information received from various sources or persons and believed to be true.

Held on facts, that the affidavits filed with the petition satisfies the requirements of Companies (Court) Rules, 1959, R. 21 and sworn in conformity with Form 3, is proper and the petition can be entertained by the Tribunal. Held that as the cause of action was one common to all the contributories which included the original winding up petitioner the death of the winding up petitioner was sufficient cause for an order of substitution of contributories who had entered appearance in support of the petition under R. 101 of the Companies (Court) Rules. In fact it was a cause stronger than the causes specifically mentioned in Cls. (1) to (4) of the rule and the substitution clearly fell within the "other sufficient cause" of the following clause. Even reading this clause ejusdem generis with Cls. (1) to (4) which provide for cases of default or disability on the part of the original petitioner it would cover the case of death which is the ultimate and most absolute default and disability. 1965 Ker L T 1110: 1965 Ker L J 1022 : (1965) 2 Com L J 316 : (1965) 2 Ker L R 432 : I L R 1966) 1 Ker 78 : AIR 1966 Ker 169 (170) (Pr 1).

If the notice contemplated by that Rule is not given, the report of the Liquidator cannot be considered by the Court until the requirement of that Rule has been complied with. Neither R. 6 nor R. 33 provide any excuse for non-compliance with R. 137 (2). Rule 137 (2), Companies (Court) Rules, 1959, is quite specific on the question of the notice to the public about the date of the consideration of the report of the liquidator by the Court. An order made but not yet perfected can be recalled in exercise of inherent power of Court under S. 151, C. P. Code. But in the present case it was held that inherent powers should not be exercised, (1922) 43 M L J 332 : 24 Bom L R 1238 : 26 C W N 697 ; 49 I A 144 : AIR 1927 P C 112; AIR 1955 S C 425 ; AIR 1950 All 450 ; AIR 1949 Bom 339; (1909) ILR 37 Cal 259; (1915) 19 C W N 835; (1918) 22 C W N 446 ; (1935) 39 C W N 1259; 43 M L J 332; 74 Bom L R 1238 : 26 C W N 697 ; AIR 1922 P C 112. RULE 176

——R. 176—Official Liquidator rejected claim for compound interest but admitted claim for principal and calculated simple interest—Application under R. 176 for expunction of proof admitted by liquidator—Company Judge could expunge proof of entire claim. See Civil P C. (1908), S. 11. (1965) 1 Comp L J 99 : 1965 All L J 330.

——R. 176—Liquidation — Proof admitted by liquidator – Application by liquidator for expunction of proof on the ground that it was admitted improperly or by mistake — Whether proof can be expunged — Res judicata—Case liable to dismissal on two grounds —Dismissal on one ground – Whether res judicata applies in respect of the other ground.

The appellant, a creditor of a company under liquidation, filed a claim before the Official Liquidator for a sum of Rs, 11,000 and odd, which included compound interest on the principal. The Official Liquidator admitted the claim as regards the principal, rejected the claim for compound interest and culculated simple interest. Being dissatisfied with the decision of the liquidator the appellant appealed to the Company Judge under R. 164 of the Companies (Court) Rules, 1959, but the appeal was dismissed. Further appeal to the Bench was also dismissed. Subsequently, the liquidator applied to the Company Judge for expunction of the proof of the appellant's claim under R. 176 on the ground that it was admitted improperly or by mistake. The proof was expunged on the ground that the appellant's claim even for the principal and simple interest had been barred by time before he filed it before the Liquidators. Against this order the appellant appealed and raised two contentions, viz., (i) that the decision in the appeals filed by the appellant under R. 164 against the rejection of his claim for compound interest operates as res judicata and (ii) that the decision of the liquidator admitting the claim as regards the principal and simple interest merged in the order passed by the Court in the appeals under R. 164 and that the Company Judge had no power to review the order passed by him previously.

Held, that the right of a liquidator to apply for expunction of a proof conferred by R. 176 of the Companies (Court) Rules. 1959, arises on the admission of the proof and is not restricted by any condition. The only condition required for the liquidator's applying for expunction of a proof is that it had been admitted; there is no provision laying down any other limit, as that of time, within which he must apply. There is nothing in this rule or in any other rule suggesting that on the happening of a certain event his right to apply under this rule lapses or is extinguished. When a case can be dismissed on two grounds its dismissal on one ground does not operate as res judicata in respect of the other ground. Therefore, the decisions of this Court in the appeals under R. 164 did not involve a decision that the appellant's claim was not barred by time and, therefore, there was no question of those decisions operating as res judicata in the present proceedings under R. 176, where the only question is whether the claim was barred by time or not. AIR 1962 S C 338; AIR 1963 S C 1124, Ref. (1965) 1 Com L J 99 : 1965 All L J 330 : ILR (1965) 1 All 866.

——R. 176 — Proof of debt — Expunging of proof — Principle of res judicata whether can be applied — Whether proof can be expunged on mistake of fact and law.

The appellant, who was one of the creditors of a company under liquidation, claimed that he had advanced Rs. 3,490 to the Company. On the first scrutiny, the Official Liquidator admitted the claim for Rs. 2,780.86 but subsequently he made an application under R. 176 of the Companies (Court) Rules (1959), for the expunging of the entry from the list of debts, which was allowed. On appeal,

Held, that R. 176 of the Companies (Court) Rules, (1959), expressly empowers the Court to expunge an entry relating to proof of a debt. The power conferred by the said rule is analogous to the power of review. When a Court exercises the power of review, no considerations relating to res judicata will arise. The words 'proof has been improperly admitted or admitted by mistake' in R. 176 are comprehensive enough to cover to mistakes of fact and law. The rule will also apply where the Official Liquidator failed on the initial occasion to consider the question of limitation, but came to consider that point subsequently. (1965) 1 Comp L J 248 (All).

Election tribunal is not justified in excluding from consideration the certified copy of Form No. 10 filed by the petitioner to show that a person did act as a polling agent. Under R. 13 (3) of the Conduct of Election Rules, 1961 a polling agent cannot be admitted into the polling station unless he has delivered to the Presiding Officer the instrument of his appointment under sub-r. (2) of R 13 after duly completing and signing before the Presiding Officer the declaration contained therein. If, therefore a person did deliver to the Presiding Officer the instrument of his appointment and sign before him the necessary declaration, then it would be legitimate to think that he did begin acting as a polling agent of the candidate.

If after his appointment as a polling agent the person did act in that capacity, then under Explanation (2) to S. 123 of the Representation of the People Act 1951, it would be deemed that he assisted in furtherance of the prospects of candidate's election. 1964 M P L J 160 : 1964 Jab L J 147 : A I R 1964 Madh Pra 92 (96) (Pt B) (Pr 8) (DB).

RULE 35

● ——Rr. 35, 36— Entry in electoral roll —Power of Presiding officer to disregard errors.

The elector is entitled to the inclusion of his name on the electoral roll so that he may vote at the election. If the entry in the electoral roll relating to him is erroneous or defective in any material particular, he may obtain correction of the error or defect by recourse to the machinery provided in the Representation of the People Act, 1950 and the Registration of Electors Rules, 1960. In the absence of such a correction he runs the risk of a challenge at the polling station and may be debarred from voting if he fails to establish his identity. But the error or defect in the entry does not disqualify the elector from voting. It is still open to him to satisfy the Presiding Officer at the polling station that he is really the elector to whom the entry relates. R. 35 (4) of the Conduct of Elections Rules 1961, makes it obligatory on the Presiding Officer to overlook merely clerical or printing errors if he is satisfied about the identity of the elector. But the power of the Presiding Officer to disregard errors in the entry is not rigidly circumscribed by R. 35 (4). Rules 35 and 36 confer upon the Presiding Officer ample power of enquiry into the identity of the elector. If on such enquiry he is satisfied that the claimant is really the elector referred to in the entry and some parts of the entry are incorrect or erroneous descriptions of the claimant, he may disregard those errors and issue the ballot paper to the claimant. Thus under R. 35 (4) he must disregard merely clerical and printing errors, and in the exercise of his general powers of enquiry under Rr. 35 and 36, he may disregard other errors if he is satisfied about the identity of the elector. Where, therefore, the Presiding Officer was satisfied that the 19 voters were the electors referred to in the relevant entries and the surnames and the father's name given in them were erroneous and should be disregarded, the ballot papers must be issued to all the 19 voters. No distinction could be made between an error in the father's name and an error in the surname of the elector. Shankar Babaji Savant v. RULE 46

——Rr. 46, 92—Tampering with ballot paper—Fraud —Proof — Suspicion is not permissible. See Ibid, Rr. 92, 46. 1961 M P L J 1021 : 1962 Jab L J 132.

RULE 56

——Rr. 56, 57 and 63—Powers of Election Tribunal —Tribunal has power to scrutinise reasons for rejection of votes and order re-counting of valid votes if prima facie case is made out—This is however not a matter of right. See Representation of the People Act (1951), S. 98. AIR 1964 Andh Pra 190 (DB).

——Rr. 56, 57—Confusion caused by original mark and impression—Test to determine original mark.

In order to determine which are the original marks put by the voter and which are mere impressions created on account of wrong folding or any other cause, a sure test is to examine the reverse of the ballot papers against natural light. By doing so, a reflection will be noticed of some depression caused on the ballot paper, obviously by the pressure put on it by the voter while affixing the mark with the rubber stamp. No such reflection of depression can be created merely by some ink impression having been caused due to folding on some other part of the ballot paper. Therefore, it can safely be assumed that the point at which such reflection of depression is noticeable is the point where the original mark was put by the voter. A I R 1965 Pat 449 (457, 458) (Pt C) (Pr 20).

——R. 56 (2) (a) — Ballot paper bearing thumb impression of voter — Elector being identifiable, ballot paper must be rejected. AIR 1965 Pat 449(458)(Pt D) (Pr 29) (DB).

RULE 57

——Rr. 57, 56 — Election Tribunal has power to scrutinise reasons for rejection of votes and order recounting. See Ibid, R. 56. A I R 1964 Andh Pra 190 (DB).

——Rr. 57, 56—Confusion caused by original mark and impression — Test to determine original mark. See Ibid, R. 56. AIR 1965 Pat 449.

RULE 62

——Rr. 62 and 63—Recount of votes - Mere suspicion of mistake in counting is not sufficient—Proper stage for recount — Recount is in discretion of Tribunal. See Representation of the People Act (1951), S. 116-A. 1964 All L J 875 : AIR 1966 All 20 (DB).

RULE 63

——Rr. 63, 62—Re-count of votes — Mere suspicion of mistakes in counting is not sufficient—Proper stage for re-count — Recount is in discretion of tribunal. See Ibid, R. 62. 1964 All L J 875: A I R 1966 All 20 (DB).

——Rr 63, 23 - Recount of votes—Claim for—When can be made—Representation of the People Act (1951), S. 100 (1) (d) (iii) and (iv) — Elections — Recount of votes.

Where there is no proof, not even suspicion, of any irregularity at the counting of votes, there is no justification for directing a recount of votes. An election petitioner cannot claim a recount only because in his election petition he has prayed that on a proper counting of votes he would be the person to secure a majority of lawful votes. Nor can the petitioner base his claim on the mere fact that successful candidate has been elected by a small margin of votes.

Under our law the right to have a recount is before the declaration of the result, as has been provided in R. 63 of the Conduct of the Election Rules. A tribunal can direct a recount only in cases which are substantiated by specific instances and reliable prima facie evidence. 1963 Mad W N 377: (1963) 2 Mad L J 1 : AIR 1963 Mad 390 (392) (Pt B) (Prs 11, 12, 13, 15) (DB).

RULE 92

——Rr. 92, 46 — Fraud — Tampering with ballot paper—Proof—Suspicion is not permissible.

A charge of tampering with the ballot papers or other type of fraud has to be proved by established facts or inferences legitimately drawn from those taken together as a whole; suspicions, surmises and conjectures are not permissible substitutes for those facts or inferences.

Held, that from the fact that the Returning Officer parted with the custody of the ballot papers in obedience to the Tribunal's order and for some time the ballot papers were in the custody of the Tribunal, and that they were not properly sealed in the presence of the candidates or their counting agents, the inference that there was possibility of the ballot papers being tampered with when they were in the custody of the Tribunal could not be legitimately drawn from the evidence led in the case. 1962 Jab L J 132 : 1961 M P L J 1021.

● ——Preamble—Interpretation of Statutes—Words in legislative entries must receive wide interpretation. See Income-tax Act (1922), S. 2 (6-A) (e). AIR 1965 S C 1375.

● ——Preamble — Power of Parliament to cede any part of territory of India—Reference to Preamble — —Permissibility.

The preamble is not a part of the Constitution and, it has never been regarded as the source of any substantive power conferred on the Government of the Indian Union or on any of its departments. Such powers embrace only those expressly granted in the body of the Constitution and such as may be implied from those so granted. What is true about the powers is equally true about the prohibitions and limitations. One of the attributes of sovereignty is the power to cede parts of national territory if necessary. It is not right in contending that the preamble imports any limitation on the exercise of what is generally regarded as a necessary and essential attribute of sovereignty. ——Preamble—Cession of territory—Pre-existing law in ceded territory to continue until changed by new sovereign —(Constitution of India, Art. 1).

Ordinarily the pre-existing state of law in a ceded territory would continue until the new sovereign or legislature changed it. The will of the new sovereign to change the pre-existing law in a ceded territory will have the effect of repealing the said law and the principles applicable to the case of repeal will be applicable in such cases. 2. Aims and ideals of the Constitution.

——Preamble — It must never be forgotten that according to our legal system justice must not only be done but it must also manifestly and undoubtedly appear or seen to be done— It is only then that citizens of our country feel that the Preamble does not contain mere empty words. I L R (1959) Punj 1778 : AIR 1960 Punj 35 (40) (Pt F) (Pr 9).

3. Interpretation of the Constitution—General.

● ——Preamble—Interpretation of the Constitution—Courts should not proceed mechanically but should give effect to real intention.

Per Das Gupta, J.— In interpreting the Constitution the Courts have to take a broad and liberal view of what has been provided and should not rest content with the mere grammarian's role. If, as is undoubtedly true, a syllogistic or mechanical approach of construction and interpretation of statutes should always be avoided, it is even more important when we construe a Constitution that we should not proceed mechanically but try to reach the intention of the Constitution-makers by examining the substance of the thing and to give effect to that intention, if possible. Commercial Tax Officer, 1963 Cur L J (S C) 126 : (1963) 33 Com Cas 1057 : (1963) 2 Comp L J 234 : (1963) 2 S C J 605 : (1964) 2 S C A 201 : A I R 1963 S C 1811 (1837) (Pt D) (Pr 76).

● ——Preamble—Expressions used in Constitution—Liberal interpretation.

Per Shah, J. — The Constitution is but the declaration of the will of the people, and must be interpreted liberally, and not in any narrow or doctrinaire spirit. It must be interpreted according to its true purpose and intent as disclosed by the phraseology in its natural signification in the light of its setting and its dynamic character which is intended to fulfil the aspirations of the people. State Trading Corporation of India v. Commercial Tax Officer, 1963 Cur L J (S C) 126 : (1963) 33 Com Cas 1057 : (1963) 2 Comp L J 234 : (1963) 2 S C J 605 : (1964) 2 S C A 201 : A I R 1963 S C 1811 (1841) (Pt E) (Pr 93).

● ——Preamble —Interpretation of Constitution.

Per Das, Sarkar and Das Gupta; JJ. : A broad and liberal spirit must inspire those whose duty it is to interpret an organic instrument which sets up a constitutional machinery ; a machinery meant to control the life of a nation to embody its ideals and facilitate the realisation of such ideals for the present and the future; this does not however imply that those whose duty it is to interpret the Constitution are free to stretch or pervert the language of the enactment in the interests of any legal or constitutional theory or even for the purpose of supplying omissions or of correcting supposed errors. In re, Sea Customs, Act (1878), S. 20 (2) (1964) 1 I T J 671 : (1964) 2 S C J 51: (1964) 2 S C A 97: (1964) 3 S C R 787 : AIR 1963 S C 1760 (1780) (Pt B) (Pr 38).

● ——Preamble, Arts. 245 and 246—Interpretation of Constitution—Legislative entry — General words of wide amplitude —Narrow construction out of place—Interpretation of Statutes.

It is an elementary cardinal rule of interpretation that the words used in the Constitution which confer legislative power must receive the most liberal construction and if they are words of wide amplitude, they must be interpreted so as to give effect to that amplitude. A general word used in an entry must be construed to extend to all ancillary or subsidiary matters which can fairly and reasonably be held to be included in it. ● ——Preamble—Interpretation of Statutes— Constitutional question—Duty of Court. See Interpretation of Statutes. AIR 1961 S C 232.

● ——Preamble—Construction—Fundamental rights enacted for benefit of individual and those enacted in public interest—Distinction—American Constitution—Waiver of fundamental rights.

Per Bhagwati, J. — The preamble to our Constitution, Art. 13 and the language in which the fundamental rights have been enacted lead to one conclusion only that whatever be the position in America, no distinction can be drawn here, as has been attempted in the United States of America, between the fundamental rights which may be said to have been enacted for the benefit of the individual and those enacted in public interest or on grounds of public policy. It is the sacred duty of the Supreme Court to safeguard the fundamental rights enacted in Part III of our Constitution. The limitation on those rights have been enacted in the Constitution itself, e. g., in Arts. 19, 33 and 34. There is no justification whatever for importing any notions from the United States of America or the authority of cases decided by the Supreme Court there in order to whittle down the plenitude of the fundamental rights enshrined in Part III of our Constitution.

Per Bhagwati and K. Subba Rao, JJ.—It is not open to a citizen to waive his fundamental rights conferred by Part III of the Constitution. It would be a sacrilege to whittle down those rights.

Per S. K. Das, J. (dissenting). — There is no such vital distinction between the provisions of the American Constitution and those of our Constitution as would lead one to the conclusion that the doctrine of waiver applies in respect of constitutional rights guaranteed by the American Constitution but will not apply in respect of fundamental rights guaranteed by the Indian Constitution.

Where a right or privilege guaranteed by the Constitution rests in the individual and is primarily intended for his benefit and does not infringe on the right of others, it can be waived provided such waiver is not forbidden by law and does not contravene public policy or public morals. Basheshar Nath v. Commr. of Income tax, Delhi, (1959) 35 I T R 190 : 1959 Sup (1) S C R 528 : (1959) S C J 1207 : A I R 1959 S C 149 (160, 163, 177, 178) (Pt D) (Prs 21, 32, 68, 73, 82).

● ——Preamble—Constitutional enactment—Rules of interpretation which apply to other statutes are equally applicable to interpretation of such enactment. See Interpretation of Statutes. AIR 1955 S C 58.

● ——Preamble— Constitutional Law—Interpretation —Principles stated. See Interpretation of Statutes. AIR 1954 S C 314.

● ——Preamble — Provisions dealing with fundamental rights—Construction.

Per Bose, J. — The provisions in the Constitution touching fundamental rights must be construed broadly and liberally in favour of those on whom the rights have been conferred. Dwarkadas Shrinivas v. Sholapur Spinning and Weaving Co., Ltd. 1954 S C J 175 : 67 Mad L W 176 : (1954) 1 Mad L J 355: (1954) 24 Com Cas 103 : 1954 S C A 132 : 1954 S C R 674 : 56 Bom L R 681 : A I R 1954 S C 119 (138) (Pt H) (Pr 60).

● ——Preamble—Interpretation.

If the language of an Article of the Constitution is plain and unambiguous and admits of only one meaning then the duty of the Court is to adopt that meaning irrespective of the inconvenience that such a construction may produce. If however, two constructions are possible, then the Court must adopt that which will ensure smooth and harmonious working of the Constitution and eschew the other which will lead to absurdity or give rise to practical inconvenience or make well established provisions of existing law nugatory. State of Punjab v. Ajab Singh, (1952) S C J 664 : 1953 Cri L J 180 : 1953 S C R 254 : I L R (1953) Punj 121 : 1952 S C A 791 : 1953 Mad W N 355 : A I R 1953 S C 10 (14) (Pt A) (Pr 15).

● ——Preamble—Construction of Constitution.

If two constructions are possible, the Court should adopt that which will implement and discard that which will stultify the apparent intention of the makers of the Constitution. State of Bihar v. Kameshwar Singh, 65 Mad L W 527 : 1952 S C J 354 : I L R 31 Pat 565 : 1952 S C R 889 : 1953 S C A 53 : A I R 1952 S C 252 (285) (Pt L) (Pr 95).

● ——Preamble—Intepretation — Spirit of Constitution when can be looked into.

(Per Mahajan and Das, JJ.) — It is well settled that recourse cannot be had to the spirit of the Constitution when its provisions are explicit in respect of a certain right or matter. When the fundamental law has not limited either in terms or by necessary implication the general powers conferred on the Legislature, it is not possible to deduce a limitation from something supposed to be inherent in the spirit of the Constitution. The spirit of the Constitution cannot prevail as against its letter. (Patanjali Sastri, C. J.: See para. 12). 13 Wend 325, Distinguished. State of Bihar v. Kameshwar Singh, 65 Mad L W 527 : 1952 S C J 354 : I L R 31 Pat 565 : 1952 S C R 889 : 1953 S C A 53 : A I R 1952 S C 252 (309, 315, 316) (Pt XX) (Prs 201, 231).

● ——Preamble — Interpretation of Constitution — Analogous provision in Constitution of another country whether can be good guidance.

Per B K. Mukherjea, J.—When the same words are not used, it is against the ordinary canons of construction to interpret a provision in the Constitution of India in accordance with the interpretation put upon a somewhat analogous provision in the Constitution of another country, where not only the language is different, but the entire political conditions and constitutional set up are dissimilar. A. K. Gopalan v. State of Madras, (1950) 2 Mad L J 42 : 63 Mad L W 638 : 1950 S C J 174 : 51 Cri L J 1383 : 1950 S C R 88 : 1950 Mad W N 495 : 1950 Mad W N (Cri) 127: A I R 1950 S C 27 (102) (Pt H) (Pr 192).

● ——Preamble — Construction — Sovereign Democratic Republic—Meaning of.

Per Beg, J.—The Constitution as its preamble states, is a creation of the will of "the People of India" who have, as the Preamble enunciates, 'Solemnly resolved to constitute India into a Sovereign Democratic Republic". The idea of sovereignty involves freedom from all foreign control or dominion. The idea of democracy involves freedom from all internal control or dominion. Both the ideas combined together reassert the sovereignty and paramountcy of the people's will over everything. The idea of republic indicates the representative character of the sovereign democracy that is sought to be installed. It means that the absolute power vested in the people of India under the Constitution is to be exercised by them through their duly elected representatives in the various Union and State Legislature. Ram Nandan v. State, 1958 All L J 793 : 1959 Cri L J 128 : 1959 All Cr R 1 : 1959 All W R (H C) 796 : I L R (1958) 2 All 84 : A I R 1959 All 101 (118) (Pt G) (Pr 65) (FB).

[Reversed on another point in A I R 1962 S C 955.]

——Preamble—Interpretation—Meaning of words.

Per Desai, J. — It is wrong thing to say that certain words in a Constitution are used abuudanti cautela. Only those words which are added by way of an explanation or illustration or interpretation can be said to have been added by way of abundant caution. 1957 All W R (H C) 268 : A I R 1957 All 505 (520) (Pt R) (Pr 25) (DB).

——Preamble—Construction—Words used in Constitution—Interpretation of.

Words used in the Constitution must be interpreted so as to give the same meaning which was given to these words under the common law and the framers of the Constitution must be intended to have used those words in the same sense. ● ——Preamble — Construction of words in Constitution.

Per Sarjoo Prasad, C. J. ; The words of the Constitution must be naturally and liberally construed, and no narrow or restricted interpretation should be put upon the words unless such interpretation is forced by the context in which they occur. Each general word should be held to include all ancillary or subsidiary matters which can be fairly and reasonably said to be comprehended in it. Girijananda v. State of Assam, AIR 1956 Assam 33 (36) (Pt D) (Pr 7) (SB).

● ——Preamble—Interpretation—Principles of.

The words of the Constitution Act or the present Constitution have to be interpreted in a liberal and natural manner and not in a narrow and pedantic sense and no forced limitation should be put upon the words used, unless the context in which they occur expressly so requires.

Where the main object and intention of a statute are clear, it must not be reduced to a nullity by the draftman's unskilfulness or ignorance of the law, except in a case of necessity, or the absolute intractability of the language used. Raja Bhairabendra Narayan Bhup v. The State of Assam, ILR (1956) 8 Assam 379 (FB).

● ——Preamble—Interpreration of — Words should be liberally construed

The cardinal rule of interpretation is that words should be read in their ordinary, natural and grammatical meaning subject to this rider that in construing words in a constitutional enactment conferring legislative power the most liberal construction should be put upon the words so that the same may have effect in their widest amplitude. AIR 1955 S C 58, Rel. on. Barua v. State of Assam, AIR 1955 Assam 249 (260) (Pt K) (Pr 23) (SB).

[Reversed on another point in AIR 1961 S C 232].

● ——Preamble — Interpretation of — Harmonious construction.

The Constitution with all its parts is one document. It is a co-ordinated whole. Its parts are not designed to produce conflicts. As parts of the same body they have to work in harmony. Each part ought to be so read that all receive full meaning and effect. Barua v. State of Assam, AIR 1955 Assam 249 (268) (Pt P) (Pr 59) (SB).

[Reversed on another point in AIR 1961 S C 232].

● ——Preamble — Interpretation — Hardship. See Civil P. C. (1908), Preamble. AIR 1954 Assam 224 (FB).

——Preamble — Construction of — Principles.

A Constitution has to be interpreted, like any other statute, by reference to its terms and language and these alone, and should not be construed in a narrow and pedantic sense. A Constitution of a Government is a living and organic thing which of all instruments has the greatest claim to be construed ut res magis valeat quam pereat. Where a particular provision in it is capable of more than one construction, it is only the logical one and the one that naturally flows from it which has to be accepted. It is often necessary for this purpose to enter the mind of the framers of the Constitution and in that end it is dangerous to import anything that is not inherently present in it. 1939 F C R 18, Foll. 1952 Cr L J 660: AIR 1952 Bhopal 1 (3) (Pt A) (Prs 8, 9).

——Preamble — Interpretation of.

The broad and liberal spirit which should inspire those whose duty it is to interpret any provision of the Constitution does not permit them to regard themselves as free to stretch or pervert the language of the provision under examination in the interest of any legal or constitutional theory : nor does it permit any latitude on the other hand to accede to any narrow and pedantic interpretation of it. ——Preamble — Interpretation of.

A Constitution, has the greatest claim to be construed ut res magis valeat quam pereat so that the intention of the makers of it may not be treated as vain or left to operate in the air. This maxim requires the Court to see that as far as possible the intention is effectuated to the fullest extent even when there is some obscurity or inexactitude in language. ● ——Preamble—Judicial decision on—Decision on constitutional problems — Attempt to summarise constitutional law should be avoided. See Precedents. AIR 1961 Cal 578 (SB).

——Preamble—Interpretation of—Legislative lists — Entries in — Literal construction.

A constitution is not a statute but is an authority for the making of statutes and, therefore a head of power in a legislative list contained in a constitution is only an expression of a purpose with respect to which laws may be made. Such a head is not to be rigidly construed but on the other hand, a construction most beneficial to the widest possible amplitude of the power conferred must be adopted. Yet in construing a head of power in a legislative list and determining the content of the power granted, one must consider it by reference to other separate and independent grants made to the same legislature by the same constitution and also to the grants made to the other legislature. ——Preamble, Art. 245 and Sch. VII, Lists — Constitutional enactment — Entries in legislative lists—Interpretation of — Doctrine of ancillary and subsidiary powers — Legislative competence to enact particular enactment — Matters to be considered.

In construing words in a constitutional enactment conferring legislative power, the most liberal construction must be put upon the words so that the same may have effect in their widest amplitude. While considering the scope of the various entries in the Legislative Lists, the widest possible amplitude must be given to the words used. The Legislature has power to legislate not only on a subject-matter which falls directly within the subject of the legislative entry but also on a subject-matter which may be ancillary or subsidiary to such subject, for otherwise much of the legislation would be rendered ineffective on the ground that provision which are necessarily incidental to effective legislation on the subject expressly within the power of the Legislature cannot be made by the Legislature on the ground that they fall outside the legislative entry. AIR 1941 F C 16 and AIR 1955 S C 25 and AIR 1959 S C 544 and AIR 1960 S C 424, Rel. on. In every case, therefore, where a provision in an enactment is challenged as beyond the legislative competence of the legislature, the first question that must be considered is whether the provision falls within the express words of the entry conferring power on the Legislature which enacted the legislation. ——Preamble—Interpretation of the Constitution.

A constitutional provision has to be construed in the same manner as the provisions of any other statute by applying the cardinal rules of construction. The intention of the Constitution-makers must be ascertained from the language of the provision and its construction must be by reference to its terms and language. It is the duty of the Court to see that as far as possible the intention of the makers of the Constitution is effectuated to the fullest extent. To arrive at the real meaning of the provision it is also legitimate to consider how the law on the subject stood immediately before the Constitution and the defect which the old law contained and the remedy provided by the Constitution to remove that defect. 1961 M P C 709 : 1961 Jab L J 1132 : 1961 M P L J 1316 : ILR (1962) Madh Pra 226 : AIR 1962 Madh Pra 73 (75, 76) (Pt B) (Pr 5) (DB).

——Preamble—Principles of construction.

Statutes made for the public good such as the Constitution of India ought to be liberally construed; Statuta pro publico commodo late interpretantur. In doing so another principle should not be lost sight of, namely, that safety of the people is the supreme law; salus populi est suprema lex. But the application of these doctrines does not mean that the exact meaning of the words can be departed from or that in order to give effect to what is considered to be the underlying principle it is open to the Court to add by implication, intentions and objects to a statute, which cannot be properly construed from a clear reading of the written words, (sensus verborum est anima legis) "the meaning of the words is the spirit of the law." 1952 Cri L J 170 : AIR 1951 Mad 1015 (1018, 1019) (Pt C) (Pr 4) (DB).

——Preamble—Interpretation—Object and intention to be considered.

The object and intention of the Constitution of India, have first to be gathered and that interpretation which fulfils such an object should be followed, remembering that it is a constitution newly made for the welfare of the people whose safety is the supreme law. In other words, what has to be adopted is to find out what the existing law was and to consider the reason for the change bearing in mind the object which was intended to be fulfilled. In doing so, the historical aspect and perspective have also to be placed in the forefront. 1952 Cri L J 170 : AIR 1951 Mad 1015 (1019, 1020) (Pt D) (Pr 5) (DB).

——Preamble, Arts. 245, 246 — Entries in legislative lists relating to power of taxation—Some recognised rules of construction.

The principles of construction, so far as they are relevant for interpreting entries in the legislative lists relating to the powers of taxation are : (1) Every Entry, in the three Lists (in Sch. VII of the Constitution) except Entry 97 in List I, should be given the widest possible construction. This principle applies both to Entries relating to general powers of legislation as well as to Entries relating to powers of taxation; (2) recourse to residuary powers must be had only as a last resort; (3) general powers of legislation do not take within their fold the power to tax; and (4) the power to tax a property necessarily includes power to tax a right or on incident of ownership. ——Preamble—Change in sovereignty — Annexation of territory—Rights of previous Government in land.

When territory, previously in the occupation and under the rule of an Indian State, passed to the British Government, all rights which the previous Government had in the land determined. In every case the grant of the British Government alone formed the root of title. Thus, the only legally enforceable rights which the malguzaar or any claimant would have, when the sovereignty of the Nagpur territory passed to the East India Company in 1854, against the East India Company or against the British Government, were those and those only which the Company or the Government by agreement express or implied, or by legislation, chose confer upon him. ● ——Preamble—Principles applicable to interpretation of statutes—How far apply.

Though the general principles applicable for the construction of statutes apply also to the construction of a Constitution, there is one difference : that is, that a Constitution should be liberally construed and so interpreted as to carry out its general objects. ● ——Preamble—Construction of Articles — Principle of interpretation of Letters Patent—Applicability—Distinction.

The method of interpretation employed in construing the Letters Patent should not be adopted and will not be appropriate in construing the Articles in the Constitution of India. The Letters Patent are an instrument containing a delegation of power by His Majesty in Council to the High Courts in India, and must necessarily be given a strict interpretation, whereas the Constitution of a great people is not to be interpreted in that manner. Where a power to levy taxes by a municipality is derived from a provision in the constitution, an expression in the legislation embodying that power has to be construed on the same principles which apply to the construction of the constitution. ● — Preamble — Interpretation of Constitution — Liberal interpretation.

The Constitution is unlike most of the numerous statutes that the Courts have to interpret and has to be judged from somewhat different standards. The Executive, the Legislature, and the Judiciary are all its creation, and derive their sustenance from it. It is unlike other statutes which can be at any time altered, modified or repealed. Therefore, the language of the Constitution should be interpreted as if it were a living organism capable of growth and development if interpreted in a broad and liberal spirit, and not in a narrow and pedantic sense. The need for this caution is greater, where the Court is called upon to interpret the Constitution. State of Rajasthan v. ● ——Preamble, Arts. 13 and 31 (before Constitution (Fourth Amendment) Act)—Scope—'Void'—Meaning of—Post-Constitution law violating Art. 31 (2) — Point of time at which its constitutionality has to be judged — Doctrine of Eclipse — Applicability — Doctrine does not apply to Post-Constitution legislation—Such legislation does not revive on amendment of Constitution—U. P. Land Tenures (Regulation of Transfers) Act (XV of 1952), held void. A I R 1957 All 549, Overruled.

The U. P. Land Tenures (Regulation of Transfers) Act (XV of 1952) is unconstitutional as it did not comply with Art. 31 (2) of the Constitution as it stood at the time the Act was passed. The Act does not revive on enactment of the Constitution (Fourth Amendment) Act by virtue of the doctrine of eclipse. (S) AIR 1957 All 549, Overruled : AIR 1954 S C 92, Rel. on. The Constitutionality of a post-Constitution legislation such as U. P. Act (XV of 1952), must be judged on the basis of the Constitution as it was on the date the legislation was passed, subject to any retrospective amendment of the Constitution. It cannot be judged on the basis of the Constitution as it stood on the date of the writ petition challenging validity of such legislation.

The doctrine of eclipse would apply to pre-Constitution laws which are governed by Art 13 (1) and would not apply to post-Constitution laws which are governed by Art. 13 (2). The words 'to the extent of' in Art. 13 do not import any idea of time. They only import the idea that the law may be void either wholly or in part and that only such portions will be void as are inconsistent with Part III or have contravened Part III and no more.

The pre-Constitution laws which were perfectly valid when they were passed and the existence of which is recognised in the opening words of Art. 13 (1) revive by the removal of the inconsistency in question. There is a difference between the language and scope of Art. 13 (1) and (2). Art. 13 (1) declares such pre-Constitution laws as are inconsistent with fundamental rights void. Art. 13 (2 consists of two parts; the first part imposes an inhibition on the power of the State to make a law contravening fundamental rights, and the second part which is merely a consequential one, mentions the effect of the breach by providing that the law shall be void to the extent of the contravention.

The meaning of the word 'void' is, for all practical purposes the same in both the clauses (1) and (2). But there is one vital difference between pre Constitution and post-Constitution laws in this matter. The voidness of the pre-Constitution laws is not from inception. Such voidness supervened when the Constitution came into force and so they existed; and operated for some time and for certain purposes. The voidness of post-Constitution laws on the other hand is from their very inception and they cannot therefore continue to exist for any purpose.

The application of the doctrine arises from the inherent difference between Art. 13 (1) and Art. 13 (2) arising from the fact that one is dealing with pre-Constitution laws and the other is dealing with post-Constitution laws, with the result that in one case the laws being not still-born the doctrine of eclipse will apply while in the other case the laws being still-born there will be no scope for the application of the doctrine of eclipse. ● ——Preamble, Part III (General) — Unconstitutionality of legislation — Statute, otherwise invalid as being unreasonable, is not saved by its being administered in reasonable manner.

The possibility of abuse of a statute otherwise valid does not impart to it any element of invalidity. The converse must also follow that a statute which is otherwise invalid as being unreasonable cannot be saved by its being administered in a reasonable manner. The constitutional validity of the statute would have to be determined on the basis of its provisions and on the ambit of its operation as reasonably construed and properly interpreted and tested in the light of the requirements set out in Part III of the Constitution. 1960 A C 490, Rel on. Collector of Customs Madras v. ● ——Preamble, Arts. 13 and 245 — Construction — Part of law void – Effect—Doctrine of severability.

The question whether a statute which is void in part is to be treated as void in toto, or whether it is capable of enforcement as to that part which is valid is one which can arise only with reference to laws enacted by bodies which do not possess unlimited powers of legislation. The limitation on their powers may be of two kinds; it may be with reference to the subject matter on which they could legislate, or it may be with reference to the character of the legislation which they could enact in respect of subjects assigned to them. When a legislature whose authority is subject to limitations aforesaid enacts a law which is wholly in excess of its powers, it is entirely void and must be completely ignored. But where the legislation falls in part within the area allotted to it and in part outside it, it is undoubtedly void as to the latter; but does it on that account become necessarily void in its entirety? The answer to this question must depend on whether what is valid could be separated from what is invalid, and that is a question which has to be decided by the Court on a consideration of the provisions of the Act. Chamarbaugwalla v. Union of India, 59 Bom L R 973 : (1957) 2 M L J (S C) 76: 1957 S C J 593: (1957) M L J (Cr) 547 : (1957) 2 Andh W R 76: 1957 M P C 630 : 1957 S C A 912 : AIR 1957 S C 628 (633) (Pt F) (Pr 12).

● ——Preamble, Arts. 13 and 245—Construction — Doctrine of severability — Scope and extent of — Rules for construction in applying doctrine.

When a statute is in part void, it will be enforced as regards the rest, if that is severable from what is invalid. It is immaterial for the purpose of this rule whether the invalidity of the statute arises by reason of its subject-matter being outside the competence of the legislature or by reason of its provisions contravening constitutional prohibitions.

Certain rules of construction laid down by the American Courts where the question of severability has been the subject of consideration in numerous authorities, may be summarised as follows : —

1. In determining the question, the intention of the legislature is the determining factor.

2. If the valid and invalid provisions are so inextricably mixed up that they cannot be separated from one another then the invalidity of a portion must result in the invalidity of the Act in its entirety. (Vide Cooley's Constitutional Limitations, Vol. I at pp. 360-361; Crawford on Statutory Construction pp. 217-218).

3. Even when the provisions are distinct and separate, if they all form part of a single scheme intended to be operative as a whole, then also the invalidity of a part will result in the failure of the whole. (Vide Crawford on Statutory Construction, pp. 218-219).

4. Likewise, when the valid and invalid parts of a statute are independent but what is left after omitting the invalid portion is so thin and truncated as to be in substance different from what it was when it emerged out of the legislature, then also it will be rejected in its entirety.

5. The separability of the valid and invalid provisions of a statute does not depend on whether the law is enacted in the same section or different sections.

6. If after the invalid portion is expunged from the statute what remains cannot be enforced without making alterations and modifications therein, then the whole of it must be struck down as void.

7. In detremining the legislative intent on the question of separability, it will be legitimate to take into account the history of the legislation, its object, title and the preamble to it. No doubt the presumption is always in favour of the constitutionality of an enactment, and the burden is upon him who attacks it to show that there has been a clear transgression of the constitutional principles. But this principle does not mean that a statute should be misconstrued or that established facts should be ignored in order to hold a law to be of constitutional validity.

While the Courts cannot go out of their way to invalidate a law on the ground that it is in conflict with the Constitution, they must be vigilant to protect fundamental rights and they cannot allow those rights to be whittled down and the same injustices inequalities and discriminations to continue as existed before the enforcement of the Constitution. ● ——Preamble — Nature of Indian Constitution — Interpretation.

Per Sapru J. — The framers of the Constitution attached importance to the sovereignty of the people. It is a "Controlled Constitution" in the sense that its terms can only be altered with some formality. The Constitution has given to this country a Democratic State. What the framers of the Constitution were after was to establish, what is generally known now as the 'welfare' or the 'social service state'. They had taken a comprehensive view of State activities and they were not dominated by the Laissez-Faire thought of the last century.

On the question of the spirit in which a constitution must be interpreted, the Courts must never forget that it is a Constitution they are expounding. An Act of the Legislature repugnant to the Constitution is void. This theory is essentially attached to a written Constitution and is consequently to be considered by the Courts as one of the fundamental principles of our Constitution. Moti Lal v. ——Preamble, Arts. 13, 245, 246, 254 — Unconstitutionality of legislation—State cannot plead unconstitutionality of its own statute before Courts.

The State cannot be allowed to plead before the Courts the unconstitutionality of its own Statutes. Part III of the Indian Constitution of fundamental rights is, primarily, a bill of rights for the aggrieved persons and should not be used as a convenient platform from which the State can be allowed to fire its own statutes and Acts. But where a conflict arises between Central Law, and State laws, it is open for the State, in a Court to contest that the Central Act invades the State's legislative powers and is therefore violative of the Constitution.

A constitutional point should not be decided on the complaint of one who fails to show that he is injured or aggrieved by its operation and at the instance of one who has availed of its benefits. These two principles are well settled on the point as to the right to take a constitutional objection before a Court. It is settled law that if any interpretation is possible which will save an Act from the attack of unconstitutionality, that interpretation should always be accepted in preference to an alternative interpretation that might also be possible, under which the statute would be void. ● ——Preamble — Interpretation — Question of a statute being impugned as repugnant to or infringing the provisions of Constitution — Portions valid —Severability.

The duty of Courts is to enforce the provisions of the Constitution. If a statute is in accordance with the Constitution it is to be pronounced valid; if it contravenes the Constitution or transgresses the authority vested in the legislature passing the statute it is to be pronounced as invalid. The guiding principles are (1) that Courts are concerned with the power to enact the statute and not with the wisdom thereof; (2) that while the unconstitutional exercise of power of the legislative and executive branches of the Government is subject to restraint by judicial authority the Courts are subject to their own self-restraint. (AIR 1950 S C 27, Foll.)

If portions of a statute are found to be void and if those portions declared void are separable from the rest and the rest being allowed to remain, no different law is created and it is found to be workable also that remaining portion has to be declared valid as law. The Articles in the Constitution which confer on the citizens of India certain fundamental rights are themselves a fundamental law, that is, a law which does not so much confer rights or impose duties, as a law which lays down the norm or standard by which the validity of all other laws is to be tested. Under the Constitution the validity of a law may be challenged in one or other of two ways: (1) on the ground that in enacting the law the Legislature has usurped the jurisdiction of another Legislature; (2) on the ground that in enacting it has exercised a jurisdiction which the Constitution forbade either it or any other Legislature to exercise. ● — Preamble — Constitutional validity of Statute —Scope of judicial review.

When the legislature enacts a measure which is not repugnant to the provisions of the Constitution the legislative will is supreme and its policy is not subject to review by the Courts. If an Act has been regularly passed by a legislature and if it does not infringe upon the inherent right of life, liberty or property, its determination as to the reasonableness of the legislation is conclusive on the Courts. But if the legislature travels beyond the limits set by the Constitution, or if it abridges some fundamental right guaranteed to a citizen, or if it assumes jurisdiction over subjects, not within its legislative cognizance, it is open to the Court to determine the constitutional validity of legislative acts. It must, however, proceed on the assumption that every Act is constitutional unless its repugnancy to the Constitution is made to appear clearly, plainly, palpably and by irrefutable evidence. The reference to the Australian decisions may be useful but in acting upon them, the basic distinction between unitary and a federal type of constitution should not be lost sight of. In Australia all taxing powers belong to the States except those which are specifically reserved to the Commonwealth; and the question always is whether a particular tax falls within the field of taxation reserved to the Commonwealth or not: there can be no overlapping of particular legislative spheres. When India became a sovereign democratic Republic on 26th January, 1950, the validity of all laws had to be tested on the touchstone of the new Constitution and all laws made before the coming into force of the Constitution have to stand the test for their validity of the provisions of Part III of the Constitution. ● ——Preamble and Art. 227 — Retrospective operation — Applicability of General Clauses Act—Order under Assam Opium Prohibition Act—Finality of.

The Constitution in the matter of its interpretation is not placed on any higher pedestal than any other Act of the Legislature of the Dominion. Like all other Acts the General Clauses Act applies for purposes of interpretation of the Constitution and the provisions contained in it will therefore govern the interpretation, unless the context otherwise requires.

The Constitution is a repealing enactment within the meaning of S. 6 of the General Clauses Act. Article 227 has got, therefore no retrospective effect and cannot apply to a proceeding which was pending immediately before the date on which the Constitution came into force and the rights of the parties in regard to that proceeding shall be regulated by the law which was in force on the date immediately preceding 26th January, 1950. Case-law discussed.

Where, therefore, a proceeding under S. 16 of the Assam Opium Prohibition Act was at its appellate stage when the Constitution came into force, Held, that the appellate order, became final under S. 17 (3) of the Act and it was not open to challenge under Art. 227. State v. Judhabir Chetri, ILR (1953) 5 Assam 24 : 1953 Cri L J 395 : AIR 1953 Assam 35 (36, 37, 38, 39) (Pt A) (Prs 6, 8, 10, 13) (F B).

ARTICLE 1

● ——Art. 1 - Federal Constitution—Essential characteristic of federalism.

The Indian Constitution is a Federal Constitution. The essential characteristic of federalism is "the distribution of limited executive, legislative and judicial authority among bodies which are co-ordinate with and independent of each other." The supremacy of the Constitution is fundamental to the existence of a federal State in order to prevent either the Legislature of the federal unit or those of the member States from destroying or impairing that delicate balance of power which satisfies the particular requirements of States which are desirous of union, but not prepared to merge their individuality in a unity. The supremacy of the Constitution is protected by the authority of an independent judicial body to act as the interpreter of a scheme of distribution of powers. Nor is any change possible in the constitution by the ordinary process of federal or State legislation. In re, under Art 143, Constitution of India, (1965) 1 S C A 447 : (1965) 1 S C J 847 : A I R 1965 S C 745 (762) (Pt I) (Pr 39).

● ——Art. 1 (3) (c) — Scope — Power to acquire foreign territories—If conferred

Under international law two of the essential attributes of sovereignty are the power to acquire foreign territory as well as the power to cede national territory in favour of a foreign State.

Article 1 (3) (c) does not purport to confer power on India to acquire territories; it merely provides for and recognises automatic absorption or assimilation into the territory of India of territories which may be acquired by India by virtue of its inherent right as a sovereign State to acquire foreign territory. Indo-Pakisthan Agreement, In re, 1960 S C J 933: (1961) 1 S C A 22: (1960) 3 S C R 250: AIR 1960 S C 845 (856, 858) (Pt C) (Prs 30, 33).

——Art. 1 (3)—Clause 3—General.

The "territory of India" as defined in Art. 1 (3) came into existence for the first time on 26-1-1950. Before that there was nothing which could be considered "the territory of India" in the sense in which the term has been used in the Constitution. A decree passed before the coming into force of the constitution, by the Gwaliar State Court cannot therefore be considered to be a decree passed by a court situate within the territory of India. See Ibid, Art. 261. AIR 1958 All 775 (DB).

——Arts. 1, 2, 3, 4, 255 and 368 and First Schedule—Disintegration of State of Hyderabad—Validity of—Constitutional validity—(States Reorganisation Act (1956), Ss. 2 (g), 3, 7, 8 and 12).

Art. 368, does not in terms exempt Art. 1 or the First Schedule of the Constitution from its operation.

The effect of Ss. 2 (g), 3, 7 and 8 of S. R. Act is that parts of the existing State of Hyderabad, i. e., the State of Hyderabad existing on 31st August 1956, were carved out either to increase the area of another State or to form new States and thereafter, i. e., on 1st November 1956, the Hyderabad State was deleted from the First Schedule. Therefore, the anomaly, viz., whether it is possible to predicate which happened first, namely the process of disintegration or abolition of the State does not arise and the parts were carved out only from and out of the existing State of Hyderabad.

In view of Art. 255, the S. R. Act cannot be questioned on the ground of want of previous recommendation of the President.

Art. 4 is as much a part of the Constitution as Art. 368. The amendment authorised to be made under Art. 4 shall be deemed to be taken away from the category of amendments provided by Art. 368 and therefore, the procedure prescribed under the latter Article need not be followed. S. 12 of the Act was enacted by the Parliament in exercise of the power conferred on it by Art. 4 of the Constitution. If so, it follows that the deletion of the State of Hyderabad from the First Schedule was valid.

The Constitution (Seventh Amendment) Act, 1956, was passed by the Parliament following the procedure laid down by Art. 368 of the Constitution.

For the foregoing reasons, the disintegration of the State of Hyderabad was constitutionally valid (1957) 2 Andh W R 43: ILR (1957) A P 345. AIR 1957 Andh Pra 734 (736, 737, 738) (Pt B) (Prs 6, 9, 10, 11, 13, 14) (DB).

——Art. 1 -Union of States—Nature and characteristic of.

The Constitution is a creation of the people of India, the States themselves being created by the people of India. The Constitution is federal in form but it is not a federation based upon agreement of the component States.

One must however clearly bear in mind the distinction between calling a component State, an autonomous sovereign State, and the question of the nature of its powers within the sphere allotted to it by the Constitution. The Constitution has allowed certain powers exclusively to the local legislature. Within its own allotted sphere, and subject to the Constitution, the State Legislature is supreme and has sovereign powers. There is no question of any extraneous causes or overriding implications. There is however no question of the component States being mere administrative units acting as agents of the Central Government, as during the British regime. Our Constitution combines the features of a federation as well as of an unitary system. In times of emergency, the federal Government can even be made into an unitary one. But all this flows from the Constitution itself. It is not possible to look beyond it and import extraneous factors to control or guide its implementation. 60 Cal W N 555: ILR (1957) 3 Cal 390: AIR 1956 Cal 378 (381, 382) (Pt B) (Pr 10).

——Art. 1 — Acquisition of territory — Modes of —Acquisition of Chandernagore—(International law —Public).

When a territory is acquired by a soveriegn State for the first time, it is an act of State; it matters not how it is acquired; it may be by conquest, it may be by cession following a treaty, it may be by occupation of territory hitherto occupied by a recognised ruler. AIR 1941 P. C. 64, Rel. on.

The transfer of the territory at Chandernagore by a treaty to India is an accomplished fact, which is accepted as such by both the interested parties and consequently, it would be territory of India, whether or not the treaty by which it was ceded was legally valid. ILR (1956) 1 Cal 493: 59 C W N 107 : AIR 1954 Cal 615 (618) (Pt A) (Pr 8) (DB).

● ——Arts 1 (3) and 261 (3) — Scope — Decree of Bombay High Court passed prior to Constitution — Executability in Saurashtra State after Constitution [C. P. Code (Amendment) Act, 1951, S. 20.]

Under Art. 261 (3) of the Constitution it has to be shown not only that the decree sought to be executed is a decree of a Civil Court in territory of India but it has also to be shown that the decree is capable of execution according to law which expression means executable according to the law in force where the decree is sought to be executed.

An ex parte money decree was passed by the Bombay High Court against a subject of the former Nawanagar State (now part of Saurashtra State) before the Constitution of India and the decree was enforceable in Nawanagar only by a suit on the judgment. The execution of the decree had also become barred by limitation according to the law of Saurashtra. The question was whether the decree could be executed in Saurashtra after the coming into force of the Constitution.

Held, (i) a decree of the Bombay High Court passed before the Constitution not being a decree passed by a Court in the territory of India, Art. 261 (3) did not apply to it and it did not become executable under that Article. AIR 1951 S C 124 and AIR 1951 S C 128, Rel. on; AIR 1953 Sau 16 (FB) held to be good law.

(ii) that assuming that the provisions of the C. P. Code (Amendment) Act, 1951, applied to decrees passed before the Constitution such execution was subject to the saving clause in S. 20 of the Act and since the execution of this decree was already barred by the law of limitation of Saurashtra immediately before the application of this Act, it could not be executed even under the provisions of the C. P. Code (Amendment) Act, 1951. Gokaldas Naranji v. Dwarkadas Jethabhai, 6 Sau L R 490 : AIR 1954 Sau 123 (125, 127) (Prs 6, 14, 16) (FB).

Under Art. 239 a State specified in Part C is administered by the President. The States are also component units of the Indian Union like Part-A and Part B States. The State of Vindhya Pradesh is a State forming an independent unit of India. It is a State forming a component unit of the Indian Union and is not merely an administrative unit. It is a legal entity capable of suing and be sued.

Under S. 38 (2), Government of Part C States Act (No. XLIX of 1951) :all executive action of a Part C State shall be expressed to be taken in the name of the Lieut. Governor or Chief Commissioner. The executive power of the Union does not extend to the State of Vindhya Pradesh. The executive power is the executive power of the State of Vindhya Pradesh. Further the provisions of S. 39 show that the consolidated fund of the State is quite separate and distinct from the consolidated fund of India.

Art. 300 provides for bringing suits against the Government of India by the name of the Union of India. The Government of India cannot be sued in respect of contracts made in the exercise of the executive power of a Part C State. AIR 1956 Vin Pra 1 (2, 3, 4, 5) (Pt A) (Prs 4, 5, 7, 11, 14, 15).

ARTICLE 3

● —Art. 3 - Birth of Republic of India — Former Indian States—Merger of such States in India—State succession in respect of such States,

Per Hidayatullah, J. — State succession takes place either in law or in fact. It takes place in law when there is a juridical substitution of one State for another. It takes place in fact when there is (a) annexation or (b) cession or (c) fusion of one State with another or (d) entry into a federal Union or (e) partition or (f) separation or cession. On the 26th January, 1950 when the Republic of India came into existence, there was no succession in fact because none of these events took place. Though the people of India gave themselves a Constitution, there was no State succession in so far as the people of the former Indian States were concerned. No doubt, when the Dominion of India became a Sovereign Democratic Republic, there was a breaking away from the British Crown, but that was a State succession in a different field. In this case the Court is not concerned with the succession of India from the British Crown, but with State succession between Indian State and India, and there was no second succession in 1950. Whatever had happened had already happened in 1948 when the Indian States merged with the Dominion of India. The Act of State which began in 1948 could continue uninterrupted even beyond 1950 and it did not lapse or get replaced by another Act of State.

Per Shah, J. — Promulgation of the Constitution did not result in transfer of sovereignty from the Dominion of India to the Union. It was merely change in the form of Government. By the Constitution, the authority of the British Crown over the Dominion was extinguished, and the sovereignty which was till then rooted in the Crown was since the Constitution came into force derived from the people of India. The new governmental set up was the final step in the process of evolution towards self-government. The continuance of the governmental machinery and of the laws of the Dominion, give a lie to any theory of transmission of sovereignty or of the extinction of the sovereignty of the Dominion, and from its ashes, the springing up of another sovereign as suggested in AIR 1954 S C 447. The view expressed in AIR 1954 S C 447 that the sovereignty of the Dominion of India and of the States were surrendered to the people of India, and in the exercise of the sovereign power the people gave themselves the new Constitution as from January 26, 1950 proceeds on an assumption which is not supported by history or by constitutional theory. The Constituent Assembly which gave form to the Constitution functioned for several years under the old regime, and set up the Constitutional machinery on the foundations of the earlier political set up. It did not seek to destory the past institutions; it raised an edifice on what existed before. The Constituent Assembly moulded itself no new sovereignty; it merely gave shape to the aspirations of the people, by destroying foreign control and evolving a completely democratic form of government as a republic. The process was not one of destruction, but of evolution. State of Gujarat v. Vora Fiddali Badruddin Mithibarwala, (1964) 2 S C A 563 : (1964) 6 S C R 461 : AIR 1964 S C 1043 (1078, 1090, 1091) (Pt C) (Prs 99, 139, 141).

● —Arts. 3, 143 (1) and 368—Indo-Pakisthan Agreement relating to division of Berubari Union and Exchange of Cooch Bihar Enclaves—Effect — If involves cession of national territory.

The Indo-Pakistan agreement was entered into on 10-9-1958 between the Prime Ministers of India and Pakistan with a view to remove the border area disputes and problems. One of the items related to the division of Berubari Union No. 12 and another related to the exchange of old Cooch-Bihar enclaves. The President referred certain questions for the opinion of the Supreme Court under Art. 143 (1) of the Constitution.

Held, (i) that the agreement amounted to cession or alienation of a part of the Indian territory in favour of Pakistan and was not a mere ascertainment or determination of the boundary in the light of and by reference to the Bagge Award. Therefore, the implementation of the agreement would naturally involve the alteration of the content of and the consequent amendment of Art. 1 and the relevant part of the First Schedule to the Constitution.

(ii) That legislative action was necessary for the implementation of the agreement but a law of Parliament relatable to Art. 3 of the Constitution would be incompetent for that purpose. A law of Parliament relatable to Art. 368 is competent and necessary. So acting under Art. 368, Parliament may make a law to give effect to and implement the agreement in question. Parliament may, however, if it so choose, pass a law amending Art. 3 of the Constitution so as to cover cases of cession of the territory of India in favour of a foreign State.

(iii) That the amendment of Art. 1 of the Constitution consequent upon the cession of any part of the territory of India in favour of a foreign State does not attract the safeguard prescribed by the Proviso to Art. 368. ● ——Arts. 3, 4 and 368—Applicability— Scope and effect.

The effect of Art. 4 is that the laws relatable to Art. 2 or Art. 3 are not to be treated as constitutional amendments for the purpose of Art. 368. On the other hand if legislation in respect of the relevant topic is not competent under under Art. 3, Art. 368 would inevitably apply.

Broadly stated Art. 3 deals with the internal adjustment inter se of the territories of the constituent States of India. Foreign territory which after acquisition becomes a part of the territory of India under Art. 1 (3) (c) is included in the last clause of Art. 3 (a) and such territory may, after its acquisition be absorbed in the new State which may be formed under Art. 3 (a).

Article 3 in terms does not refer to the Union territories and so, they are outside the purview of Art. 3 (b), (c), (d) and (e).

The power to cede national territory in favour of a foreign State cannot be read in Art. 3 (c) by implication. The diminution of the area of any State to which it refers postulates that the area diminished from the State in question should and must continue to be a part of the territory of India; it may increase the area of any other State or may be dealt with in any other manner authorised either by Art. 3 or other relevant provisions of the Constitution; but it would not cease to be a part of the territory of India. Hence an agreement which involves a cession of a part of the territory of India in favour of a foreign State cannot be implemented by Parliament by passing a law under Art. 3 of the Constitution. ● ——Art. 3, Proviso (as amended by the Fifth Amendment Act, 1955). — Scope of Proviso — Essential conditions — Substantial amendment to original Bill — Fresh reference to State Legislature not necessary — Meaning of States and Bill — Formation of one unit of Bombay State by S. 8 of Act (XXXVII of 1956) — Validity — Art. 3 not contravened — (States Reorganisation Act (1950), S. 8 (1)) — (Interpretation of Statutes).

The proviso to Art. 3 lays down two conditions; one is that no Bill shall be introduced except on the recommendation of the President, and the second condition is that where the proposal contained in the bill affects the area, boundaries or name of any of the States, the Bill has to be referred by the President to the Legislature of the State for expressing its views thereon. The period within which the State Legislature must express its views has to be specified by the President. If, however, the period specified or extended expires and no views of the State Legislature are received, the second condition laid down in the proviso is fulfilled in spite of the fact that the views of the State Legislature have not been expressed.

The second condition has no drastic effect as to require a fresh reference every time an amendment of the proposal contained in the Bill is moved and accepted in accordance with the rules of procedure of Parliament.

The expression 'State' in Art. 3 obviously refers to the States in the First Schedule and the 'Legislature of the State' refers to the Legislature which each State has under the Constitution.

The word 'Bill' in the proviso need not be interpreted to include an amendment of any of the clauses of the Bill, or at least any substantial amendment thereof.

The contention that the formation of a new Bombay State as envisaged in S. 8 of the Act was so completely divorced from the proposal contained in the Bill that it was in reality a new bill and therefore a fresh reference was necessary, cannot be accepted. There is thus no violation of Art. 3 and the Act or S. 8 thereof is not invalid on that ground. Babulal Parate v. ——Arts. 3 and 4 — Operation of Madras Village Panchayats Act (X of 1950) in Andhra State — (Andhra State Act (1953), S. 53).

As a matter of principle the State laws in force in a territory at the time when it is constituted into a separate State continue to be operative unless the Legislature of the new State repeals or amends them and secondly Parliament has power under Articles 3 and 4 of the Constitution to make a provision for such continuance. Articles 3 and 4 of the Constitution of India enable Parliament when it forms a new State by law to insert therein a provision like S. 53 of the Andhra State Act. The Madras Village Panchayats Act (X of 1950), applies to the State of Andhra to day (Subject of course to whatever modifications the Andhra State Legislature may have made since or may make hereafter) in the same way in which it was in force within this territory before 1-10-1953. I L R (1956) Andhra-Pra 448.

The meaning of the phrase "professes a religion" in paragraph 3 of the Constitution (Scheduled Castes) Order, 1950, is "to enter publicly into a religious State". The word "professes" was used particularly for entering into any religious order. In order to attract the provisions of this paragraph it has to be established that the person concerned has publicly entered a religion different from the Hindu or the Sikh religion. Mere declarations falling short of this would not be sufficient. The party, who wants to contend that any of the candidates for the reserved seat is professing a religion different from the Hindu or the Sikh religion at the material time has to establish, as a fact, that he had already entered publicly a religion which was different from the Hindu or the Sikh religion.

Under Art. 330 of the Constitution a valuable right has been conferred on persons belonging to the castes and tribes which are declared by the President as scheduled castes and scheduled tribes either by his order or by the Act of Parliament and to take away that right very satisfactory evidence establishing facts contemplated by paragraph 3 of the Order must be tendered. 60 Bom L R 776 : 1958 Nag L J 217 : ILR (1959) Bom 229 : A I R 1958 Bom 296 (297 to 300) (Pt A) (Prs 4, 5, 11) (DB).

——Art. 3 — Scope of — Formation of new States — Consent of component States — Necessity — Applicability to Part A States.

The provisions in Art. 3 of the Constitution, confer wider powers upon Parliament than either under the American or the Australian Constitution. In the latter, the consent of the component States or a majority of its electors must be obtained. Thus there must be either consent or a referendum. In India it is sufficient if the view of the State is ascertained. It therefore approximates more to the Government of India Act, 1935 than its foreign counterparts. Under Art. 3, Parliament may by law form a new State by uniting two or more States. For this purpose, a Bill must be introduced in Parliament. But before the introduction of such a Bill, the recommendation of the President must be obtained. In the case of a Part A or Part B State, if the boundaries or names are affected, the President must obtain the views of the legislature of each of the States concerned.

For the purpose of Art. 3, no distinction is made between Part A, Part B or Part C States. 60 Cal W N 555 : ILR (1957) 3 Cal 390 : AIR 1956 Cal 378 (382) (Pt D) (Prs 13, 14).

The expression 'act of State' is not limited to hostile action between rulers resulting in the occupation of territories. It includes all acquisitions of territory by a sovereign State for the first time, whether it be by conquest or cession. It is within the competence of the new sovereign to accord recognition to existing right in the conquered or ceded territories and, by legislation or otherwise, to apply its own laws to them; and these laws can, and indeed when the occasion arises must be examined and interpreted by the municipal Courts of the absorbing State The formation of the United State of Travancore and Cochin was an act of State. It was the result of a covenant entered into by the Rulers of Travancore and Cochin. The United State of Travancore Cochin recognised the claim of the plaintiff's family to an annuity. It did not stop the payment of the annuity on the formation of the State Clause 7 of the Ordinance 1 of 1124 and S. 7 of Art VI of 1125 did not affect such claim. But the formation of the State of Kerala was not an act of State. An act of State does not ordinarily occur within the jurisdiction The States Reorganisation Act, 1956, was only a piece of legislation in the exercise of the powers conferred on Parliament by Articles 3 and 4 of the Constitution. Section 91 (a) of the Act was sufficient to sustain the suit by the plaintiff against the State of Kerala for a declaration that the liability of the State of Travancore to pay an annuity to the plaintiff's family had devolved on the State of Kerala. Hence the conferment of such jurisdiction on the High Court of Andhra Pradesh is not open to the objection that it contravenes Art. 225 under which the High Court of Andhra Pradesh would not normally have jurisdiction to hear and decide an appeal from a decree made by a Court which was not situate within its jurisdiction. Article 7 clearly overrides Art. 5. It is peremptory in its scope and makes no exception for a case of the wife migrating to Pakistan leaving her husband in India. ——Arts. 5 to 11 — Scope of — Persons migrating to Pakistan — Status of — Citizenship Act (57 of 1955), Ss. 3 to 10—Scope—Issue of Passports — Effect of — Whether person is citizen or not, question of fact — 'Migration'—Meaning of.

Under Art. 7 of the Constitution, which is a disabling provision, persons migrating to Pakistan after the 1st day of March, 1947, are not deemed to be citizens of India. Any person who, though he was a citizen of India at the commencement of the Constitution, has migrated from the territory of India to Pakistan cannot be deemed to be a citizen of India. If a person has migrated from India to Pakistan and that fact is established, it is unnecessary to show further that that person has voluntarily acquired the citizenship of that country within the meaning of Art. 9. These provisions are however subject to any law which may be made by Parliament in exercise of the power conferred on it by Art. 11 with respect to the acquisition and termination of citizenship and all other matters relating thereto. Such a law is that embodied in the Citizenship Act (57 of 1955). That Act, however, has no application to cases of persons who migrated to Pakistan before it was enacted. Citizens of India who, by virtue of Art. 7, have been deemed no longer to be citizens of India, can only regain citizenship by returning to the territory of India under a permit for resettlement or a permit issued by an authority under the law, and if one has not regained his citizenship before the enactment of the Citizenship Act, 1955, that Act will have no application to him. Ss. 8, 9 and 10 deal with the renunciation, termination and deprivation of citizenship.

The question whether a person is a citizen of a country or not is a question of fact.

The word 'migration' would mean to move from one country to the other with the intention of settlement or residence in that other country. If once this fact is proved then Art. 7 applies to him with full force and effect and he is deemed not to be a citizen of India. (1959) 2 Andh W R 472 : 1959 A L T 894 : AIR 1960 Andh Pra 106 (108) (Pt A) (Pr 4) (DB).

III, Cl. 4 and R. 30 — Scope of.

For a person to be an Indian national, he should first of all qualify himself as a citizen under Art. 5 or under Art. 6 of the Constitution without having migrated to Pakistan after the first day of March, 1947. The case of a person who has migrated to Pakistan after the coming into force of the Constitution of India, but has not obtained a permit as mentioned in the Proviso to Act. 7 will have to be treated as having lost the rights to citizenship of India and has become ipso facto a 'foreigner' in spite of the fact that he had the qualifications mentioned in Art. 5.

Rule 30 framed under the Citizenship Act contemplates the Central Government as the authority for determining the question arising under S. 9 (2) of the Citizenship Act; Clause (4) of Sch. III of the rules framed under the said Act, takes within its ambit the case of a migrated person as also one to be determined under the powers conferred under S. 9 (2) and specifies that the permanency of residence and the intention of the migrant as consideration to be taken account of. An enquiry by the Central Government is not out of the purview of the provisions of the Citizenship Act. A person is entitled to ask for a determination by the Central Government of the question whether, in the circumstances of his case he did acquire the citizenship of another country. In order to come, within Art. 5 of the Constitution the person has to satisfy three main conditions. One is that at the commencement of the Constitution he had his domicile in the territory of India; second is that he must have been ordinarily a resident in the territory of India; and the third is that such residence must have been not less than five years immediately preceding such commencement of the Constitution. It is only when he satisfies these three conditions under Art. 5 (c) of the Constitution that he shall be regarded a citizen of India. The domicile is the domicile of origin which continues until it is rebutted. AIR 1964 Cal 324 (325) (Pt B) (Pr 8).

——Arts. 5 and 7—Relative scope.

Article 7 overrides Art. 5. The effect of Art. 7 is that even if a person is a citizen of India by virtue of Art. 5, he cannot be deemed to be a citizen of India if he has migrated to Pakistan after 1-3-1947 unless his case falls under the proviso to Art. 7. The proviso makes the substantive Article inapplicable to a person who after having migrated to Pakistan after 1-3-1947 has returned to India under a permit for resettlement or permanent return issued by the competent authority. There is nothing in the language of Arts 5 and 7 or anything in their background to justify the view that Art. 7 is restricted to cases of migration between 1-3-1947 and 26-1-1950. 1956 Madh B L J 870 : Madh B L R 1956 Civ 535 : AIR 1956 Madh B 211 (212) (Pt A) (Pr 5) (DB).

Citizenship of a country and particularly of India under Art. 5 is something which a person has the right or the honour to claim. It depends on the intention of a person to avail for himself or herself of such citizenship, on the strength of the citizenship laws of a country. Where a person had the opportunity to claim such citizenship when the Indian Constitution came into force, but did not desire to claim it then, and chose on the strength of her birth in China to treat herself as a Chinese National, she cannot, 10 years after the Indian Constitution came into force, rely on Art. 5 and call upon the Judicial Commissioner's Court to declare that she is an Indian citizen by virtue of the said Article, particularly when she still retains her Chinese passport on the basis of her Chinese nationality. A person cannot have dual nationality and cannot claim to be the citizen of two countries at the same time. AIR 1961 Manipur 37 (39, 40) (Pt B) (Pr 10).

Held, on facts, that as A was born within the territory of India of parents who were also born in India, his domicile of origin was in this country and as he was resident in India till he was taken over to Pakistan after 31-5 1950, while he was a minor, under S. 14 of the Succession Act, the domicile of A followed the domicile of his parent from whom he derived the domicile of origin. Therefore, whether judged under the provisions of the Succession Act or of Art. 5 of the Constitution since A was domiciled in India on 26 1-1950, he would be a citizen of this country. The temporary absence to Pakistan would not affect unless it could be shown that he had attained majority in May, 1950, when he went there or even in 1953 when he returned to this country declaring himself to be a Pakistani National. (2) that since A has succeeded in proving that he is a citizen of India he was entitled to the relief asked by him. 1962 (1) Cr L J 256 : 1962 All W R (HC) 236 : 1962 All Cr R 156.

——Art. 5—Scope of — Does not provide for citizenship after Constitution.

'Citizen' has not been defined by the Constitution and the only provision which is relevant is the provision contained in Art. 5. But that article only deals with the citizenship at the commencement of the Constitution and it lays down who was a citizen at the commencement of the Constitution. It is a curious omission in the Constitution that no provision is made as to citizenship after the commencement of the Constitution. ——Arts. 5, 7 and 9—Citizenship at commencement of Constitution — Arts. 5, 7 and 9 are to be read together—Person claiming to be a citizen of India at commencement of Constitution —Burden lies still on him to show that requirements of Arts. 7 and 9 are fulfilled.

On the question as to who is a citizen of India on the date of the Constitution the Constitution is the sole law. The Citizenship Act refers to citizenship after the commencement of the Constitution. On the question as to who is a citizen of India on the date of the Constitution, Arts. 5, 7 and 9 of the Constitution are relevant. For, even if a person satisfies the requirements of Art. 5 of the Constitution, he would not be a citizen of India, if he has voluntarily acquired the citizenship of any foreign State. In both these articles, namely, Articles 7 and 9, the reference is to the period before the Constitution.

Therefore, Articles 5, 7 and 9 have to be read together and it is only after all the requirements of these articles are satisfied that a person can be held to be citizen of India on the date of the commencement of the Constitution. If a person says that he was a citizen of India on the date of the commencement of the Constitution of India, the burden would be on him to prove that he is a citizen of India by reason of Articles 5, 7 and 9 of the Constitution of India, in other words, that he satisfies the requirements of Art. 5 and that he does not suffer from the disqualifications mentioned in Articles 7 and 9 of the Constitution of India. 1963 (2) Cri L J 265 : (1963) 4 Guj L R 1073 : AIR 1963 Guj 226 (228, 231, 232) (Pt B) (Prs 8, 17) (DB).

An essential element of citizenship as defined in Art. 5 is that the person must have had his domicile in India at the commencement of the Constitution. Domicile involves an intention to reside permanently.

It is immaterial whether the person had applied for permanent permit and only a temporary permit was granted or that he only applied for a temporary permit. The fact remains that his entry in India was permitted only for a temporary period and therefore, he had not complied with the conditions in the proviso to Art. 7 of the Constitution and he cannot be deemed to be a citizen of India. 1958 Cri L J 418 (2): AIR 1958 Raj 65 (69) (Pt D) (Prs 20, 21) (DB).

A I R 1953 Raj 188: AIR 1961 Cal 258 ; A I R 1959 Cal 45 and AIR 1953 Assam 177, Impliedly Overruled.

Per Majority, (Shah and Das Gupta, JJ., contra):—

The State Trading Corporation, a company registered under the Indian Companies Act, 1956, is not a citizen within the meaning of Art. 19 of the Constitution and cannot ask for the enforcement of fundamental rights granted to citizens under the said article. The provisions of Part III of the Constitution make it clear that the makers of the Constitution deliberately and advisedly made a clear distinction between fundamental rights available to 'any person' and those guaranteed to 'all citizens'. The rights of citizenship envisaged in Art. 19 are not wholly appropriate to a corporate body. The makers of the Constitution had altogether left out of consideration juristic persons when they enacted Part II of the Constitution relating to 'citizenship, and made a clear distinction between 'persons' and 'citizens' in Part III of the Constitution. Part III, which proclaims fundamental rights, was very accurately drafted, delimiting those rights like freedom of speech and expression, the right to assemble peaceably, the right to practise any profession, etc., as belonging to 'citizens' only and those more general rights like the right to equality before the law, as belonging to 'all persons.'

Corporations may have nationality in accordance with the country of their incorporation; but that does not necessarily confer citizenship on them. Part II of the Constitution when it deals with citizenship refers to natural persons only. This is further made absolutely clear by the Citizenship Act which confines it only to natural persons. These two provisions are completely exhaustive of the citizens of this country and these citizens can only be natural persons. The fact that corporations may be nationals of the country for purposes of international law will not make them citizens of this country for purposes of municipal law or the Constitution. The word 'citizen' used in Art. 19 of the Constitution was not used in a different sense from that in which it was used in Part II of the Constitution. Per Hidayatullah, J. (concurring) :— That State Trading Corporation cannot be regarded either by itself or by taking it as the aggregate of citizens, as a citizen for the purpose of enforcing rights under Art. 19 (1) (f) and (g). The nationality of a corporation is a different concept not to be confused with citizenship of natural persons.

Per Das Gupta. J. (Contra) :—(1) The State Trading Corporation, so long as it consists wholly of citizens of India, can ask for enforcement of the fundamental rights granted to citizens under Art. 19 (1) (f) and (g) of the Constitution. (2) The State Trading Corporation is not a department or organ or the Government of India and can claim to enforce the fundamental right under Part III of the Constitution against the State as defined in Art. 12 thereof.

Per Shah, J. (Contra) : — (1) The State Trading Corporation a company registered under the Indian Companies Act 1956 is a citizen within the meaning of Art. 19 of the Constitution and can ask for the enforcement of fundamental rights granted to citizens under the said article; and (2) the State Trading Corporation is, notwithstanding the formality of incorporation under the Indian Companies Act, 1956, not a department and organ of the Government of India with the entirety of its capital contributed by Government. Even if the State Trading Corporation be regarded as a department or organ of the Government of a India it will, if it be a citizen, be competent to enforce fundamental rights under Part III of the Constitution against the State as defined in Art. 12 of the Constitution. There is no warrant for restricting the enforcement of those rights on some implication that an agent or servant of the State if he or it be a citizen cannot enforce the fundamental rights against another body which can be regarded also as a State within the meaning of Art. 12 of the Constitution.

The State Trading Corporation has been constituted under the Indian Companies Act as a Private Limited Company. Its functions being commercial, it cannot be regarded as either a department or an organ of the Government of India. It is a circumstance of accident that on the date of its incorporation and thereafter its entire share-holding was held by the President and the two Secretaries to the Government of India. ——Art. 5—Citizenship—Domicile—Meaning.

Domicile is the place where a man has his home or person's regular place of abode or generally speaking the place where he has his permanent home. That place is properly the domicile of a person in which he has voluntarily fixed his abode not for mere special or temporary purpose, but with a present intention of making it his permanent home.

Where it is not proved that a person has his domicile in India, the fact that he has been ordinarily resident in the territory of India for not less than 5 years immediately preceding the commencement of the Constitution, does not help him to claim to be a citizen of India. 52 Cri L J 1239 : AIR 1951 Bhopal 1 (2) (Pr 7).

● —Arts. 5 and 245 – Domicile—What is—Domicile and permanent residence — Meaning of domicile used in State laws – (Government of India Act (1935), S. 99)—(Citizenship Act (1955), S. 3).

Domicile means residence by choice with the intention of the residence being permanent in a particular country, and a person's domicile is that country in which he either has or is deemed by law to have his permanent home.

A person can only be domiciled in India as a whole. That is the only country that can be considered in the context of the expression 'Domicile' and the only system of law by which a person is governed is the system of law which prevails in the whole country and not any system of law which prevails in any Province or State.

Therefore in India a person has one citizenship of India. He has one domicile, the domicile in India and one legal system, the system that prevails in the whole country. The State v. ——Art. 5 – Domicile and nationality—(International law (Private) – Domicile).

Nationality and domicile are two entirely different concepts in private international law. A man may have one nationality and different domicile. He may owe allegiance to one country and he may have a domicile in another country. Therefore, although the father of a person may continue to be a Goan National he can still change his domicile and give up his Goan domicile and acquire an Indian domicile. 58 Bom L R 825 : ILR (1956) Bom 954 : AIR 1956 Bom 729 (731) (Pt B) (Pr 11) (DB).

——Art. 5 — Person born in India having no domicile in India at commencement of Constitution — Cannot acquire Indian Citizenship—Domicile—Determination—Test - Foreigners Order, 1948, R. 3 — Citizenship Act (1955), S. 5.

A person having no domicile in India at the commencement of the Constitution, cannot be said to have become a citizen of India, under Art. 5 of the Constitution, merely by reason of his birth at a place which happens to fall within the Indian Union.

Two constituent elements that are necessary for existence of domicile are (1) a residence of a particular kind and (2) an intention of a particular kind. There must be the factum and there must be the animus.

Petitioner who was born in undivided India, was at the date of the commencement of the Constitution, residing and serving in Pakistan where he resided from 1947 to 1957.

He used to come to India on a Pakistani passport. He came to Indian Union after 1955 and settled there. His application for registration as citizen under Citizenship Act was rejected and he was served with an order under R. 3 of Foreigner's Order, 1948, directing him to leave India. In a petition under Art. 226 of the Constitution, Held, (i) that the petitioner was not a citizen of India. The residence of his family in India even though a circumstance in his favour, was not conclusive on the point in the absence of any material showing that he had not established a home in East Pakistan, where he was living for years, even if an animus could be ascribed to him to come and setile in India the factum of his residence in India was wanting. In the absence of that fact, an Indian domicile could not be ascribed to him. AIR 1955 S C 36, Foll.; AIR 1953 Cal 530 Rel. on, (ii) Further since he could apply under S. 5 of the Citizenship Act only if he was not already a citizen of India under the Constitution and this conduct on the part of the petitioner made it further difficult for him to claim citizenship under Art. 5 of the Constitution. ——Arts. 5 and 7—Scope — Change of nationality—Proof—Passport and visa—Probative value of.

A passport by itself is not a conclusive proof of nationality. But it is accepted as a proof of the fact, by international agreement and the comity of nations.

Where a Muslim who was an Indian national, migrated to Pakistan in 1950 on account of the communal disturbances and having gone there, applied and obtained a Pakistani passport on making a declaration affirming that he was a Pakistani national.

Held, that he acted with deliberation in renouncing his Indian citizenship. ● ——Art. 5—Acquisition of domicile after "Britisb India" ceased to exist.

As a result of the provisions contained in the Indian Independence Act, a person who had originally the domicile of British India unless he had subsequently acquired the domicile of some other country outside the ambit of the territories which were originally British India, would automatically acquire the domicile either of India or of Pakistan.

Even if it were possible for a British Indian subject to retain (after 15th August, 1947) the British India nationality, a person who was not one habitually resident within that portion of British India which became the Indian Dominion and was subsequently declared to be the Indian Republic, cannot, even on the principles applied to cession of territories acquire after the 15th August, 1947 the nationality of the Dominion of India or the Republic of India that is Bharat. ● ——Art. 5—Nationality how acquired.

Two of the different modes of acquisition of nationality is by subjugation after conquest or by cession of territory. The inhabitants of the subjugated and the ceded territory acquire ipso facto by such subjugation or cession the nationality of the State which acquires the territory. Rosetta Evelyn Attaullah v. Justin Attaullah, ILR (1954) 2 Cal 226 : 57 C W N 778 : A I R 1953 Cal 530 (533) (Pt C) (Pr 22) (SB).

● ——Art. 5– Domicile and nationality of individual —(Succession Act (1925), S. 9).

Domicile refers to the Civil status of an individual, while nationality refers to his political status. Thus domicile and nationality are two quite different conceptions. A man may change his domicile without divesting himself of his nationality. Similarly there may be a change of nationality without a change of domicile. (1869) L R 1 Sc. and Div. 441; (1932) Probate 9 and (1932) 147 L T 382, Foll.

But where the State known as British India disappears, from after a particular date, from the map of the world, it is impossible for a person to retain either the nationality or the domicile of British India. In the case of a complete merger or cession of a State it is not open to a person, who was a citizen of that State, which is now non-existent, or was domiciled therein, to continue to arrogate, even after its disappearance, either a citizenship or a domicile with reference to that quondum State Rosetta Evelyn Attaullah v. Justin Attaullah, ILR (1954) 2 Cal 226 : 57 C W N 778 : AIR 1953 Cal 530 (534) (Pt E) (Prs 30, 31) (SB).

● ——Art. 5—Acquisition of new domicile—(Succession Act (1925), S. 10)—(Domicile—Acquisition of).

It is open to a person to acquire a domicile of choice, by the combination of residence (factum) and intention of permanent or indefinite residence (animus manendi), but not otherwise. To constitute residence it need not be long. So far as the intention is concerned, it must amount to a purpose or choice, it must be an intention to reside permanently or for an indefinite period and it must be an intention of abandoning, that is ceasing to reside permanently in the country of the former domicile. Rosetta Evelyn Attaullah v. Justin Attaullah, ILR (1954) 2 Cal 226 : 57 C W N 778 : AIR 1953 Cal 530 (534) (Pt F) (Prs 32, 33, 34) (SB).

——Arts. 5, 6 and 7—'Change of domicile' is not the same as 'migration'.

The concept of 'change of domicile' is not the same as that of migration. In the case of 'migration', there is only animus manendi, the intention to remain in a particular country—but there is no animus revertendi, the intention to return to the country of domicile. In the case of change of domicile, however, not merely the animus manendi is present, but also the animus revertendi. Therefore, the crucial distinction is that, in the case of 'migration' a person leaves the country of his permanent home, but that, at the back of his mind, there is always the intention to return to the country of his domicile ; whereas, in the case of a 'change of domicile', the person not only leaves the country of his home but he does so with the intention of never returning back to the country of his domicile. In the latter case the intention is to change his civil status, but not so in the former case. In the first case, he does not sever his tie with the country of his domicile but intends to retain it. He leaves the country of his permanent home for some such purpose as following a profession, or for earning a fortune, or for employment in a job, and it does not make any difference even though he may have to stay away for a long or indefinite period from his home to achieve this object. Thus, the two terms 'migration' and 'change of domicile' cannot be equated together. 1964 (2) Cr L J 24 : (1964) 5 Guj L R 273 : I L R (1964) Guj 66 : AIR 1964 Guj 128 (134, 135) (Pt C) (Prs 12, 13) (DB).

K left for England in 1920 for higher studies in medicine. He belonged to an Ezhava family of the Travancore State. While in England he qualified himself in medicine and started practice at Sheffiled and was able to build up a comfortable practice. Subsequently he got employed in the National Health Scheme, and he purchased a building in Sheffiled, where he housed his evening surgery. K was in England for about 30 years and he died there in October 1950. During this period of 30 years he never came to India. However, from the letters received from K it could be gathered that K wanted to come back to India after his insurance policy matured and after he made enough money to lead a comfortable life in India after his return. Some of these letters expressed his intention to come back to India.

Held, that K did not discard his domicile of origin and acquire a domicile of choice. 1964 Ker L J 205 : 1964 Ker L T 252 : I L R (1964) I Ker 384 : A I R 1964 Ker 244 (247) (Pt A) (Prs 14, 17) (DB).

——Art. 5—Minor born in Pakistan — Father domiciled in India—Minor is Indian citizen—Citizenship Act (1955), S. 3).

——Art. 5—Domicile—Essentials.

The two constituent elements that are necessary by English law for the existence of 'domicile' are: (1) residence of a particular kind, and (2) an intention of a particular kind. There must be the factum and there must be animus. The intention must be a present intention to reside for ever in the country where the residence has been taken up.

A person cannot have two domiciles and domicile of origin prevails until a new domicile has been acquired. Brevity of residence is not deterrent to the acquisition of a domicile if the necessary intention exists. 1956 Madh B L J 324 : Madh B L R 1956 Civ 41 : ILR (1956) Madh B 216 : AIR 1956 Madh B 250 (252) (Pt A) (Prs 7, 8) (DB).

——Art. 5 — Domicile and citizenship of Indian Union — Indian domicile does not do away with concept of subsidiary domicile of the constituent State — State domicile relevant in the matter of minority, succession and marriage—Conflict between State laws and laws made by Parliament relating to these matters to be resolved on principles of Private International Law.

A person belonging to a Constituent State of the Union under the Indian Constitution has a status distinct from, though subsidiary to, that flowing from his Indian domicile or his political status as an Indian citizen. that status having relevance only for certain purposes. Thus while a person has the primary Indian domicile which contributes to the acquisition of citizenship, he may have secondary domicile which is the domicile of the State to which he belongs though the importance of such secondary domicile is relevant only in some spheres. The recognition of such domicile may become imperative where the higher Indian domicile does not and cannot regulate a matter governed by a State law. The concept of an Indian domicile does not do away with the concept of subsidiary domicile such as the domicile of the States and the latter may prevail for certain purposes notwithstanding there being the larger and the more comprehensive Indian domicile. AIR 1955 S C 334, Rel. on.

Article 245 of the Constitution declares the extent of laws to be made by Parliament and those of the legislature of States. Each of such constituting States within the Union has a law of its own which its legislature can make for the whole or a part of that State. If there is a conflict between the two laws on matters like minority, succession or marriage the principles to be followed to resolve that conflict are the principles of Private International law. There is no other basis for resolving such conflict. (1965) 1 Mys L J 577 : (1965) 1 Law Rep 51 (Mys) : AIR 1966 Mys 100 (102, 103) (Pt A) (Prs 13, 15, 16, 17) (DB).

——Art. 5 — Domicile — Acquisition of, by wife—Wife leaving for Pakistan with husband, loses her Indian domicile—Change of domicile after death of husband—Change of domicile of minor children.

In the case of a dependant his domicile is the same as and changes (if at all) with, the domicile of the person on whom he is, as regards his domicile, legally dependant. The domicile of a legitimate infant is determined by and changes with, that of his father while that of a married woman is the same as, and changes with, that of her husband. A domicile cannot be acquired by a dependant person through his own act. A wife therefore loses her domicile in India when she leaves with her husband for Pakistan. The case of her minor children is no better. A person on attaining his majority retains the last domicile which he had during his infancy until he changes it. A widow retains her late husband's last domicile until she changes it. While, therefore, a widow can change her own domicile acquired by reason of her late husband's migration, she cannot change that of her minor children. 1955 Nag L J 235 : ILR (1954) Nag 798 : 1955 Cr L J 28 : A I R 1955 Nag 6 (8) (Pt A) (Pr 9) (DB).

——Art. 5—Domicile—It is not to be inferred from fact of residence — Residence and domicile two distinct things—Meaning of 'domicile.'

Although residence may be some prima facie proof of domicile, it is by no means to be inferred from the fact of residence that domicile results, even though the person had no other residence in existence or contemplation. Residence and domicile are two perfectly distinct things. Domicile is an idea of law. It is the relation which the law creates between an individual and a particular locality or country. To every adult person the law ascribes a domicile and that domicile remains his fixed attribute until a new and different attribute usurps its place. (1868) L S C and Div. 307, Rel. on.

Held, having regard to the admission of the petitioner in his affidavit and the facts stated in the counter-affidavit of the respondents, the petitioner had not acquired domicile in India at the commencement of the Constitution and, therefore had not acquired Indian citizenship under Art. 5 of the Constitution. 1965 B L J R 276 : AIR 1965 Pat 371 (372) (Pr 3) (DB).

——Art. 5—Domicile —Domicile of choice—Conditions necessary for acquiring domicile of choice — International Law (Private).

In order to acquire a domicile of choice, two conditions have to be fulfilled, (i) factum of residence in the country whose domicile is sought to be acquired, and (ii) intention of permanent or indefinite residence in that country (animus manendi). Unless both these conditions combine, no domicile of choice can be acquired. AIR 1955 S C 36, Foll. 1965 B L J R 936.

——Art. 5—Domicile—Determination of — International Law (Private).

A person may have no home but he cannot be without a domicile and the law may attribute to him a domicile in a country where in reality he has not. In order to make the rule that nobody can be without a domicile effective, the law assigns what is called a domicile of origin, to every person at his birth. This prevails until a new domicile has been acquired, so that if a person leaves the country of his origin with an undoubted intention of never returning to it again nevertheless his domicile of origin adheres to him until he actually settles with the requisite intention in some other country. A I R 1955 S C 36, Rel. on. To prove such an intention as is necessary to establish a change of domicile and in the absence of evidence that the intention actually existed (which can be shown by express declaration and in no other way) the evidence must lead to the inference that if the question had been formally submitted to the person whose domicile is in question he would have expressed his wish in favour of a change. Possibly where the actual residence in the acquired domicile has been very long, an unconscious change of mind may be inferred, though it may be doubtful whether it would have been declared or admitted if the question had been actually raised. (1871) 41 L J Ch 74, Appd.

——Art. 5—Domicile and nationality—Distinction.

Domicile is different from citizenship. A person may have one nationality or citizenship and a different domicile or he may have a domicile but no nationality. Ordinarily domicile has not the effect of altering a previous nationality. In a State, a person may be a member of civil society alone as distinguished from political society. Membership of the political society determines his political status or nationality on which depends his permanent allegiance or personal association to his sovereign. This membership of civil society, that is his domicile, determines his civil status. Domicile implies connection with territory, not membership or community which is at the root of the notion of citizenship or nationality. A person with a domicile may be stateless i.e., without any nationality. 1964 B L J R 322 : 1964 (2) Cr L J 327: AIR 1964 Pat 384 (387) (Pt B) (Pr 7).

——Arts. 5, 9—Essentials of citizenship—"Domicile" meaning of — Domicile of choice — Acquisition — Onus lies upon person claiming it.

According to Art. 5, before a person could be entitled to have the status of Indian citizenship on the coming into force of the Constitution, he must have had his domicile in India, and then he must have had any one of the three qualifications which have been mentioned in that Article.

The word "domicile", broadly speaking, means the permanent place of dwelling, or home of the person concerned. Every person is supposed to have a domicile in law. This would usually be the place where the person is born, in the absence of any other domicile.

Where a person wants it to be held that he had abandoned his domicile of origin, a very heavy onus lies on him and he must lead clear and cogent evidence before he can be held to have discharged that onus. Mere residence in any other country, even for a certain number of years, cannot be held to be sufficient to give that person a domicile of choice where he has held any other domicile, namely, that of origin and where such residence does not appear to have been attended with the intention of making the other country his home. Constitution does not accept the concept of dual citizenship and, therefore, where a person says that he claims himself to be a citizen of another country cannot at the same time lay claim to citizenship of this country. 1962 Raj L W 399 : 1963 (1) Cri L J 66 : I L R (1962) 12 Raj 493 : AIR 1963 Raj 11 (12, 13) (Prs 6, 7) (DB).

——Art. 5 — Domicile essentials — Staunch Muslim Leaguer — Presumption of intention to remove to Pakistan—Residence in India—Effect on domicile.

In the case of staunch Muslim Leaguers, which would include at least the Presidents of the Muslim Leagues of local areas, it would be a legitimate inference that they had the intention of removing themselves from India to live in Pakistan which they considered as their national home. The petitioner, who was the President of the Marwar Muslim League, must be deemed to have lost the animus of remaining permanently in India. The residence in India thereafter did not affect the question of his domicile. 1958 Cri L J 418 (2) : A I R 1958 Raj 65 (68) (Pt B) (Pr 13) (DB).

—— Art. 5 — Citizenship—Domicile—Minor—Father muslim and resident of India prior to partition — Minor entering India by Pakistan Passport and overstaying in India — Father practising in India after partition — Prosecution of minor under Foreigners Act—(Foreigners Act (1946), Ss. 9 and 14) (Citizenship Act (1955)—(International law (Private)).

The accused who was a minor, was being prosecuted as being a foreigner, namely, a Pakistani national who had contravened an order made under the Foreigners Act. The charge framed under S. 14 was that she had entered India by Pakistani Passport with visa, remained in India even after the expiry of the extended period and did not leave India even when ordered to do so. The question was whether the charge would be quashed on the ground that she was the daughter of a person who was an Indian national and the accused being a minor daughter of such a person had under the law the same nationality as her father, namely, Indian, and, therefore, she had committed no offence by continuing to stay in India :

Held refusing to quash the charge that the first condition under Art 5 of the Constitution of India for considering a person (in this case, accused's father) a citizen of India was that the person should have his domicile in the territory of India. The fact that a person had been a resident of Indo-Pakistan Dominion prior to partition did not make him automatically a person with domicile in one or the other Dominion. Mere residence or following a particular profession in India by the father of the girl is not conclusive for the purposes of determining his domicile. This is a question of fact.

Under S. 9, Foreigners Act, 1946, the burden of proof was on the accused that she was not a foreigner namely a Pakistani.

While under the International law it is true that a minor acquires the citizenship or nationality of her father, and continues to retain it until she becomes of age and renounces it, there is a provision in the Pakistan Citizenship Act (No. II of 1951) which permits a minor child to obtain citizenship of Pakistan by application in a prescribed manner by a parent or guardian of the minor child. (1959) Ra L W 322 : ILR (1958) 8 Raj 833.

——Art. 5 - Domicile — Intention — Person born in territory allotted to Pakistan continuing in India — Obtaining of Indian passport—Inference.

Whether a person abandons his former domicile and acquires another is a question of fact and depends on the intention of the person concerned as shown by his conduct.

Where the petitioner who was born in East Bengal (now Eastern Pakistan), came to Calcutta in 1943 and continued to live and work in India for 17 years and there was nothing to show that he had an intention of going back to his place of birth, and he had openly taken an Indian passport :

——Arts. 5 and 7—Migration—Essentials—Petitioner born in India migrating to Pakistan in September, 1947 Return to India in June, 1956 on Pakistani passport and C visa — Overstay in India till 1961 — Order of deportation—Validity Assuming that petitioner was not a foreigner when he entered India he could not be deemed to be citizen of India in view of Art. 7—Foreigners Act (1946), S. 2 (a) as amended by Act XI of 1957—Effect — Amended definition of foreigner applies and petitioner must be held to be foreigner.

The expression 'migration' in Art. 7 contains two concepts, viz., (1) transference from one place to another, and (2) the intention to take the destination a place of abode or residence in future.

Held on facts, (i) that the facts clearly showed that petitioner went to Pakistan with the intention of settling down permanently and that would mean that he migrated to Pakistan after 1-3-1947 within the meaning of Art. 7 of the Constitution of India and is not to be deemed to be a citizen of India. 1955 S C J 311, (S) AIR 1955 S C 282, Rel. on; 1962 M L J (Cr.) 80 ; AIR 1961 S C 1467 Dist. (ii) that even assuming that the petitioner was not a foreigner when he entered India in June, 1956, by reason of the altered definition of a 'foreigner' made by the Foreigners Laws (Amendment) Act of 1957 which, though enacted on 2-4-1957 was to be deemed to have come into force from 19-1-1957, the petitioner became a foreigner by his not being on that day a citizen of India. Even assuming that the petitioner had a vested right of not being considered as a foreigner, Parliament nevertheless has authority to deprive by legislation such vested right. AIR 1962 Guj 194, Dist.; AIR 1961 Orissa 150, Rel. on ; (iii) that the order of deportation passed against the petitioner was perfectly valid. (1963) 4 Guj L R 247 : AIR 1963 Guj 48 (49, 50) (Prs 4, 6) (DB).

Held (i) that the petitioner being a minor at the time of migration to Pakistan could not be said to have voluntarily migrated to Pakistan so as to make Art. 7 of the Constitution applicable to his case. (ii) As petitioner's entry into India on the strength of a Pakistani passport was prima facie proof that he was a foreigner, it was for him to establish that he was not a foreigner and to rebut the prima facie case against him that he was a foreigner. But as he was hardly 16 years of age when he applied for the passport in Pakistan his declaration could not be said to be binding. His very conduct in applying for passport would itself be evidence of rebuttal against the presumption that he had gone to Pakistan with the desire or intention to abandon his citizenship of India. (iii) He could not be deemed to be a foreigner even under the Foreigners Laws (Amendment) Act, 1957, because the question of renunciation of a citizenship would have to be decided by the Central Government, as a Tribunal under S. 9 (2) of the Citizenship Act of 1955. (1962) 3 Guj L R 85 : AIR 1962 Guj 194 (195, 196, 197) (Prs 6, 7, 8, 10) (DB).

Shrivastava, J., (Naik, J., contra) Arts. 5, 6 and 7 provide for citizenship as it accrued on the date of the commencement of the Constitution and there was no intention to provide for acquisition or loss of citizenship after that date in these articles. Acquisition of citizenship after the Constitution was provided for by the Citizenship Act, 1955. Held on facts that to bring the Petitioner's case within the ambit of Art. 5, it was necessary for her to prove two things (1) that she had her domicile in the territory of India at the commencement of the Constitution; and (2) that she was born in the territory of India.

(2) that even though the securing of a passport from a foreign country may not be considered to be conclusive proof of the nationality of the applicant, it certainly raises a strong presumption in favour of the citizenship asserted by her, for the purpose of securing the passport.

(3) that as the petitioner secured a passport from Pakistan and as her statement in the application conclusively showed that she had never before entertained any real desire to acquire Indian citizenship or even Indian domicile she could not claim to be a citizen of India. 1959 Cri L J 1018 : I L R 1959) Punj 1318 : AIR 1959 Punj 375 (376, 377, 378) (Pt A) (Prs 3, 4).

——Art. 5 (c) — Acquisition of Indian citizenship — Conditions necessary for — Mere residence for not less than five years not enough — Person must be domicile of India at the commencement of the Constitution — Domicile cannot be inferred from long residence.

In order that a person may be deemed to be a citizen of India, two conditions must be satisfied. One, that at the commencement of the Constitution the person claiming citizenship must have had his domicile in the territory of India. In addition to this condition either of the three conditions mentioned in Cls. (a), (b) and (c) of Art. 5 must be satisfied. The article requires that mere residence for a period of not less than five years would not be enough, but the additional condition is that he must have had his domicile in the territory of India at the commencement of the Constitution. Domicle cannot be inferred from the mere fact of long residence. For establishing domicile two conditions are absolutely necessary to be satisfied. One is the factum of residence and the other is the present intention to make the country his permanent home. From the mere fact that a person had come to stay in India in 1935 it is not possible to come to the conclusion that for that reason he had also formed the intention, on or before the 26th of January 1950, of making India his permanent home. Unless, it is established conclusively, that a person has abandoned his domicile of origin, no domicile of choice can be inferred. In the absence of the animus of acquiring of domicile of choice being positively proved, coupled with the factum of residence, the abandonment of the domicile of origin and the acceptance, of a domicile of choice cannot be held proved. Inasmuch as domicile has been made one condition precedent for the acquisition of citizenship under Art. 5 even nationality is to that extent, made dependent on domicile. 66 Bom L R 216 : 1964 Mah L J 416 : 1964 (2) Cri L J 399 : I L R (1964) Bom 278 : A I R 1964 Bom 235 (238, 240, 241) (Pt B) (Prs 6, 8).

— Art. 5—Domicile—Determination of—Change of domicile—What must be proved—Burden of proof is on him who asserts that domicile of origin has been lost—International law (Private).

The law attributes, to every person at birth a domicile which is called a domicile of origin. This domicile may be changed, and a new domicile, called a domicile of choice, acquired. The former kind of domicile is received by operation of law at birth, while the latter kind of domicile is acquired later by the actual removal of the individual to another country accompanied by his animus manendi. The domicile of origin of an individual is determined by the domicile at the time of his birth, of the person upon whom he is legally dependent. As regards change of domicile, any individual who is not under disability may at any time change his existing domicile and acquire for himself a domicile of choice by the fact of residing in a country other than that of his domicile of origin with the intention of continuing to reside there indefinitely. The onus of proving that a domicile has been chosen in substitution for the domicile of origin is upon those who assert that the domicile of origin has been lost. The domicile of origin continues till a fixed and settled intention of abandoning the same and acquiring another as the sole domicile is clearly established. It must be established that the individual who is alleged to have changed his domicile of origin has voluntarily fixed the habitation of himself and his family, in the new country not for a mere special or temporary purpose, but with a present intention of making it his permanent home. Held, on facts, that when Art. 5 of the Constitution came into force, the respondent candidate for election, had formed deliberate intention of making India his home with the intention of permanently establishing himself and his family in India and was, therefore, domiciled in the territory of India. ——Art. 5 — Indian domicile — How acquired — Change in domicile of birth — Burden of proof — Mere long residence in India—Effect of.

It is a cardinal principle of private international law that a party is really anchored to his domicile of birth, if he has a domicile of birth; and a very clear intention must be apparent from his conduct to show that he wrenched himself free from that domicile of birth and deliberately by a due process of intention and conduct acquired another domicile.

The onus of proving that a domicile has been chosen in substitution for the domicile of origin lies upon those who assert that the domicile of origin has been lost.

Even under Art. 5 of the Constitution it is necessary that the person should have been domiciled in India. Residence is purely an incidental factor which goes up to build domicile.

The mere statement by the person that he had a long residence in India and had his family here per se cannot form the foundation of his claim that he is domiciled in India.

Held, on facts that the petitioner who was born in Goa and was therefore Portuguese subject by birth had failed to establish that he was an Indian national in spite of his long residence in India. A I R 1956 Bom 501 (502, 503) (Prs 3, 4, 6).

——Arts. 5, 226—Onus—Proof.

The requirements of Art. 5 (c) are that a person must have his domicile in the territory of India and that he must have been a resident in the territory of India for a space of not less than five years immediately before January 26, 1950. Where in a proceeding under S. 3 (2) of the Foreigner's Act the person proceeded against avers his domicile in India at the time of the commencement of the Constitution and that he had been residing in the country for a period of five years before its commencement, he takes upon himself the duty and responsibility of proving that averment. A bare statement to that effect in the petition upon which he asks the Court's assistance for the issue of a writ, would not satisfy the requirements of Art. 5. 1963 (2) Cr L J 210 (Cal).

——Art. 5—Domicile, change of—Burden of proof.

Change of domicile depends on the intention of a person to make a particular place his permanent home and therefore depends on certain facts. The onus of proving his domicile is upon the petitioner. The animus may be inferred by the factum of residence within the new domicile, but in order to warrant that inference the quality of the residence must be taken into account and mere length of residence is not of itself sufficient. A fixed and settled purpose, a final and deliberate intention have to be established before a change of domicile can be proved. 1930 A C 588 and 1904 A C 287, Rel. on. A I R 1961 Cal 408 (410, 411) (Pt B) (Pr 12).

——Arts. 5, 7 and 226 — Onus of proof — (Indian Permit System Rules (1949), R. 31) — Citizenship Act (1955), S. 10) — Evidence Act (1872), Ss. 17, 21 and 101, 104).

Held, on facts (1) that although the petitioner was an Indian citizen so far as Art. 5 was concerned, he ceased to be so under Art. 7 by having migrated to Pakistan after the first day of March, 1947. He could regain his citizenship only by returning to India under a permit for resettlement or permanent return issued by or under the authority of any law. AIR 1955 S C 282, Rel. on.

(2) Rule 31 of the Indian Permit System Rules had no application to the case.

(3) Section 10 of the Citizenship Act also was not applicable to the facts of the case.

(4) The passport might not be conclusive evidence, but was prima facie evidence of his nationality and a heavy onus lay on the petitioner to disprove the fact. The petitioner might adduce evidence about his nationality in the criminal action but it was not possible to consider evidence in the writ proceedings. Therefore his passports could be cancelled. ('58) 62 Cal W N 589.

——Arts. 5, 7, 6 and 226—Word 'Migrate'—Meaning — Person coming to India on Pakistani passport and visa staying beyond the period mentioned therein Determination whether he migrated to Pakistan —Onus to prove that he is Indian citizen which includes the burden to prove that his case does not fall under Art. 7 lies on such person—Determination involving complicated questions of fact cannot be undertaken in proceedings on habeas corpus petition.

For the purposes of Art. 7 of the Constitution, the word 'migrate' has the same meaning as is given to it in Art. 6. Therefore in order to decide whether a person has migrated from the territory of India to Pakistan, the main question which has got to be considered in each case would be whether the person who went to Pakistan did so with the intention of residing there permanently. The determination would require an investigation into not only the factum of departure but also i to the intention of such person. AIR 1961 S C 58 Rel. on. Where a person who has entered India on a Pakistani passport and visa and has stayed beyond the duration mentioned therein is sought to be deported by an order under S. 3 (2) (c) of the Foreigners Act, resists the order by alleging that he is a citizen of India the onus to prove that he is an Indian citizen lies on him. This onus also includes the burden to prove that his case does not fall under Art. 7 of the Constitution. It is not enough for him merely to prove that he became the citizen of India under Art. 5. If it is alleged that he had migrated, during the relevant time, from India to Pakistan, and, if it is admitted that the person had actually departed from India to Pakistan, during the relevant period, then, the burden will lie upon that person to establish that he had gone to Pakistan in such circumstances that his departure did not amount to migration within the meaning of Art. 7.

Since the circumstances under which he stayed in Pakistan, and also his subsequent conduct during the whole of his stay require evidence to be adduced by both the sides, the same cannot be undertaken in proceedings on a petition for habeas corpus. 1964 (2) Cr L J 24 : (1964) 5 Guj L R 273 : I L R (1964) Guj 66 : AIR 1964 Guj 128 (133) (Pt A) (Pr 10) (DB).

The fact that a person who has been granted a certificate by a competent authority that he is a subject of the Jammu and Kashmir State, is staying in a town in the portion of the State, in occupation of Pakistan, cannot deprive him of his status as a State subject, unless it is shown that he has permanently migrated to Pakistan. See Ibid, Art. 5. AIR 1963 S C 1811.

● ——Art. 6 — Time of migration — Intention to reside permanently in India—If necessary at first.

In the absence of anything to indicate a contrary intention the migration which is made an essential requirement for this purpose must have taken place before the commencement of the Constitution. 'Migrated to the territory of India' means 'migrated' at any time before the commencement of the Constitution to a place now in the territory of India.

When the framers of the Constitution used the words 'migrated to territory of India' they meant 'come to the territory of India with the intention of residing there permanently'. The only explanation of their not expressly mentioning 'domicile' or the 'intention to reside permanently' in Art. 6 seems to be that they were confident that in the scheme of this Constitution the word 'migration' could only be interpreted to mean 'come to the country with the intention of residing there permanently'. Though at the point of time a person moved into new place or new country he cannot be said to have migrated to this place or country he should be held in law to have migrated to this later place or country at the later point of time when he forms the intention of residing there permanently. AIR 1959 Punj 175, Affirmed. Shanno Devi v. Mangal Sain, (1961) 1 S C J 201 : (1961) 1 S C R 576 : I L R (1961) 1 Punj 234 : 22 Ele L R 469 : AIR 1961 S C 58 (61, 62, 63) (Pt A) (Prs 7, 10, 12).

● ——Art. 6 (b) (i) — Applicability — Conditions — Period of residence in India.

To satisfy the test of being 'ordinarily resident in the territory of India since the date of his migration' it need not be shown that the person concerned was in India on January 26, 1950. Article 6 is one of the Articles which came into force on November 26, 1949. For applying the test of being 'ordinarily resident in the territory of India since the date of his migration' it is necessary, therefore, to consider the period up to the 26th day of November, 1949, from the date of migration. What is thus necessary is that, taking the period beginning with the date on which migration became complete and ending with the date November 26, 1949, as a whole, the person has been 'ordinarily resident in the territory of India.' It is also not necessary that for every day of this period he should have resided in India. In the absence of the definition of the words 'ordinarily resident' in the Constitution it is reasonable to take the words to mean 'resident during this period without any serious break.' ——Art. 6 (b) (i) — 'Migration' — Meaning — Mere coming over to India not sufficient—Intention of residing permanently—Proof.

The word 'Migration' in Art. 6 (b) (i) of the Constitution does not mean mere coming over. It means to 'come to the country with the intention of residing there permanently'. Intention to reside in India permanently cannot be proved, where the petitioner has himself applied for and obtained a Pakistani passport. — Art 6 and Citizenship Act (1955), S. 9—Citizen of India under Art 6 of the Constitution and s. 9 of the Citizenship Act - Only Central Government and not a Court can determine citizenship under the Citizenship Act.

Held, on facts that under Art. 6 (b) (i) of the Constitution a person who had migrated from Pakistan was deemed to be a citizen of India at the commencement of the Constitution if he was born in India as defined in the Government of India Act, 1935 and if he migrated before 19th July, 1948 and has been ordinarily resident in the territory of India since the date of his migration. The applicant was born in Quetta district which was in India as defined in Government of India Act, 1935. He migrated to Amla before 19th July, 1948 He was also registered as a voter in electoral roll of 1939. He must be regarded as citizen of India at the commencement of the Constitution. If the applicant was a citizen of India by virtue of Art. 6, then he could not be asked to obtain residential permits for his stay in India or to leave India after expiry of the period of stay as stated in those permits unless it was shown that after 26th January, 1950, he voluntarily acquired the citizenship of Pakistan and ceased to be an Indian citizen.

Under S. 9 of the Citizenship Act, 1955 the question whether any citizen of India had at any time between the 26th January, 1950 and the commencement of Citizenship Act, 1955, acquired the citizenship of another country was to be determined by the Central Government. ARTICLE 7

(Constitution of India, Art. 7).

1. Scope and applicability.
2. Citizen and citizenship.
3. Migration.
   (a) Migration by minor.
4. Permit system.
5. Burden of proof.

1. Scope and applicability.

● ——Art. 7—Scope—Article refers to migration taking place between 1-3-1947 and 26-1-1950.

A person who shall not be deemed to be a citizen of India is one 'who has, after the first day of March, 1947, migrated from the territory of India to the territory of Pakistan'. It is true that migration after January 26, 1950, would be migration after the first day of March, 1947, but it is clear that a person who has migrated after January 26, 1950, cannot fall within the relevant clause because the requirement of the clause is that he must have migrated at the date when the Constitution came into force. 'Has migrated' in the context cannot possibly include cases of persons who would migrate after the commencement of the Constitution. It is thus clear that it is only persons who had migrated prior to the commencement of the Constitution that fall within the scope of Art. 7. Article 7 refers to migration which has taken place between the 1st day of March, 1947, and January 26, 1950. The question about the citizenship of persons migrating to Pakistan from India after January 26, 1950, will have to be determined under the provisions of the Citizenship Act. AIR 1962 S C 1052, Rel. on. State of Madhya Pradesh v. Peer Mohd., (1963) 1 S C A 649 : 1963 (1) Cr L J 617 : (1963) 2 S C J 655 : 1963 Mad L J (Cri) 609 : (1963) Supp (1) S C R 429 : AIR 1963 S C 645 (648, 649) (Pt B) (Prs 10, 12, 13).

● ——Art. 7 and Proviso—Applicability—Citizen of India—Wife migrating to Pakistan leaving husband in India. See Constitution of India, Art. 5. AIR 1955 S C 282.

——Art. 7—Minor going to Pakistan after 1st March, 1947 and was minor on 26th January, 1950 — Applicability of Art. 7 of Constitution of India. See International Law (Private). AIR 1965 All 191 (DB).

——Art. 7—Scope—If exception to Arts. 5 and 6.

Art. 7 makes a person not a citizen of India despite the provisions of Arts. 5 and 6; it is an exception to both the Articles and, therefore, deals with a case coming within the scope of either of them. A person who migrated from India to Pakistan after 1-3-1947 is not to be deemed to be a citizen of India even though he retains his Indian domicile or has returned to India before 19-7-1948. 1960 A L J 179 : 1961 (1) Cr L J 206 : AIR 1961 All 111 (113) (Pt A) (Pr 4).

——Art. 7 — 'Notwithstanding anything in Art. 5'—Meaning of — Persons of Indian origin migrating to Pakistan—Effect. See Constitution of India, Art. 5. AIR 1959 All 79 (DB).

——Arts. 7 and 5 — Scope — Person migrating from India after Constitution came into force—Art. 7 is not attracted.

When the scheme of Arts. 5 and 7 is taken together, it must be held that these articles deal with the citizenship at the commencement of the Constitution. It necessarily follows from this that if any one had migrated between 1-3-47 and the coming into force of the Constitution, on the plain language, Art 7 would have been attracted. But in case of persons who have migrated after the coming into force of the Constitution, Art. 7 would not be attracted. 1962 (2) Cr L J 130 (Assam).

——Arts. 7 and 5—Scope—Art. 5 is subject to Art. 7.

Once a person is held to have been a citizen of India by virtue of Art. 5, the question whether he has subsequently lost that citizenship can be determined only by the Central Government under S. 9 (2) of the Citizenship Act, read with the rules made thereunder. But, even where Art. 5 is prima facie attracted, a person cannot be held to have been a citizen of India at the commencement of the Constitution in a case where Art. 7 is applicable. In short, Art. 5 is subject to and controlled by Art. 7. AIR 1957 S C 857, Foll. 69 Cal W N 126 : 1965 (1) Cr L J 676 : AIR 1965 Cal 302 (303) (Pt A) (Prs 5, 6).

——Arts. 7 and 9—Scope and applicability.

In Art. 9 there is no reference whatsoever to Art. 7. That Article, like Art. 7, is a disabling provision. The fact that Art. 9 does not deal with acquisition of citizenship of a foreign State after the commencement of the Constitution cannot however, lead to the conclusion that Art. 7 is inapplicable to those persons who migrated to Pakistan after 26-1-1950 and acquired Pakistan nationality. Such a construction would render Art. 7 nugatory. AIR 1956 Madh B 211, Rel. on. 1956 M B L R (Civ) 442 : 1956 M B L J 893 : AIR 1957 Madh B 1 (3) (Pt D) (Pr 4) (DB).

——Arts. 7, 9 and 367 (3) — Foreign States Order (1950) — Effect of — Persons migrating to Pakistan after 26-1-1950—Applicability of Art. 7.

The order does not mean that citizens of Commonwealth countries are Indian citizens even for the purposes of those Articles of the Constitution which do not contain the words "foreign State" and where the question of the interpretation of the expression "foreign State" does not arise. Article 7 does not use the words "foreign State". In Art. 9 there is no reference whatsoever to Art. 7. That Article like Art. 7 is a disabling provision. The fact that Art. 9 does not deal with acquisition of citizenship of a foreign State after the commencement of the Constitution cannot, however, lead to the conclusion that Art. 7 is inapplicable to those persons who migrated to Pakistan after 26-1-1950 and acquired Pakistan nationality. Such a construction would render nugatory Art. 7. 1956 Madh B L J 870 : Madh B L R 1956 Civ 535 : AIR 1956 Madh B 211 (213) (Pt B) (Pr 7) (DB).

——Art. 7 — Applicability—Person coming to India on visa for temporary stay.

Article 7 is applicable to a person who migrates to Pakistan, in whose case his citizenship is not affected only if he comes back to India under a permit of resettlement or permanent return. It has no application to a case of a widow who had migrated to Pakistan along with her husband and had adopted Pakistan domicile, and who has come back to India on a "C" visa for a temporary stay in India for some days. 1955 Nag L J 235 : ILR (1954) Nag 798 : 1955 Cr L J 28 : AIR 1955 Nag 6 (9) (Pt D) (Pr 11) (DB).

The Order does not mean that citizens of Commonwealth countries are Indian citizens even for the purposes of those Articles of the Constitution which do not contain the words 'foreign State' and where the question of interpretation of the expression Foreign State does not arise. ——Art. 7—Applicability — Persons born in India—Migration to Pakistan after 1st March 1947 — Right to claim citizenship of India.

Where the applicants admitted that they migrated from the territory of India to the territory of Pakistan without mentioning the date on which they migrated or without definitely stating that they migrated before 1st March 1947, it must be assumed that they migrated from India to Pakistan presumably after the 14th August 1947, on which date Pakistan came into existence and certainly after the 1st March 1947. Therefore, even though they might have been born in India as it was before the partition, they cannot be deemed to be citizens of India in view of the mandatory provision of Art. 7 of the Constitution. The proviso to that article does not apply to their case for they themselves admit that though they tried to obtain certificate for permanent settlement in India, they apparently never got it. ——Art. 7—Migration—Meaning of—Temporary visit to another country.

The expression "migrated from the territory of India to the territory now included in Pakistan" seems to have been used in Art. 7 in the sense of departure from one country to another with the intention of residence or settlement in the other country. A temporary visit to another country on business or otherwise cannot amount to migration. Whether a person had migrated from one country to another or has gone there on a temporary visit is a question of fact, which will have to be decided on the circumstances of each case.

The applicant was born and brought up in the district of Bijnor in the Uttar Pradesh within the territory of India. He was carrying on cloth business. He sent some of his goods to Lahore (Pakistan) and in order to dispose of them he went to Lahore for two months. Before his departure from Bombay to Pakistan and within the period of his temporary visit to Pakistan, he expressed his intention that he was going there on a temporary visit and would return home after finishing his business. After finishing his business, he did return to India.

Held, that in the circumstances it was not possible to hold that a temporary visit to Pakistan of the kind undertaken by the applicant amounted to migration from India to Pakistan. Hence the applicant could not be deemed to have lost the citizenship of India. ——Art. 7—Migration—Meaning—Held on facts that accused had migrated to Pakistan and was not citizen of India.

The expression 'migration' in Art. 7 of the Constitution embraces in its scope two conceptions : 1. Going from one place to another and 2. The intention to make the destination a place of abode or residence in future. In the context of the Constitution, it has the notion of transference of allegiance from the country of departure to the country of adoption. Where therefore, the facts proved are that A left his home for Pakistan after 1st March 1947, that while in Pakistan he took up service which he lost later, that A came to India on a temporary visit about thirteen months after his departure, that the purpose for which he avowedly came to India was remarriage and taking away his family to Pakistan, that A wanted to return to Pakistan but his wife did not agree to accompany him, and that his application for re-conferment of the status of an Indian citizen on him was rejected it follows that A had migrated to Pakistan in 1948 and was not a citizen of India. 1951 All Cri R 7 : 1951 All W R (H C) 50 : 1952 Cri L J 338 A I R 1951 All 16 (17) (Pr 7).

——Art. 7—Migrated to Pakistan—Meaning—(Words and Phrases—Migrated).

The expression 'migrated' from the territory of India to the territory now included in Pakistan seems to have been used in Art. 7 of the Constitution in the sense of departure from one country to another with the intention of residence or settlement in the other country. A temporary visit to another country on business or otherwise cannot amount to migration. A I R 1952 All 257, Rel. on. 1954 Cri L J 602 : A I R 1954 Bhopal 9 (12) (Pt D) (Pr 17).

——Art. 7 — Migration to Pakistan — Migration depends upon intention — Temporarily visiting other country for specific purpose without intention to give up own country — No question of migration arises. A I R 1955 N U C (Bom) 530.

——Art. 7—'Migration', meaning of — Government employee opting for service in Pakistan at the time of Partition of India — Movement to Pakistan constituted migration within Art. 7.

Where the petitioner, employed in B and A Railway, exercised his option in the first year of service, for service in Pakistan at the time of the Partition of India, and did not revoke the option within 6 months, his movement to that Dominion for that purpose constitutes 'migration' from India within the meaning of Art 7. It might be taken as fairly settled that movement from one Dominion to another for the purpose of a casual employment or business would not constitute 'migration' inasmuch as 'migration' involves the intention of removal with the intention to reside permanently.' In the case of option relating to Government service, such intention, however, may be predicated. A I R 1959 All 79 and AIR 1981 S C 58 and AIR 1985 S C 810, Rel. on

The question of intention had to be determined with reference to the point of time when the person removed to the territory of the other Dominion. Hence, the fact that he had returned subsequently after some time is not material. In the case of Government service, the intention to reside for an indefinite time in the territory of employment was obvious, inasmuch as service under the Government had certain incidents which were known or supposed to be known to every employee. Whether in India or in Pakistan, a Government servant might normally expect to continue in service till superannuation, which takes place some 30 years after the date of appointment. Hence, if an employee exercised his option to serve in another Dominion in the first year of his service, his evident intention was to continue to reside in that Dominion for some 29 years, if not more The question of allegiance also became material, in the case of employment under the Government, which might not normally arise in the case of service under a private employer and that made the option more deliberate. The option, in such cases would be deliberate and final.

The fact that his parents continued in India mattered little in determining the intention of the petitioner when he exercised his option. for he might have had the intention of removing his parents subsequently at some convenient time, and, further, for the purpose of 'migration' under Art. 7 of the Constitution, it was not essential that one must also remove his parents, The fact that he later married a girl in India was also immaterial for determining his intention at the time of option inasmuch as he was not married when he had exercised his option. Even assuming that he preferred to keep his wife at his ancestral home in India, after marriage, there was nothing to prevent him from taking his wife to Pakistan at any time subsequently. When the petitioner did not revoke his option within the period of six months it must be held that he made a deliberate choice of residing in Pakistan permanently, or for an indefinite period of time, and it cannot be held that he went over on a 'casual' business or for a 'temporary' period. 69 Cal W N 126 : 1965 (1) Cri L J 676 : A I R 1965 Cal 302 (303, 304) (Pt B) (Prs 7, 8, 9, 10).

——Art. 7 — Migration—Meaning of — Citizenship Act (1955), Ss. 5, 9 — Citizenship Rules (1956), R. 30, Sch. III, Para. 3.

The word 'migration' in Art. 7 connotes not only going to a country but going there with the intention of residing there permanently. A I R 1961 S C 58, Rel. on.

The petitioner, a Muhammadan minor, was born in Orissa. His parents were Indian citizens also resident in Orissa. In 1952 the petitioner ran away from his parents and went to East Pakistan and secured a job at Dacca in the Postal Department. In 1955, he obtained a B visa for a period of one year to see his parents in Orissa on the basis of a permit obtained by him from the Passport Officer, East Pakistan describing himself as a Pakistani national. The petitioner not only overstayed in India but also applied for long term stay in India. The prayer was rejected and he was asked to leave India within a month. Since the petitioner did not leave within that period he was prosecuted and convicted under S. 14 of the Foreigners Act, 1946.

Held, (i) that though a citizen of India the petitioner lost his citizenship by virtue of Art. 7 of the Constitution when he went to East Pakistan and remained there even after attaining majority. If after his return to India he wanted to acquire Indian Citizenship, it was open to him to apply to the authorities concerned, under S. 5 of the Citizenship Act. Section 9 (i) of that Act makes it clear that once a citizen of India has acquired Pakistani citizenship between the 26th January, 1950 and the date of commencement of that Act he ceased to be a citizen of India. His application for grant of a permit to stay in India permanently was also rejected by the Government of India. He could not therefore claim Indian citizenship unless the Central Government after due enquiry, registers him as a citizen of India under S. 5 of the Citizenship Act. The possession of a Pakistani passport was prima facie evidence that he was a citizen of Pakistan and this view was also confirmed by his subsequent conduct. A I R 1958 Cal 565 and A I R 1959 Bom 525 and (1959) 2 Andh W R 472; A I R 1960 Andh Pra 106 and A I R 1960 Pat 98, Rel. on.

(ii) that the petitioner was not entitled to claim that the criminal Court should stay its hands merely because the dispute about citizenship was raised before it for the first time. This question must be decided by the criminal Court on the facts proved, bearing in mind the burden of proof specially cast by S. 9 of the Foreigners Act, 1946. Rule 30 of the Citizenship Rules cannot be construed as conferring on a person the right to raise the question about his citizenship at any time he chooses regardless of his own previous admissions or conduct. If after entering India, the petitioner admitted before the very Tribunal who was required to decide the dispute namely the Central Government, that he was a citizen of Pakistan and that he wanted to acquire Indian citizenship, it was no longer open to him to contend in subsequent proceedings that the Government of India alone was competent to decide this question under R. 30 of Citizenship Rules. ——Art. 7— Migration — Question as to intention to migrate is a question of fact—Minor can form requisite intention.

It cannot be stated as an absolute proposition of law that in no case a minor below the age of majority can form the requisite intention to migrate from one place to another. The question whether a person can or cannot form the requisite intention to migrate is not a pure quesiton of law and must depend upon the facts of each case. AIR 1963 Guj 226, Foll. The proposition that a minor cannot form a legally effective intention is not true in all branches of law. It is well known that a minor under his personal law, can enter into a binding marriage. Under the criminal law, a minor can form the requisite mens rea on attaining the age of fourteen. Moreover, the law is not uniform as regards the attainment of the age of majority. 1964 (2) Cr L J 24 : (1964) 5 Guj L R 273 : ILR (1964) Guj 66 : AIR 1964 Guj 128 (135) (Pt B) (Pr 16) (DB).

——Art. 7—Migration—Minor can migrate and can form intention to migrate.

A minor may not be able to contract but there is nothing in the Constitution of India to show that a minor cannot migrate. The idea of migration in Art. 7 has also nothing to do with domicile. A boy of the age 13 or 14 years can form an intention of going to Pakistan permanently. Either he can go to Pakistan with the permission of his father, in which case it would be migration with the consent of his father or if he has migrated to Pakistan without the consent of his father, it would show that he had terminated the guardianship of his father and had himself independently gone to Pakistan. —Art. 7—Father migrating to Pakistan— Minor son — Nationality—Acquisition of Indian nationality—(International Law)—(Influx from West Pakistan (Control) Ordinance (1949)) — Permit System Rules.)

According to International Law, a child acquires the nationality of a parent. Where a minor migrates to Pakistan along with his father, the father does not have Indian nationality under Art 7 of the Constitution and the minor also must be taken to have acquired the nationality of the father. ——Arts. 11, 19, Sch. 7, List I, Item 17—Parliament is competent to enact S. 9 of the Citizenship Act and to make rules of evidence.

In view of the provisions of Art. 11 of the Constitution, Parliament was competent to provide for the termination of citizenship by enacting S. 9 of the Citizenship Act. Item 17 of List I of Sch VII of the Constitution embraces the power conferred on the Parliament to make law relating to citizenship, naturalisation and aliens. Therefore, the Parliament is also competent to make rules of evidence for purposes of determining whether a person has ceased to be an Indian citizen or not. Schedule III of the Citizenship Rules lays down the rules of evidence in regard to this matter. Art. 19 of the Constitution applies only to the case of Indian citizens and if a person's nationality is in dispute he cannot claim protection of the fundamental rights. The question whether a person concerned has acquired the citizenship of another country has got to be resolved with the assistance of the rules of evidence in cl. (3) of Sch. III of the Citizenship Rules, 1956. The rules of evidence framed in cl. 3 of Sch. III are not violative of Art. 19 of the Constitution. The provisions of the Influx from Pakistan (Control) Act would apply to the citizens of India equally with those who are not citizens of India. So wide and extensive a power as given by Art. 11 includes the lesser power to place restrictions even on citizens in the matter of entering the territory of India. Thus Parliament has the power to place restrictions on the right of a citizen to enter India after having left it and having entered India, to observe the conditions subject to which he was allowed to enter. ——Arts. 12 13, 14, and 15— Scope — Protection of fundamental rights —State— Meaning of.

The contention that the Ordinance, Order, by-law, etc, referred to in Art. 13 (3) (a) must be issued in pursuance of a legislating power delegated by the Legislature is unwarranted. The fundamental rights are to be safeguarded not only against legislative encroachments but against all possible encroachments at the hands of any public authority whatever and even from customs and usages. A reference to Art. 12 will show that 'the State' includes not only the Government and Parliament of India but also 'the Government and Legislature of each of the States and all local or other authorities within the territory of India or under the control of the Government of India. In Arts. 14 and 15 (1) the State is prohibited from denying equality before the law or the equal protection of the laws and is forbidden to discriminate against citizens on any of the grounds mentioned. Since the word 'State' used in these articles includes the Government even executive orders passed by the Government which militate against fundamental rights must be held to be void by reason of Art. 13 (1). ——Arts. 12, 79 and 194 (3)—Words "other authorities" as referred in Art 12—Meaning of — House of Legislature is separate entity not coming under Arts. 12 or 79.

The words "other authorities" in Art. 12 following upon the words "local authorities" clearly show that the expression "other authorities" must be construed ejusdem generis with "local authorities" and cannot possibly include the Legislative House of a State. Limitations on State as defined in Art. 12 are found in other articles. In this connection it must be remembered that the privilege and power conferred is not of the Legislature as such, for the Legislature includes both the Houses and the Governor, but the privileges under Art. 194 (3) is the privilege of the House of the Legislature and the House is not included in the definition of the State as set out in Art, 12 of the Constitution. The House, looking to the manner in which the privilege is conferred is a separate entity not coming under Art. 12 or Art. 79. ILR (1957) Bom 218 : 60 Bom L R 279.

——Arts. 12, 311 — State — Meaning of — Sarojini Naidu College for Women, Dum Dum not a State.

The particular definition introduced in Art. 12 is only for the purpose of Part III of the Constitution, which deals with fundamental rights. The Constitution does not deal with the general definition of the word 'State', except what is contained in Art. 1 and in other parts of the Constitution. The word 'State' has been defined for that part only, e.g., Arts. 12, 36, 152 and 308. Sarojini Naidu College for women, Dum Dum was held not to be a 'State' within the meaning of Art. 12. Art. 12 did not attract Art. 311. ——Art. 12 — 'Other authorities' — Meaning of — Company incorporated under Companies Act—Chemicals and Allied Products Export Promotion Council —Status of—Employee of Council – If 'civil servant' —Arts. 226 and 311 and Sch. VII, List II, Entry 5— Applicability.

In view of the fact that in enumerating the authorities the words 'other authorities' in Sch. 7, List 2, Entry 5 follow the words 'local authorities', the interpretation of the expression 'other authorities' should be based on the principle of ejusdem generis. Read in this light, it would refer to authorities of a like nature to the ones already enumerated. So interpreted, the expression 'other authorities' in Art. 12 can only refer to public authorities and not private ones. Thus a commercial concern or a company incorporated under the Companies Act cannot be considered to be included within the expression 'other authorities' in Art. 12.

The Chemicals and Applied Products Export Promotion Council is a company incorporated under the Indian Companies Act and is neither a public body nor a public authority. An employee of the Council is not a civil servant and is not entitled to the privileges of Art. 311 of the Constitution. The Council, not carrying out statutory duties in appointing or dismissing its employees, cannot be made the subject of a high prerogative writ. ——Art. 12 — 'State' includes University maintained out of State funds.

The phrase 'all local or other authorities' in Art. 12 is wide enough to include a University maintained out of State Funds. Therefore, the Vikram University which is constituted by a Statute (M. B. Act XVIII of 1955) and maintained by the State of Madhya Pradesh, comes within the definition of 'State' in Art. 12. 1961 M P C 141 : 1961 Jab L J 430 : 1961 M P L J 973 : A I R 1961 Madh-Pra 299 (300) (Pt A) (Pr 2) (DB).

——Arts. 12, 13, 14 — 'State', 'Authorities', meaning of—Karnataka Regional Engineering College Society —Not an authority falling within the definition of 'State' in Art. 12—Rules and Regulations governing admission of students into college maintained by Society, not 'law' within Art. 13.

It cannot be denied that Art. 14 is directed against the State and that an infringement of that Article which can be complained of is only an infringement thereof by the State.

The Karnataka Regional Engineering College Society is not an authority falling within the definition of the term 'State' occurring in Art. 12 nor are its rules and regulations governing the admission of students into the Engineering College maintained and administered by it 'law' within the meaning of Art. 13. An unsuccessful applicant for admission into the College is, therefore, not entitled to complain of an infringement of Art. 14 of the Constitution. The several matters enumerated in the inclusive definition of 'law' contained in Art. 13 (3) (a) are also those that have the force of law, that is to say, those that are in the nature of imperative law whose power arises by virtue of political association of persons forming themselves into a State and not by virtue of any contract, consent or mutual understanding. In this view, the term 'authorities' occurring in Art. 12 could only mean a person or a group of persons who exercise the legislative or executive functions of a State or through whom or through the instrumentality of whom the State exercises its legislative or executive power.

The Karnataka Regional Engineering College Society does not exercise any governmental functions or any legislative or executive functions of the State. The bye-laws, rules, etc., framed by the Society are those that govern the affairs of the Society and those in regard to the admission of students into various courses of study, the conduct of study and examinations, etc. Their binding force is not the same as the force of imperative law. They bind those that are members of the Society and those that seek the benefit of the education which the Society seeks to impart. By virtue of contributions in money made by the Central Government and the State Government of Mysore, all that can be said is that the institution is one which receives State-aid. That is not sufficient to bring it within the purview of Art. 14 though undoubtedly it will be bound by Art. 29 (2) in the matter of admission of students into the College.

The control, which the Central Government exercises over the Society is not sufficient to convert the Society into an authority within the meaning of Art. 12 of the Constitution. The last portion of Art. 12 reading 'within the territory of India or under the control of the Government of India', which merely qualifies the term 'authorities' occurring immediately before it, is not sufficient to destroy or take away the essential meaning of the term 'authorities' which has to be ascertained ejusdem generis with the terms or expressions occurring in the earlier part of Art. 12. ——Arts. 12, 16 (4) and 320 (4)—Authority—Public Service Commission — Power to make provision for reservation of appointments under Art. 16 (4).

The word 'authority' in Art. 12 literally means 'a body exercising power'. Under the Constitution, the Public Service Commission has no such authority and it has not got even the power to implement its own decisions without reference to the State Government.

As Art. 320 (4) says that the State Government need not even consult the Public Service Commission with respect to the matter covered under Art. 16 (4), i. e., with respect to the making of provisions for reservation of appointments in favour of backward classes of citizens, the Public Service Commission is not an authority within the meaning of that word in Art. 12 and it cannot make provision for reservation of appointments without reference to the State Government. I L R (1955) Mys 597 : A I R 1956 Mys 20 (25) (Pt I) (Pr 12) (DB).

——Arts. 12 and 308 — Scope of—Interpretation of 'other authorities'.

The scope of Art. 12 is wider as compared to Art. 308. The words 'other authorities' mentioned in Art. 12 have reference to independent authorities having origin in a statute or other law. Thus an institution such as the Bank of Patiala, which is owned and controlled by the State Government comes within the meaning of 'State' as used in both the articles but not within the meaning of 'other authorities' used in Art. 12. I L R (1954) Patiala 183 : AIR 1954 Pepsu 136 (142) (Pt C) (Pr 8) (DB).

——Art, 12—State—Punjab University—Not 'a local or other authority' falling within definition of State.

The words 'local or other authority' in Art. 12 must be construed ejusdem generis with Government or Legislature. Thus construed they could only mean authorities exercising governmental functions, and would not include persons natural or juristic who cannot be regarded as instrumentalities of the Government. The Punjab University is a body corporate created by a statute and not being charged with the execution of any governmental functions is not a local or other authority within definition of 'State' under Art. 12. ——Art. 12 — Other authorities — Meaning of—Includes public authorities created by statutes and having rule-making power—Rajasthan State Electricity Board held to be other authority within Art. 12 —Electricity (Supply) Act (1948), S. 5

The expression 'or other authorities' in Art. 12 should be given same meaning on all the well-established principles of statutory interpretation. The makers of the Constitution surely did not use it merely as synonymous with the phrase 'local authorities'. It appears that this expression will include all public authorities, that is, authorities created by a statute and armed with powers and functions in a given field of activity and for the control thereof, and having the power to make their own rules and regulations, having the force of law. AIR 1958 Trav-Co 19 (FB) and AIR 1961 Mad 234 & AIR 1962 Cal 10, Rel. on.

——Art. 12 — Nomination for admission into State-aided or State educational institutions.

It may be that nomination is not a very healthy method of taking students into colleges but it cannot be said that marks and mark alone is the most suitable method for taking students into colleges. ● ——Art. 12 Travancore-Cochin Hindu Religious Institutions Act (XV of 1950) — Cochin Devaswom Board is "other authorities" within meaning of Art. 12 of Constitution.

The Cochin Dewaswom Board constituted under the Travancore-Cochin Hindu Religious Institutions Act, 1950, cannot be considered as a local authority within the meaning of Article 12 of the Constitution. It seems to be equally clear that it will come within the ambit of "other authorities". In its literal sense the word 'authority' means a 'body exercising power" and in the context of Article 12 that power must be considered as the power to issue rules, bye-laws or regulations having the force of law. P. M. Bramadathan Nambooripad v Cochin Devaswom Board, 1955 Ker L T 516 : II R (1955) T C 741 : AIR 1956 Trav-Co 19 (21) (Pt B) (Pr 5) (FB).

5. "Within the territory of India or under the control of the Government of India"

● ——Arts. 12, 15, 32—"All local or other authorities under the control of Government of India" in Art. 12 — Meaning — Quasi-judicial authority functioning outside territory of India but administered by Government of India—Order refusing permit by Appellate Authority in Pondicherry was under Motor Vehicles Act, at a time when Pondicherry was under administration of Government of India but outside Indian territory — Authority not under control of Government of India within Art 12, being quasi-judicial authority— Writ under Art. 32 against such authority after Pondicherry has become part of India—Not available—Order if open to attack under Art. 15.

Judicial or quasi-judicial authorities functioning in territories administered by the Government of India but outside the territory of India cannot be said to be authorities under the control of the Government of India within the meaning of Art. 12 and therefore Art. 12 would not apply to such authorities functioning outside the territory of India. Consequently it would not be open to the Supreme Court to issue a writ under Art. 32 read with Art. 12 against a quasi-judicial authority outside the territory of India even though that authority might have been appointed by the Government of India, might be paid by the Government of India or the Government of India might have the power of disciplinary action against it. The Appellate authority in Pondicherry under the Motor Vehicles Act, at a time when Pondicherry was not within the territory of India, being a quasi-judicial authority, would thus not be under the control of the Government of India within the meaning of Art 12. AIR 1962 S C 797, Rel. on. Therefore, it would not have been open to the Supreme Court under Art. 32 to issue a writ against its order refusing permit when it was passed. In consequence, it is not open to the Supreme Court, after Pondicherry has become part of India, to issue a writ to the Appellate Authority with respect to an order passed by it before Pondicherry became part of India, as the Constitution for this purpose is not retrospective.

Assuming there was discrimination against the petitioner in refusing him the permit on the ground that he was merely a resident of Pondicherry and granting it to an applicant on the ground that he was a native of Pondicherry the protection of Art. 15 cannot be availed of by the petitioner.

The Chief Commissioner (the Appellate Authority in Pondicherry under the Motor Vehicles Act), being a quasi judicial authority was not under the control of the Government of India within the meaning of Art 12. Therefore, he could not be the State within that Article. If so, it follows that the discrimination (assuming there was any) was by an authority which was not the State. The protection of Art 15 is against discrimination by the State. The petitioner therefore would not be entitled to any protection under Art. 15 against the Chief Commissioner at the time the impugned order was made. K. S. Ramamurthy Reddiar v. Chief Commr. ● —Art. 13 — Essential Commodities Act (1955), S. 3 — Power to make provisions under — Does not imply power to contravene Constitution.

It is fair and proper to presume that in passing the Essential Commodities Act, the Parliament could not have intended by the words used by it in S. 3 to include a power to make such provisions even though they may be in contravention of the Constitution. The fact that the words 'in accordance with the provisions of the articles of the Constitution" are not used in the section is of no consequence. Such words have to be read by necessary implication in every provision and every law made by the Parliament on any day after the Constitution came into force. It is clear therefore that when S. 3 confers power to provide for regulation or prohibition of the production, supply and distribution of any essential commodity it gives such power to make any regulation or prohibition in so far as such regulation and prohibition do not violate any fundamental rights granted by the Constitution of India. Per Kania C. J., Patanjali Sastri, Das and Chandrasekhara Aiyar JJ. —A Court of law has to gather the spirit of the Constitution from the language of the Constitution. What one may believe or think to be the spirit of the Constitution cannot prevail if the language of the Constitution does not support that view. The idea of the preservation of past inchoate rights or liabilities and pending proceedings to enforce the same is not foreign or abhorrent to the Constitution of India. The Court should construe the language of Art. 13 (1) according to the established rules of interpretation and arrive at its true meaning uninfluenced by any assumed spirit of the Constitution. ● —Art. 13 (1) and (2) — Inclusion of Cls. (1) and (2) of Art. 13 is matter of abundant caution.

Per Kania C. J.— The inclusion of Cls. (1) and (2) of Art. 13 in the Constitution of India appears to be a matter of abundant caution. Even in their absence if any of the fundamental rights was infringed by any legislative enactment, the Court has always the power to declare the enactment, to the extent it transgresses the limits, invalid. The existence of Art. 13 (1) and (2) in the Constitution of India, therefore is not material for the decision of the question what fundamental right is given and to what extent it is permitted to be abridged by the Constitution itself. ——Art. 13, Part 3 (General) and Art. 19 (1) (g)—Scope of.

Article 19 has not abrogated the Law of Torts relating to private nuisance.

The provisions of Part 3 of the Constitution guaranteeing fundamental rights to the citizens in the State have nothing to do with the right of the individual citizens inter se.

Where the plaintiff, residing adjacent to defendant's premises brings a suit for permanent injunction to restrain the defendant from maintaining a flour mill in his premises as the running of the mill deprived the plaintiff of his right to live in his own dwelling house in a peaceful and comfortable manner and therefore amounted to a private nuisance, the defendant's right to carry on his business as such is not being denied by the suit. Article 19 (1) (g) does not, therefore, operate as a bar to the plaintiff's suit. AIR 1960 All 632 (635, 636) (Pt B) (Pr 14).

Article 13 does not abridge any vital limb for the Constitution. It is inserted ex abundanti cautela.

Per Mookerji, J.—The constitutional validity of the statute will not, necessarily, preclude challenge on constitutional grounds of its use or of purported exercise of power under it and such use and/or exercise of power may be struck down, apart from mala fides, on the ground of violation or infraction or infringement of fundamental rights or guarantees under the Constitution. ● ——Art. 13 — Powers of Parliament and State Legislatures — Comparison with powers of Parliament in England—Question whether statute is valid or void—Powers of Court,

In England Parliament is supreme and it can pass any law however unreasonable it may seem, and to whatever extent it may curtail the liberty of the subject. There is no power in the Courts in that country to declare the law to be void or invalid.

In the republic of India there is a written Constitution in which certain fundamental rights are guaranteed to its citizens. These are mentioned in Part 3 of the Constitution. If Parliament or any State Legislature makes any law taking away these fundamental rights except in the manner and to the extent provided in Part 3, then that law is void to the extent of its inconsistency with the provisions of Part 3 (vide Art. 13 (1)). Thus Parliament and the State Legislatures are not supreme to the extent that Parliament in England is supreme. The Legislatures in this country have only those powers of legislation which are bestowed upon them by the Constitution Act. If they pass an Act in excess of those powers, then that Act becomes void to that extent.

Under the Constitution the power to decide whether a piece of legislation is void or not, is given to the Courts, i.e., the judiciary and nobody else. The power of the judiciary is supreme in this respect. Sunil Kumar v. West Bengal Government, 54 Cal W N 394 : 51 Cri L J 1110 : AIR 1950 Cal 274 (276, 277) (Pt A) (Prs 3, 4) (SB).

——Art. 13, Part 3 (Arts. 12 to 35) — Fundamental rights — Powers of Parliament and Legislatures to control—Powers of Court—Extent of.

The Constitution embodies the corporate will of the people and they have expressly elected through their representatives to surrender and forgo in the larger interests of the State and for the welfare of the people, part of their rights to the State. The fundamental rights recognised in the Constitution no doubt to some extent constitute limitations on the powers of the Parliament and the State legislatures to enact laws and these were intended in the interests and for the benefit of the minorities. To what extent the control should be permitted and whether the legislature in enacting a particular law transgressed its limits without any justification and whether such transgression is within reasonable bounds are matters left open for the Courts to decide. Unlike the American Constitution where under the power known as "due process of law" the Courts have exercised and have been exercising a greater degree of freedom in declaring a law unconstitutional on the ground of its unreasonableness for deciding which no particular standard had been laid down by the legislature, under the Indian Constitution, the Court's function is circumscribed and limited to the extent of considering whether the restrictions are reasonable or not. 1952 Mad W N 299: 1952-1 Mad L J 557: AIR 1952 Mad 613 (633) (Pt J) (Pr 30) (DB).

——Art. 13 (1)—Words "inconsistent with the provisions of this Part" — Meaning of — Scope of the Article.

Inconsistency or repugnancy does not depend upon the exercise of the power by virtue of the provisions in an Act but by virtue of the provisions themselves. If a particular provision of the Act, if enforced in strict accordance with the letter of the law as laid down therein, would contravene the provision of Part 3 of the Constitution, then it could not be held to be inconsistent but only to be repugnant. It is the provision impugned to be looked into and not the manner in which the power under it is exercised. 1952 Cr L J 170: AIR 1951 Mad 1015 (1039, 1040) (Pt F) (Pr 60) (DB).

——Arts. 13 and 22 (7)—Scope.

Article 22 (7) was never intended to be a means of avoiding the operation of Art. 13 (1). It is a provision for action not before, but after the Constitution has come into force, and it was intended for prospective, and not retrospective operation. In other words, it relates not to Art. 13 (1), but to Art. 13 (2). After Parliament or the President has in effect by order modified the provisions of Art. 22 (4), then a law may be made which perhaps otherwise would have been void or ultra vires under Art. 13 (2), but no order or law made under Art. 22 (7) can operate upon a law which has already become void under Art. 13 (1). 51 Cri L J 1081 : I L R 29 Pat 335 : A I R 1950 Pat 265 (270, 279) (Pt D) (Prs 20, 62) (DB).

1(a). Applicability.

● ——Arts. 13, 14 - Scope of Article—Applicability —Two different statutes of different authorities—

Difference in dearness allowances of Central and State Government Servants—Validity—Fundamental Rules, R. 44.

The power of the Court to declare a law void under Art. 13 has to be exercised with reference to the specific legislation which is impugned. It is conceivable that when the same legislature enacts two different laws but in substance they form one legislation, it might be open to the Court to disregard the form and treat them as one law and strike it down, if in their conjunction they result in discrimination. But such a course is not open where the two laws sought to be read in conjunction are by different Governments and by different legislatures. Article 14 does not authorise the striking down of a law of one State on the ground that in contrast with a law of another State on the same subject its provisions are discriminatory. Nor does it contemplate a law of the Centre or of the State dealing with similar subjects being held to be unconstitutional by a process of comparative study of the provisions of the two enactments. The sources of authority for the two statutes being different, Art. 14 can have no application.

Held, that the scale of dearness allowance recommended by the Central Pay Commission and sanctioned by the Central Government could furnish no ground for holding that the scale of dearness allowance recommended by the Pay Committee and adopted by the State Government by the impugned resolution, was repugnant to Art. 14.

Held, further that it may no doubt sound hard that Government servants doing work of a similar kind and working it may be, even in the same place, should receive different allowances; but the rights of the parties have to be decided on legal considerations, and it was impossible to hold that the resolution in question was bad under Art. 14. State of M. P. v. G. C. Mandawar, 1955 S C R 599 : (1954) S C J 503 : (1954) 2 Mad L J 51 : (1954) S C A 767 : A I R 1954 S C 493 (496) (Pt C) (Pr 9).

Article 13 has no application to the Articles of the Constitution. Therefore, it cannot be said that the order of the President which was passed by him under the provisions of the Constitution offends Art. 14 of the Constitution. The President has taken this step in the interest of the security of the State, and this power the President possessed under the Constitution. Rule 52 of Civil Services (Classification Control and Appeal) Rules is not also void, as being in contravention of Art. 14 of the Constitution. The rule only reproduces the power of the President given to him by the Constitution. I L R (1958) Bom 514 : 1958 Nag L J 50 : 60 Bom L R 241 : AIR 1958 Bom 283 (290) (Pt E) (Pr 29) (DB).

——Art. 13—Does not apply to Constitution itself—Part 12 is not cut down by Part 3 –(Interpretation of Statutes–Construction).

Venkatarama Aiyer J.—Article 13 does not apply to the Constitution itself. It does not enact that the other portions of the Constitution should be void as against the provisions in Part 3 and it would be surprising if it did, seeing that all of them are parts of one organic whole. Article 13, therefore, cannot be read so as to render any portion of the Constitution invalid. This conclusion is also in accordance with the principle adopted in interpretation of statutes, that they should be so construed as to give effect and operation to all portions thereof and that a construction which renders any portion of them inoperative should be avoided. The operation of Part 12 is not cut down by Part 3 and the fundamental rights are within the powers of taxation by the State. 1952 Mad W N 72 : 65 Mad L W 114 : 1952-1 Mad L J 208 : ILR (1952) Mad 933: AIR 1952 Mad 395 (405) (Pt C) (Pr 41) (DB).

——Arts. 13 and 254—Applicability.

Per Sarjoo Prasad J. — Art. 254 can only apply if there is a legislation by Parliament in regard to some of those matters enumerated in List I or in List 3 of Sch. 7. Where the repugnancy complained of is against the Constitution of India itself the relevant provision applicable is not Art. 254 but Art. 13 of the Constitution. 51 Crj L J 1081 : ILR 29 Pat 335: AIR 1950 Pat 265 (277, 278) (Pt I) (Pr 58) (DB).

1 (b). Repugnancy between law and Constitution.

——Arts. 13, 20 and 245—Scope — Repugnancy between law and Constitution—Duty of Court.

Where any conflict exists between a rule of law laid down by any Act and the provision in Constitution, it is the duty of the Court to try to resolve the conflicts, but if the conflict cannot be resolved, the Constitution being paramount and supreme must be held to prevail and the conflicting law must be held to be void.

The powers of the legislature in India were limited for they are made subject to the provisions of the Constitution by Art. 245 (1). Therefore, any law which directly or indirectly transgresses the fundamental rights guaranteed by the Constitution and these include the right given by Art. 20 (3) must be held to be void. I L R (1957) 2 All 110 : 1958 Cri L J 462 : A I R 1958 All 293 (301) (Pt F) (Prs 41, 43) (DB).

——Art. 13 (2) — Act contravening fundamental rights guaranteed by Constitution—Order passed under—Validity.

An Act which is wholly ultra vires as being in contravention of the fundamental rights guaranteed by the Constitution would be absolutely null and void under Art. 13 of the Constitution. Where a law is void it has no existence in the eye of law and therefore an order purporting to have been passed under it is a nullity and may be ignored altogether. ——Art. 13—Scope—Protection of fundamental rights —Fundamental rights are to be safeguarded not against legislative encroachments but against all possible encroachments at the hand of any public authority whatever and even from customs and usages —See Ibid, Art. 12. AIR 1954 All 608 (DB).

——Art. 13, Part III (Arts. 12 to 35)—Fundamental rights—Encroachment by Legislature—Principles to be considered.

While the Court must always be vigilant to prevent an encroachment by the Legislature upon fundamental rights which have been guaranteed, it must also remember that it is not a third chamber sitting in judgment on the policy laid down by the Legislature and which has been embodied in the legislation which it is considering. However repugnant any legislation may be to the conception which the Court has of what is right and wrong and, however, drastic the provisions of such legislation may be if it does not in fact contravene any of the articles of the Constitution which lay down fundamental rights, then it would be the duty of the Court to uphold such legislation. ——Arts. 13, 14 and 19 (1) (g) —Refusal by Government to deal with black-listed contractor — If infringement of fundamental right or rule of law—Art. 226—Natural justice.

A citizen of India undoubtedly has a fundamental right to carry on a trade or business, but he has no fundamental right to insist upon the Government or any other individual, doing business with him. The Government, as well as any individual, has got a right to enter or not into a contract with a particular person. AIR 1955 Mad 365, Rel. on. Where therefore a State Government refuses to enter into any contract with a contractor who has been 'black-listed', there is no violation of any fundamental right or right to carry on any profession. No remedy is available under Art. 226. Art. 14 applies only to laws as defined in Art. 13 and an order of Government black-listing certain contractor does not amount to such law. AIR 1955 S C 334 and AIR 1958 Ker 33, Rel. on. Natural justice cannot be imported into the consideration of purely executive orders. ● ——Art. 13—Law invading fundamenial right.

If a statute enacted ostensibly for removal and prevention of encroachments on lands which are public property has little or very unsubstantial relation to those subjects and is a palpable invasion of rights secured by Part 3 of the Constitution, the Court will have to declare that portion of the statute which is a palpable invasion of the fundamental rights as void and unconstitutional and thus give effect to the Constitution. 1 (c). This Article and Article 372.

● ——Art. 13 (1)——Object of.

Per Narasimham J.—The object of Art. 13 (1) is to invalidate those existing laws which continue in force by virtue of Art. 372 (1) which are inconsistent with any of the provisions of Part 3 dealing with the fundamental rights even though those provisions may expressly refer to the rights of persons and not to the laws of the State. Prahalad Jena v. State, ILR (1950) Cut 222: 51 Cri L J 1189 : AIR 1950 Orissa 157 (160) (Pt C) (Pr 4) (FB).

——Arts. 13 (1) and 372 (1)—Interpretation.

The various provisions of the Constitution have to be so read as to make them consistent, if possible, and therefore Art. 372 cannot have been intended to preserve laws or portions of laws which Art. 13 (1) renders void. There is no inconsistency between Art. 13 (1) and Art. 372 (1) if Art. 372 is regarded as applying to only such cases as do not come within the mischief of Art. 13 (1). 51 Cri L J 1081 : ILR 29 Pat 335 : AIR 1950 Pat 265 (270, 279) (Pt E) (Prs 24, 62) (DB).

Transport Service (Development) Act—Validity—(U. P. Transport Services (Development) Act (9 of 1955), S. 1).

Per Bhagwati, Subba Rao and Wanchoo, JJ.—The combined effect of Arts. 13, 31, 245 (1) and 246 may be stated thus. Parliament and the Legislatures of States have power to make laws in respect of any of the matters enumerated in the relevant lists in the Seventh Schedule and that power to make laws is subject to the provisions of the Constitution including Art. 13, i.e., the power is made subject to the limitations imposed by Part 3 of the Constitution. Under Art. 13, Cl. (1) a pre-Constitution law subsists except to the extent of its inconsistency with the provisions of Part 3, whereas no post-Constitution law can be made contravening the provisions of Part 3, and therefore the law, to that extent though made, is a nullity from its inception.

The doctrine of eclipse has no application to post-Constitution laws infringing the fundamental rights.

The Constitution in express terms makes the power of a legislature to make laws in regard to the entries in the Lists of the Seventh Schedule subject to the other provisions of the Constitution and thereby circumscribes or reduces the said power by the limitations laid down in Part 3 of the Constitution; a law made in derogation or in excess of that power would be ab initio void wholly or to the extent of the contravention as the case may be; and the doctrine of eclipse can be invoked only in the case of a law valid when made.

The U. P. Legislature passed the U. P. Transport Service (Development) Act whereunder the State Government was authorised to frame a scheme of nationalization of motor transport. The State Government framed the scheme under the U. P. Act after the passing of the Constitution (Fourth Amendment) Act, 1955.

Held, that the validity of the Act could not be tested on the basis of the Constitution (Fourth Amendment) Act, 1955, but only on the terms of the relevant articles as they existed prior to the amendment. A I R 1957 All 320, Reversed.

——Art. 13 (1) — Pre-Constitution Act—Validity — Doctrine of eclipse, applicability—Doctrine has no application if Act is void ab initio.

The doctrine of eclipse (according to which a law validly made would take effect when the obstruction is removed) based on a construction of Art. 13 (1) applies only where a pre-Constitution law was valid under the provisions of the Government of India Act, 1935, and became invalid on the coming into force of the Constitution on account of the provisions of Part 3 of the Constitution dealing with fundamental rights. If, however, the Act or any of its provisions was void under the provisions of the Government of India Act itself, it will be still-born and the doctrine of eclipse cannot have any application inasmuch as Art. 13 (1) itself would not apply to such an Act. AIR 1959 S C 648, Foll. (1960) 2 O J D 218 : ILR (1960) Cut 487 : AIR 1961 Orissa 196 (200) (Pt B) (Pr 8) (DB).

——Art. 13 — Rajasthan Passengers and Goods Taxation (Amendment and Validation) Act (22 of 1964), S. 4—Inconsistency of an Act with constitutional provisions — Void Act — Meaning — Distinction between Pre-Constitution and Post-Constitution Acts in this respect —Doctrine of eclipse—When applies —Re-enactment of post-Constitution Act —Can validate the invalid Act with retrospective effect.

The word 'void' in Art. 13 of the Constitution correctly means "ineffectual, nugatory or devoid of any legal force or binding effect" and not that the statute stood repealed and therefore obliterated from the statute book. It is however, recognised that there is a vital difference in this behalf between the pre-Constitution and post-Constitutional laws, and that in the case of the former the voidness is not from their very inception but is a supervening one, while the voidness in the case of the latter starts from their very inception and they do not exist for all practical purposes.

It necessarily follows from this as a corrollary that whereas a pre-constitution law can be revived by the removal of the constitutional defect, by a subsequent amendment of the Constitution and the law is thus revived, yet in the case of post-Constitution laws there can be no revival by a mere amendment of the Constitution, and the doctrine of eclipse which can apply in the first kind of laws is incapable of being properly attracted in the case of the second category thereof.

Although a post-Constitution statute which is void as being unconstitutional cannot be vitalised by an amendment as such, it being a still-born law, there can be no valid objection to such law being re-enacted, and, if so re-enacted by competent plenary authority, it would hold good. AIR 1954 S C 728; AIR 1958 S C 468; AIR 1963 S C 1019 and AIR 1963 S C 1667, Rel. on.

Held, that Rajasthan Act 22 of 1964 was not merely an amending and a curative Act in that limited sense, but it was really an Act which virtually re-enacted the provisions of the earlier Acts which suffered from a Constitutional infirmity.

Held further that it was well settled law at this date that a taxation law could be enforced with retrospective effect. AIR 1954 S C 158 and AIR 1962 S C 1006, Rel. on. ILR (1965) 15 Raj 285 : 1965 Raj L W 118.

1 (e). Directive principles—Implementation.

● ——Arts. 13, 245 and 246—Legislation by State to implement directive principles Legislation cannot overrule fundamental rights—Principle of harmonious construction to be followed.

The legislative power conferred upon a State Legislative Assembly by Arts. 245 and 246 is to be exercised under Art. 245 subject to the provisions of the Constitution. Although certain legislation may have been undertaken by a State in discharge of the obligation imposed on it by the directive principles enshrined in Part 4 of the Constitution, it must nevertheless, subserve and not override the fundamental rights conferred by the provisions of the Articles contained in Part 3 of the Constitution.

The directive principles of State policy have to conform to and run as subsidiary to the Chapter on Fundamental Rights. Nevertheless, the Court may not entirely ignore these directive principles of State policy laid down in Part 4 of the Constitution but should adopt the principle of harmonious construction and should attempt to give effect to both as much as possible. ● ——Art. 13 (2) and Part IV—Scope—Implementation of directive principles and fundamental rights —Harmonious interpretation.

Art. 13 (2) expressly says that the State shall not make any law which takes away or abridges the rights conferred by Chap. 3 of our Constitution which enshrines the fundamental rights. The directive principles cannot override this categorical restriction imposed on the legislative power of the State. A harmonious interpretation has to be placed upon the Constitution and so interpreted it means that the State should certainly implement the directive principles but it must do so in such a way that its laws do not take away or abridge the fundamental rights. ● ——Arts. 13 (2) and 368—'Law', meaning of—Act amending Constitution under Art. 368 — Art. 13 (2) cannot affect validity of such law even if it abridges or takes away fundamental rights.

Per Gajendragadkar C. J., Wanchoo and Raghubar Dayal JJ. :

Article 13 (2) does not affect amendments of the Constitution made under Art. 368. The word 'law' in its literal sense, may include constitutional law, but 'there is a clear demarcation between ordinary law, which is made in exercise of legislative powers, and constitutional law which is made in exercise of constituent powers'. Though both Arts. 13 and 368 are widely phrased, the harmonious rule of construction requires that the word 'law' in Art. 13 should be taken to exclude law made in exercise of the constituent power. AIR 1951 S C 458, Foll.

When Art. 368 confers on Parliament the right to amend the Constitution the power in question can be exercised over all the provisions of the Constitution. How the power should be exercised, has to be determined by reference to the question as to whether the proposed amendment falls under the substantive part of Art. 368, or attracts the provisions of the proviso.

There is no doubt that if the word 'law' used in Art. 13 (2) includes a law in relation to the amendment of the Constitution, fundamental rights can never be abridged or taken away, because as soon as it is shown that the effect of the amendment is to take away or abridge fundamental rights, that portion of the law would be void under Art. 13 (2).

Laws falling within the purview of Arts. 4 (2) and 169 (3) need not be passed subject to the restrictions imposed by Art. 368, even though, in effect, they may amount to the amendment of the relevant provisions of the Constitution. If the Constitution-makers took the precaution of making this specific provision to exclude the applicability of Art. 368 to certain amendments, it would be reasonable to assume that they would have made a specific provision if they had intended that the fundamental rights guaranteed by Part 3 should be completely outside the scope of Article 368.

● ——Arts. 13, 368 — "Law" in Art. 13 whether includes amendments made in Constitution of India under Art. 368—Function of Constitutional law.

Although "law" must ordinarily include constitutional law, there is a clear demarcation between ordinary law, which is made in exercise of legislative power, and constitutional law, which is made in exercise of constituent power. The constitutional law is mainly concerned with the creation of the three great organs of the State, the executive, the legislature and the judiciary, the distribution of governmental power among them and the definition of their mutual relation. No doubt our Constitution makers, have incorporated certain fundamental rights in Part III and made them immune from interference by laws made by the State. However, it is difficult, in the absence of a clear indication to the contrary, to suppose that they also intended to make those rights immune from constitutional amendment. The terms of Art. 368 are perfectly general and empower Parliament to amend the Constitution, without any exception whatever. Had it been intended to save the fundamental rights from the operation of that provision, it would have been perfectly easy to make that intention clear by adding a proviso to that effect. Thus, there are two articles each of which is widely phrased, but conflicts in its operation with the other. Harmonious construction requires that one should be read as controlled and qualified by the other. Therefore, in the context of Art. 13 "law" must be taken to mean rules or regulations made in exercise of ordinary legislative power and not amendments to the Constitution made in exercise of constituent power with the result that Art. 13 (2) does not affect amendments made under Art. 368. ——Arts. 13 and 372—"Existing law" and "Laws in force" — Interpretation — If interchangeable and synonymous — Interpretation of Statutes — Government of India Act (1935), Ss. 292 and 293.

Although according to the ordinary and normal canon of construction of statutes when the Court finds in a statute or in a Constitution two different expressions used, the Court should as far as possible give two different meanings to these expressions, instances are not unknown where two different expressions have been used to convey the same meaning. According to the plain natural construction the term "existing law" is clearly a term of wider concept than "law in force". "Existing law" would include all laws whether actually in force or potentially in operation, the only qualification or limitation being that these laws must have been passed before the Constitution came into force. "Law in force" has a narrower and more restricted cannotation. It seems to indicate laws actually in force, not laws whose operation is suspended or which have not been extended to certain territories. But the two expressions "existing law" and "law in force" have been treated and interpreted as interchangeable and synonymous and in the Constitution of India these expressions have been used without any distinction or difference, as was the case under the Government of India Act 1935. ——Arts. 13, 366 (10)—"Law", "Laws in force" and "Existing law"—Meaning and import of.

Of the three terms used in the Constitution of India, namely 'Law", "Laws in force" and "Existing law" the expression "Law" is intended to connote prospective laws made subsequent to the coming into operation of the Constitution, whereas the term "Laws in force" is intended to include laws passed by Legislature or other competent authority before the commencement of the Constitution and not previously repealed, notwithstanding that any such law or any part thereof may not be in operation either wholly or in part at the commencement of the Constitution either throughout the whole of the territory of India or in particular areas. The "existing law" is much wider in scope and import because it includes such things as Ordinances, Orders, bye-laws, rules, or regulations made not only by a competent legislative authority but by other bodies and persons empowered or authorised to make or promulgate such things. It, is, therefore, seen that a "law in force" must have been a law passed, or made, by a Legislature or other competent authority whereas an "existing law" includes even an order or a bye-law made by a person having power to make such an Ordinance or order. Both the expressions "Existing law" and "Laws in force" refer to positive legal Act which were in existence at the time of the Constitution whereas the word "law" in Cl. (3) (a) to Art. 13, denotes those that have to be passed hereafter. 1952 Cri L J 170 : AIR 1951 Mad 1015 (1020) (Pt E) (Pr 6) (DB).

Articles 13 and 19 of the Constitution makes it clear that Fundamental Rights granted under (a) and (b) of sub-cl. (1) of Art. 19 cannot be circumvented or restricted except to the extent provided in sub-cls. (2) and (3) of Art. 19. These sub-clauses make it clear that the fundamental rights can be restricted only by an existing law.

In view of the provisions of S. 1 (2), Cr. P. Code, read with the Merged States (Laws) Act and the Part C States (Laws) Act, the Code of Criminal Procedure cannot be said to be the "existing law' of Manipur State within the meaning of sub-cls. (2) and (3) of Art. 19 of the Constitution of India, and so no provision of this Code can curtail the fundamental rights of the citizens within the Manipur State.

An order on the analogy of S. 144, Cr. P. Code, can never be deemed to be the "existing law" either under Art. 19 (2) and (3) or under Art. 366 (1) of the Constitution of India and so such order must be deemed to be void under Art. 13 (1) of the Constitution of India as being inconsistent with Part 3. 1955 Cri L J 1603 : AIR 1955 Manipur 41 (47, 48) (Pt C) (Prs 25, 28).

The definition of the expression 'laws in force' is not exhaustive but is only illustrative as the word used is "includes" and not 'means'. Secondly, under clause (3) (a) 'Law' has been defined so as to include 'custom and usage having the force of law'. Under S. 13 of the General Clauses Act, a word used in plural has the same meaning as when it is used in the singular form and the context in clause (1) of Art. 13 makes it necessary to interpret 'laws in force' so as to include customs and usages. P. Municipalities Act (2 of 1916), Ss. 298 and 318.

The petitioner was carrying on wholesale business in vegetables in the municipal limits of the town of Kairana in U. P. Subsequently the municipality framed certain bye-laws under S. 298, U. P. Municipalities Act. Bye-law 2 provided that no person shall establish a market for wholesale transactions in vegetables except with the permission of the Board. There was however no bye-law authrising the Board to issue the necessary licence. Further, bye-law 4 provided for the grant of a monopoly to a contractor to deal in wholesale transactions at the place fixed as a market. Acting upon this provision the Board granted a monopoly to one H to carry on the wholesale business at a place fixed as a market. The result was that the Board became powerless to grant licence to the petitioner to carry on the business within the municipal limits and it actually refused an application of the petitioner in that behalf on the ground that there was no bye-law under which the Board could grant the licence. The petitioner who was thus completely prohibited from carrying on his business filed an application under Art. 32 of the Constitution for enforcement of his fundamental right to carry on his trade guaranteed by Art. 19 (1) of the Constitution :

Held, that the prohibition in bye-law 2, in the absence of any provision for issuing licence, became absolute and further the restrictions placed on the petitioner by bye-law 4 were more than reasonable restrictions as are contemplated by Art. 19 (6) and, therefore, the bye laws would be void under Art. 13 (1) of the Constitution.

Held further, that though the existence of an adequate legal remedy is to be taken into consideration in the matter of granting prerogative writs, the powers given to the Supreme Court under Art. 32 are much wider and are not confined to issuing prerogative writs only. Moreover, the remedy of appeal under S. 318, U. P. Municipalities Act, was not an adequate legal remedy in the circumstances of the case. The petitioner was therefore entitled to the relief prayed for under Art. 32. Rashid Ahmed v. There must be certainty in framing rules or bye-laws of every kind by public authorities. Such rules or bye-laws are included in the definition of the terms 'law' as used in Art. 13 of the Constitution of India. Certainty is particularly essential in framing rules or bye-laws creating offences. If a citizen cannot plead ignorance of law as an excuse for the commission of an offence, he is also entitled to demand reasonable certainty in the meanings of law which create offences so that he may know what his legal obligations and liabilities are with a fair amount of assurance. 1964 (2) Cri L J 627 : A I R 1964 All 544 (548) (Pt C) (Pr 22).

● ——Art. 13 - 'Law'— Notification issued under Act infringing fundamental right—Validity of.

The validity of a notification issued by the State, it being law, is as much vulnerable to attack as that of the Act itself under which it is issued on the ground that it infringes any of the fundamental rights. If an Act is a self-contained one and the notification issued thereunder only restates the provisions of the Act, the validity of the notification cannot obviously be questioned where the validity of its contents is accepted. But if the Act confers a power on the State in general terms and the notification issued thereunder infringes one or other of the fundamental rights, the validity of the Act cannot equally prevent an attack on the notification.

Section 4 of the Securities Contracts (Regulation) Act 1956 empowers the Central Government to issue a notification recognising a stock exchange subject to certain conditions expressed in general terms. The general terms can comprehend both reasonable and unreasonable restrictions. If the notification imposes unreasonable restrictions it is liable to be set aside. Madhubhai Amathalal Gandhi v. Under Art. 13 (3) of the Constitution, the word 'law' is defined to include also an order or notification, and under Art. 13 (1) a law in force, in so far as it is inconsistent with the provisions of Part 3 of the Constitution, would be void.

Though an Act is validly passed, for instance, the Madras Estates Land (Reduction of Rent) Act. 1947, a notification issued thereunder may, under certain circumstances, infringe the fundamental right conferred by the Constitution. The question, therefore, falls to be considered on the facts of each case whether an order or a notification issued under the Act reducing the rents offends the provisions of Art 19 (1) (f) of the Constitution. And if a Court comes to the conclusion that in a particular case a person has been substantially or totally deprived of the net income available to him, it must be held that in that contingency, a citizen's fundamental rights to hold property is transgressed by law and, therefore, to that extent the law is void under Art. 13 of the Constitution. Where the petitioners have not challenged the Motor Vehicles Act or the Rules made under the Act as being arbitrary or discriminatory, but have challenged the Notifications passed by the Registering Authority made under the Act and the rules under that Act they cannot do so unless they show that the notifications issued are mala fide. It is manifest from the provisions of the Motor Vehicles Act that the Transport Authority can allow a stage carriage to run on a particular route subject to certain conditions laid down in the permit and also fix certain places where the motor vehicles can stand, pick up and set down passengers and load and unload goods. Where the Registering Authority keeping the general public interest in view, has regulated the movement of the stage carriages, public carriage or private carriers into the city of Jammu at prescribed hours they are by no means unreasonable restrictions and hence the notifications do not offend Art. 19 (1) (g) of the Constitution of India. A private grant to a person by a Ruler or by any other authority means the vesting of the person with a right in property which vested in the Ruler or in the other authority. When the Ruler of a State grants the exclusive right of officiating as a priest in certain villages of his State to a particular person hereditarily, the Ruler is not making a private grant of a property vested in him as in the case of his lease-hold right. The Ruler is thereby not only granting the exclusive right to a particular person, but restricting the religious right of the villagers of the villages from utilising the service of any other priests for their religious ceremonies. Such an order has certainly the force of law within the meaning of Art. 13 (3) (a) of the Constitution. A I R 1952 Him Pra and Bilaspur 41, Distinguished.

Per Sinha C. J., Das and N. Article 182 cannot, therefore, deprive the managing committee of its rights in the properties of the school which is under its management. Dwarka Nath Tewari v. —Arts. 13 and 14—Applicability— Administrative direction—Reasonable classification—Test.

In order to attract Art. 14, the Government direction must amount to a 'law' as defined in Art. 13 and not a mere administrative direction or executive order. Article 14 does not forbid reasonable classification, and in order to pass the test of permissible classification two conditions alone need be fulfilled. (1) the classification must be founded on an intelligible differentia which distinguishes persons or things that are grouped together from others left out of the group; (2) the differentia must have a rational relation to the object sought to be achieved; and the classification may be founded on different bases, namely, geographical, or according to objects or occupations or the like.

The Madras General Sales Tax Act was a law in force at the date of the commencement of the Constitution and under Art. 372 (1) of the Constitution it was continued in force "subject to the provisions of the Constitution". One of these provisions was Art. 286 (2), and in so far as the enactment permitted the levy of taxes on the inter-State sales such portion of the law ceased to be enforceable. This effect however was subject to two conditions which operated to prevent the entire effacement of that law. The first was that the President could by order postpone the operation of the ban imposed by Art. 286 (2). As the President did exercise that power by promulgating Sales Tax Continuance Order, 1950, it resulted in the law imposing such taxation being effective up to 31-3-951. Even thereafter, by Sales Tax Law Validation Act which the Parliament has legislated with retrospective effect, the Madras General Sales Tax Act in so far as it permitted taxes on inter-State was not obliterated from the statute book on 1-4-1951 but was unenforceable by reason of Parliament's failure to lift the ban. 70 Mad L W 186 : (1957) 8 S T C 177 : (1957) 2 Mad L J 167 : A I R 1957 Mad 368 (373, 374) (Pt D) (Prs 17, 18) (DB).

—Art. 13—"Law" —Meaning of —Huzur Order in Limbdi State — Amounts to 'law in force' in Saurashtra.

The definition of "law" does not relate merely to law in Cl. (2) of Art. 13 (3) (a), but also to the words "laws in force" in Art. 13 (1). It applies to the conception of law for the whole purpose of the Article, and therefore applies also to the conception of law in the expression "laws in force".

Further, reading S. 4 of the Saurashtra Ordinance, I of 1948 and S. 7 of Saurashtra Ordinance IV of 1948 together it is plain that an 'order' of the former State, Estate or Taluka was to continue in force under S. 4 of Ordinance No. 1 of 1948. The Huzur Order in force in former Limbdi State although it was not a 'Dhara' or law enacted by the said State, was still an order which had the force of law, under the provisions of the Saurashtra Ordinances and was being applied by the Saurashtra State. The Order was therefore, covered by the expression "law" as defined in Art. 13 (3) (a), and since that definition also applied to the words "laws in force" in Art. 13 (1), the said Order was a "law" in force in the Saurashtra State from before the Constitution, and in case it is found inconsistent with the fundamental rights, it would be void to the extent of such inconsistency. AIR 1956 Sau 54 (56) (Pt A) (Pr 3) (DB).

——Art. 13—Retrospective operation.

Art. 13 of the Constitution has no retrospective effect and if, therefore, any action was taken before the commencement of the Constitution in pursuance of the provisions of any law which was a valid law at the time when such action was taken, such action cannot be challenged and the law under which such action was taken cannot be questioned as unconstitutional and void on the score of its infringing the fundamental rights enshrined in Part 3 of the Constitution. Per Kania C. J., Patanjali Sastri, Mahajan, Das and Chandrasekhara Aiyar JJ. (Fazl Ali and Mukherjea JJ. contra.) Art. 13 (1) can have no retrospective operation but is wholly prospective. If an act was done before the commencement of the Constitution in contravention of the provisions of any law which, after the Constitution, becomes void with respect to the exercise of any of the fundamental rights the inconsistent law is not wiped out so far as the past act is concerned Hence proceedings under S. 18 (1) Press Emergency Powers Act, 1931, pending at the date of the Constitution are not affected. —— Art. 13—Retrospective effect.

The fundamental rights created by the Constitution are not retrospective in scope or effect. Even when an act is such that, if done after the Constitution it would be violative of a Constitutional right, but it was done before the commencement of the Constitution when there was no Constitutional right to be voilated, a person aggrieved by such act cannot, after the commencement of the Constitution, challenge the Act on the ground that it constituted or constitutes an infringement of a right guaranteed to him by the Constitution. —— Art. 13—Retrospective effect.

Art. 13 of the Constitution is not retrospective in operation and an order passed under some law in force prior to the commencement of the Constitution cannot be questioned on the ground that the law was inconsistent with the provisions of Part 3 of the Constitution.

The order itself may be erroneous in the sense that if some other authority were to consider the law and the facts placed before it might arrive at a different conclusion. But the error itself does not vitiate the order nor does the order cease to be one without jurisdiction on account of such error. A I R 1951 Kutch 73 (74) (Pt A) (Pr 9).

—— Art. 13 – Pre-Constitution Laws and Executive actions Validity of.

The fundamental rights declared under the Constitution can be enforced both against the laws of the State as well as executive actions. In regard to pre-Constitution laws and executive actions, Art. 13 invalidates only the former in so far as they contravene the guaranteed rights. —— Art. 13—Retrospective effect — Punjab Court of Wards Act (2 of 1903), S. 5 (2) (d).

The Constitution is wholly prospective in its operation and the voidance of existing law was limited to future exercise of fundamental rights. The High Court cannot interfere with a valid order passed by Government under S. 5 (2) (d) of the Punjab Court of Wards Act merely on the ground that by subsequent enactment or by the Constitution some rights have been conferred on the petitioner which according to him have made the Act ultra vires Case law discussed. 55 Punj L R 279 : ILR (1953) Punj 279 : AIR 1953 Punj 30 (33, 34) (Pt C) (Prs 25, 30) (DB).

Article 13 (1) of the Constitution being prospective the mere fact that an Act or a statute is inconsistent with it and, therefore, void does not affect anything done or action taken or rights which have accrued as a result of that subsequently declared void Act if such a right had accrued or action had been taken before the Constitution came into force. Where before the Constitution had come into effect the execution of a decree had become barred under the Punjab Debtors' Protection Act because of the judgment-debtor being an agriculturtst as defined in the Punjab Alienation of Land Act the period of limitation will not be extended and the execution will not become one within time under S. 48, C. And as in fact there was no decision of a Civil Court he could not get the writ he was seeking. The Nizam had power to confiscate the property and to take it away in toto and so the rights so destroyed would not have revived because the Constitution only guarantees to a citizen such rights as he had at the date it came into force. At the date the Constitution came into force he had no right to immediate possession; the utmost he had was a right to be restored to possession if and when he established his rights in a Court of law. A partnership firm known as Lallamal Hardeodas Cotton Spinning Mills Company, of which the petitioner was a partner, was closed on 19th March, 1949. On 21st July, 1949, the Government of U. P. passed an order purporting to be made under S. 3 (f), U. P. Industrial Disputes Act, 1947, by which they appointed one of the partners of the firm, as "authorised controller" of the undertaking. The order directed the said partner to take over possession of the mill to the exclusion of the other partners, and run the undertaking himself subject to the general supervision of the District Magistrate, Aligarh. In 1952 the Union of India (Ministry of Commerce and Industry) passed an order purporting to be made under S. 3 (4) of Essential Supplies (Temporary Powers) Act, 1946, by which the Central Government appointed the same person, as an authorised controller under the provisions of that section and directed him to run the said undertaking to the exclusion of all the other partners.

Held, that the impugned orders did not come within the purview of and are not warranted by the provisions of the Acts under which they purport to have been passed. (Point conceded).

(2) that the order of the Central Government must be deemed to have deprived the petitioner of his property within the meaning of Art. 31 of the Constitution;

(3) assuming that the deprivation took place earlier and at a time when the Constitution had not come into force, the order effecting the deprivation which continued from day to day must be held to have come into conflict with the fundamental rights of the petitioner as soon as the Constitution came into force and became void on and from that date under Article 13 (1) of the Constitution; and ——Arts. 13 and 19 (1) (f)—If retrospective — Muhammadan Law — Pre-emption — Right of— When comes into existence.

In a case governed by the Muhammadan Law, if the pre-emptor falls into one of the three categories i e., if he is a co-sharer in the property sold (shafi-i-shark) or a participator in immunities and appendages, such as a right of way or a right to discharge water (shafi-i-khalit) or if he is an owner of adjoining immovable property (shafi-i-jar), then his right to pre-empt comes into force upon a sale of property with respect to which he stands in the relationship indicated in one or other of the three categories enumerated above, but in order to enforce his rights, the pre-emptor has to make demands for pre-emption in accordance with the rules of Muhammadan Law. Once he has done that, he can file a suit for pre-emption.

So far as the vendee is concerned, there is a right in him to defeat the pre-emptor's suit, if the pre-emptor's status changes or the vendee acquires a status which destroys the pre-emptor's right. The pre-existing rights of both the plaintiff and the vendee cannot be touched by the coming into force of the Constitution, which is not retrospective in operation in a case where the rights have come into existence prior to the coming into force of the Constitution and have even been put into suit before that date. The Constitution is not retroactive but is only prospective in operation and consequently the rights which were extinguished prior to the inauguration of the Constitution cannot be revived by the Constitution. It is only fundamental rights that were in existence at the commencement of the Constitution that are saved and protected by Chapter 3 of the Constitution and not those which were lost long before. AIR 1951 S C 128; AIR 1952 S C 235, Rel. on.

By acquiescence an ultra vires statute cannot be validated but the acquiescing party may be estopped from questioning it. A I R 1939 Nag 44, Rel. on.

Declaration of right is not a form of relief which is appropriate to proceedings under Art. 226 of the Constitution. It is only for the enforcement of any right that these extraordinary powers of the High Court could be invoked. In the instant case, the only relief which the petitioner sought is a declaration that all the enactments bearing on the administration of religious endowments mentioned in the petition should be declared void and inoperative.

The office which the Mahants were holding in relation to the temple cannot be aptly described as dharmakarthaship. ● ——Arts. 13, 14, 19—Retrospective effect.

The Constitution is prospective and cannot be construed so as to retrospectively free a sale from the incident to which it was subject on the date it was effected. In a case where the sale took place prior to the Constitution, the rights and liabilities of the parties have to be determined by reference to the law existing on the date of the sale and no question of infringement of any fundamental right arises. Chapter 14, Berar Land Revenue Code (1928), cannot be said to be rendered void because of Art. 13 (1) of the Constitution, so far as the sales prior to the Constitution are concerned. The sale which took place prior to the Constitution was subject to the right of pre-emption. ——Arts. 13 and 19 (1) (a) — Retrospective effect — (Government Servants' Conduct Rules, R. 20 (1)—(Civil Services (Classification, Control and Appeal) Rules, R. 49).

The rights created by the Constitution are prospective and not retrospective. If some violation of some law had taken place before the Constitution, and which would not be a valid law after the commencement of the Constitution, the person guilty of such violation can be proceeded against even after the Constitution. The only qualification of that principle, is that the procedure employed must not itself be repugnant to the Constitution. If a violation of R. 20 (1), Government Servants' Conduct Rules did take place on some pre-Constitution date a liability did arise at that time and such liability has not in any way been affected by reason of the Constitution bringing into existence fundamental rights under Art. 19 (1) (a) with which the provisions of Rule 20 (1) are inconsistent. Where the party is being proceeded against under the Civil Services (Classification, Control and Appeal) Rules, the procedural law is not one which offends against the Constitution. It does not seem to be of any consequence that the punishment for a violation of R. 20 (1) of the Government Servants' Conduct Rules is provided for in R. 49 of the Civil Services (Classification, Control and Appeal) Rules. ('56) 60 Cal W N 24.

Assuming that the Defence of India Rules as applied to Mysore, and the Mysore Food (Restriction of Service of Meals by Catering Establishments and Others) Order, 1949, framed under those rules, are and have to be declared void under Art. 13 (1) of the Constitution of India, it does not follow that Art. 13 (1) has retrospective effect so as to affect liability for offences already committed and prosecutions launched before the coming into force of the Constitution.

Where an offence punishable under R. 81(4) of the Defence of India Rules, as applied to Mysore was committed by reason of a contravention of cl. 3 of the Mysore Food Order, 1949, before the Constitution came into force and a prosecution therefore was also launched before the date on which the Constition came into force, the result of the prosecution cannot be affected by such a declaration of rights under the Constitution, even if the provision of law under which the prosecution and conviction are had is void under Art. 13 (1).

Trial commenced under Special Tribunals Regulation (5 of 1358 F) before coming into force of the Constitution—Proceedings before commencement of Constitution cannot be challenged on ground of discrimination—Validity of subsequent proceeding depends on question as to whether accused has been deprived of equal protection in matters of procedure and it is incumbent upon Court to consider, firstly, whether the discriminatory or unequal provisions of law could be separated from the rest and even without them a fair measure of equality in the matter of procedure could be secured to the accused. In the second place, it has got to consider whether the procedure actually followed did or did not proceed upon the basis of the discriminatory provision—A mere threat or possibility of unequal treatment is not sufficient.

● ——Art. 13 (1)—Interpretation — Proceedings instituted under S. 18 (1) of the Indian Press (Emergency Powers) Act, 1931, before the commencement of the Constitution of India — If can be proceeded with after the Constitution came into force.

In respect of a pamphlet published by a person in 1949 proceedings were started against him for an offence punishable under S. 18(1) of the Indian Press (Emergency Powers) Act and during the pendency of such proceedings the Constitution of India came into force. It was contended on behalf of the publisher that the relevant provisions of the Press (Emergency Powers) Act were inconsistent with the fundamental rights conferred by Art. 19 (1) (a) of the Constitution and as such became void under Art. 13(1) of the Constitution after 26th January, 1950 and the proceedings against him could not be proceeded with.

Held, (Fazl Ali and Mukherjea, JJ., Contra.) — Article 13(1) has no retrospective effect but is wholly prospective in its operation. Further, it does not in terms make the existing laws which are inconsistent with the fundamental rights void ab initio or for all purposes. It has only the effect of nullifying or rendering all inconsistent existing laws ineffectual or nugatory and devoid of any legal force or binding effect only with respect to the exercise of fundamental rights on and after the date of the Commencement of the Constitution. As it has no retrospective effect, if an act was done before the commencement of the Constitution in contravention of the provisions of any law which, after the Constitution becomes void with respect to the exercise of any of the fundamental rights, the inconsistent law is not wiped out so far as the past act is concerned, for, to say that it is, will be to give the law retrospective effect. There is no fundamental right that a person shall not be prosecuted and punished for an offence committed before the Constitution came into force. So far as the past acts are concerned the law exists notwithstanding that it does not exist with respect to the future exercise of fundamental rights. Accordingly the proceedings commenced, under the Press (Emergency Powers) Act before the commencement of the Constitution are not affected by the Constitution coming into force and can be proceeded with.

Per Fazl Ali J.—There can be no doubt that Art. 13(1) will have no retrospective operation and transactions which are past and closed and rights which have already vested will remain untouched. But with regard to inchoate matters which are still not determined when the Constitution came into force and as regards proceedings whether not yet begun or pending at the time of the enforcement of the Constitution and not prosecuted to a final judgment, a law which has been declared by the Constitution to be completely ineffectual can no longer be applied. If the law which made the act an offence has become completely ineffectual and nugatory then neither can a charge be framed nor can the accused person be convicted. Accordingly if the assumption that the relevant provisions of the Press (Emergency Powers) Act are inconsistent with the fundamental rights is correct, the publisher is entitled to a declaration that he cannot be convicted for the offence of which he is accused. The words 'void to the extent of inconsistency' in Art. 13 necessarily mean that the legislation inconsistent with the provisions of Part 3 cannot be regarded as non-existent. It is a valid piece of legislation so far as it affects the rights of non-citizens and so far as it affects the pre-Constitution rights and liabilities. On the same principle the law enacted subsequent to the coming into force of the Constitution is void to the extent of the contravention. The shadow which is cast on the legislation on account of Art. 13 of the Constitution when the Act is passed, so far as the rights of the citizens are concerned, is removed as soon as the Constitution (Fourth Amendment) Act, 1955 came into force. AIR 1955 S C 781, Foll.

Hence the U. P. Road Transport Services (Development) Act, 1955, can be justified on the ground that in view of Art 31 as amended in 1955 the deprivation of the owners of motor vehicles of their rights to ply their buses in view of the notification issued under S. 3 of the U. P. Road Transport Services (Development) Act, 1955, cannot be regarded an acquisition within the meaning of the said article. AIR 1957 All 320 (326, 327) (Pt C) (Prs 16, 20) (DB).

——Arts. 13 (2), 105, 194, 226 and 361 — Power of Court to interfere with a bill before it becomes law.

Courts in India have no jurisdiction to interfere with the proceedings of legislature :

Article 13 (2) merely declares what the Legislature shall not do. If the Legislature does what it is directed by the Constitution not to do, its acts may be declared void. But the Article does not confer a right upon a citizen to move the Court for the issue of a writ or direction to the Legislature not to proceed with a Bill.

It is true that Art. 361 does not in so many words lay down that the Legislature is immune from interference by the Courts. But the fact that protection is afforded by Art. 361 only to the President, the Governor or the Rajpramukh of a State does not mean that the legislature is not otherwise protected.

The limitation on the power of a Court to issue a writ or direction to a Legislature in connection with the latter's proceedings arises from the provisions of Arts. 105 and 194 of the Constitution and from the inherent powers possessed by the Legislature to prevent any outside interference with the exercise of its functions. Legislative enactments which take away or abridge the rights conferred by Part 3 of the Constitution can only be declared void after they have been made and that is the only remedy in such cases for the enforcement of the rights conferred by Cl. 2 of Art. 13. 1951 All L J 246 : ILR (1951) 2 All 505 : AIR 1951 All 228 (230, 233, 234) (Pt A) (Prs 5, 28, 29, 32) (DB).

——Arts. 13 (2) and 245 — Retrospective legislation affecting fundamental right—Power of State Legislature to enact.

There is nothing in Art. 13 (2) of the Constitution to indicate that the State Legislature is not competent to legislate in regard to a fundamental right retrospectively and it cannot be contended that under this sub-Article any taking away or abridgement of fundamental rights must operate from the date of the enactment of a statute and it cannot operate retrospectively from a date subsequent to the coming into force of the Constitution. In fact, Article 31-A is in express terms retrospective in operation and if there was any substance in this argument, such retrospective operation of that Article would be rendered meaningless. 1963 Cur L J 22 : 65 Punj L R 105 : ILR (1963) 1 Punj 500 : AIR 1963 Punj 319 (326) (Pt E) (Pr 14) (DB).

● ——Art. 13 — Part of law void—Effect—Doctrine of severability.

The question whether a statute which is void in part is to be treated as void in toto, or whether it is capible of enforcement as to that part which is valid is one which can arise only with reference to laws enacted by bodies which do not possess unlimited powers of legislation, as, for example, the legislatures in a Federal Union. The limitation on their powers may be of two kinds. It may be with reference to the subject-matter on which they could legislate, as, for example, the topics enumerated in the Lists in the Seventh Schedule in the Indian Constitution, Ss. 91 and 92 of the Canadian Constitution, and S. 51 of the Australian Constitution, or it may be with reference to the character of the legislation which they could enact in respect of subjects assigned to them, as for example, in relation to the fundamental rights guaranteed in Part III of the Constitution and similar constitutionally protected rights in the American and other Constitutions. When a legislature whose authority is subject to limitations aforesaid enacts a law which is wholly in excess of its powers, it is entirely void and must be completely ignored. But where the legislation falls in part within the area allotted to it and in part outside it, it is undoubtedly void as to the latter; but does it on that account become necessarily void in its entirety? The answer to this question must depend on whether what is valid could be separated from what is invalid, and that is a question which has to be decided by the Court on a consideration of the provisions of the Act. A part of S. 115 of the U. P. District Boards Act is unconstitutional for the reason that it permits discrimination among persons placed in the same group or class. When the Legislature used the words 'person' or 'persons' in addition to the words 'class of persons' the former words have reference to 'individual person or persons', and not to group or class of persons. The provision for specifying the amount of tax leviable from a person under Cl. (c) of S. 115 (1) permits the Board to discriminate among persons placed in the same class or group by applying one rule to one person and a different one to another though placed in the same group or class. Such a discrimination clearly infringes the clause of equality before the law guaranteed by Art. 14 of the Constitution.

If the invalid portion of sub-s. (1) of S. 115 is removed, the sub.section in its remaining form is enforceable. Consequently, the constitutionality of the enactment, as a whole, remains unaffected. AIR 1960 All 382 (384, 385) (Pt B) (Prs 8, 11, 13).

The question whether the provision which is void can be separated from the rest of the provisions of the enactment, is a question depending not upon the interpretation of any provision of the Constitution but on the construction of the statute concerned.

In a suit filed by a scheduled Bank the debtor claiming the benefit of U. P. Zamindars' Debt Reduction Act contended that the definition of 'debt' in S. 2 (f), U P. Zamindars' Debt Reduction Act deprived him of the right of equality before the law and the equal protection of the laws guaranteed to him under Art 14 and that consequently it was void under Art. 13 (2) to the extent to which it discriminates but that it must have effect given to it with regard to the remaining portion of it that is to say that the part of the definition beginning with words 'but does not include' to the end must be rejected and the remainder of the definition must be read without them.

Held, that there was no question relating to the interpretation of the Constitution involved but merely a question of law as to the interpretation of the U. P. Zamindars' Debt Reduction Act. AIR 1956 All 635 (636, 637) (Prs 10, 11, 12) (DB).

——Art. 13—Part of law void — Effect — (Criminal Procedure Code (1898), S. 144) — Provisions of, if severable.

If there are two distinct provisions or provisions which can be severed from each other and one of them is void and the other valid, the mere fact that they are combined together in the section in one sentence would not affect the validity of the valid provision. Art. 13 requires that if a void provision can be separated from valid provisions, it must be separated and the remaining provisions will remain in force.

Section 144, Criminal Procedure Code contains several independent provisions; they are severable from one another; only the connecting words "or" and "and" have to be removed. 1956 Cri L J 1026: 1956 All L J 671: AIR 1956 All 481 (485, 486) (Pt F) (Prs 9, 9a) (DB).

——Arts. 13, 245 — Constitutionality of statute — Doctrine of severability — Part of law void—Effect.

It any provision of an Act is unconstitutional it can be ignored as if it did not exist, without affecting the enforcement of the others. If good and bad provisions are joined together by using the word 'and' or 'or' and the enforcement of the good provision is not made dependent on the enforcement of the bad one i. e., the good provision can be enforced even if the bad one cannot be, or had not existed, the two provisions are severable and the good one will be upheld as valid and given effect to. On the other hand, if there is one provision (as distinct from several joined together) and it hits valid objects as well as invalid ones which cannot be separated without altering the language, (which is beyond the jurisdiction of Courts) and is capable of being used for a legal purpose as well as for an illegal one, it is invalid and cannot be allowed to be used even for the legal purpose. ——Art. 13 — Invalidity of part of law — Effect — (Press (Emergency Powers) Act (1931), Ss. 15, 18).

Article 13 (1) does contemplate the judging of the constitutionality of an enactment in parts. An existing law does not become wholly void under it because it is inconsistent with the provisions of Part III of the Constitution. If there is inconsistency, the law is void only to the extent of such inconsistency; the other law remains intact. A I R 1951 Mad 70 (SB) and AIR 1951 Pat 12 (SB), Ref.

It may not be necessary or even possible in every case to consider all the provisions of an enactment together. If an enactment relates to only one matter that can be done, but if it relates to several distinct matters, then some provisions cannot be considered along with others. In such a case, it is not possible to take the Act as a whole and to find whether the whole of it is constitutional or not. It is possible that some parts of it are constitutional, but others are not.

Held, that the constitutionality of Ss. 15 and 18 of the Press (Emergency Powers) Act, 1931, did not depend on the constitutionality of the other provisions as the section formed a separate part of the Act. 1954 All W R (HC) 334 : 1954 Cri L J 1212 : A I R 1954 All 562 (566) (Pt C) (Pr 7a) (DB).

Section 19-A of the Act of 1952 makes the order of the Government final. There is no provision for any appeal or representation by the party aggrieved by the order. The Government is not required to disclose its reasons for making any order. Unless it can be established that the Government has acted outside the four corners of the statute or in excess of its jurisdiction, recourse to the Civil Court by the aggrieved party is barred. Section 19-A thus lacks the element of reasonableness and violates the fundamental right guaranteed by Art. 19 (1) (g) of the Constitution and as such is void under Art. 13 (2). As the section is severable from the rest of the Act, the entire Act is not rendered void by reason of its invalidity. ——Arts. 13, 14—Validity of S. 197, Criminal P. C.—(Criminal P. C (1898), S. 197) — Interpretation of Statutes—Severability—Civil P. C. (1908), Preamble.

It is, no doubt, a well-known principle of construction that when a law happens to be unconstitutional in part, the whole of the law does not necessarily fail. But when the valid part of a law is so clearly dependent and so inseparably connected with the invalid part that they cannot be separated without defeating the object of the statute, that part must also fall with the part which is invalid. The power to make laws vests in the Legislature alone and it is not within the province of the Court to so use its power to construe a law as to alter the law made by the Legislature to a substantial extent. Thus, where the excision of a provision of an existing law would have the result of leaving on the statute book a law never intended by the Legislature to be enacted, then the whole of that law will be deemed to have been rendered void.

The words "who is not removable", etc., which were inserted by the Legislature in S. 197 of the Criminal P. C, are words of limitation and are inseparable from the words "public servant" and to excise them would have the result of widening its scope and would quite clearly bring into existence a law which was never within the contemplation of the Legislature. If the contention that the words "who is not removable from his office save by or with the sanction of a State Government or the Central Government" being inconsistent with Art. 14 can be excised under Art. 13 (1), is accepted what would be left out of the law would be something which was never intended by the Legislature to enact. It being beyond the power of the Court to bring into existence a law which is not of the making of the Legislature the result that would ensue would be to render the whole of S. 197 of the Criminal P. C., void. If it is rendered void wholly then the accused does not stand to gain at all because there will then be no necessity for sanction for the prosecution of any class of Government servants whatsoever. 1954 Cri L J 1367 : 1954 Nag L J 534 : 1954 All W R (Supp) 80 : ILR (1954) Nag 661 : A I R 1954 Nag 265 (266) (Pt C) (Prs 8, 9) (DB).

——Arts. 13 and 20 — Part of law alleged to be void —Whether whole becomes void — Test of severability—(Punjab District Boards (Tax Validating) Act (27 of 1955), S. 2—Validity).

Article 13 of the Constitution which deals with the effect of laws which take away or abridge the fundamental rights, merely declares the law to be void to the extent of its contravention or inconsistency with the fundamental rights. Where a statute is alleged only in part to offend a fundamental right, the whole of the Act is not necessarily affected. The test in such cases is whether or not the valid portion is severable from the rest.

Section 2 of the Punjab District Boards (Tax Validating) Act purports to validate three notifications mentioned in the schedule. The first notification and the other two notifications are not so inextricably bound up that if the other two notifications are declared to continue to be invalid and not to have been validated retrospectively the first one cannot independently survive. The impugned Act minus the other two notifications can remain unaffected and the omission of the other two notifications would not change the nature or structure or the object of the legislation : A I R 1950 S C 27 and 1947 A C 503 and A I R 1951 S C 318 ; A I R 1952 S C 252, Rel. on. 61 Punj L R 245 : A I R 1959 Punj 318 (319) (Pt A) (Pr 4).

On 11th May, 1934, the Court of Wards U. P. assumed superintendence of the estate of the petitioner who was a Rani by virtue of a declaration made under S. 8 (1) (b), U. P. Court of Wards Act. The Court of Wards continued in possession of the estate without any objection when the Constitution came into force. In 1952, S. 8 (1) (b) of the Act was declared void under Art. 13 (1) as being in derogation of Arts. 14, 15 and 19 (1) (f) of the Constitution, by the High Court decision in AIR 1952 All 746. When this decision came to be known the U. P. Government issued orders that all estates held by the Court of Wards under S. 8 (1) (b) of the Court of Wards Act should be released unless their proprietors applied under S. 10 of the Court of Wards Act and some estates were released in pursuance of this order. The Rani's estate was, however, not released in spite of her application. The Rani thereupon moved the High Court under Art. 226 for the issue of appropriate writs and orders.

Held, that (i) assuming that Arts. 14, 15 or 19 (1) (f) have been infringed the declaration or order of the Government under which the Court of Wards assumed superintendence of the petitioner's estate must be declared void as from the date of the enforcement of the Constitution though whatsoever was done by the Court of Wards or whatever liabilities were imposed by the Court of Wards before that date could not be set aside.

(ii) There was no acquiescence of the petitioner in the continued possession of the Court of Wards. Nor was there any undue delay in filing the petition so as to disentitle her to the relief prayed.

(iii) The Constitution of India has admittedly no retrospective operation. Indeed in so far as fundamental rights are concerned they were created, and not merely recognised by the Constitution. Consequently, citizens had no fundamental rights in the sense in which they are now understood. If these fundamental rights came into existence, as such, on the enforcement of the Constitution, nothing done before the 26th January, 1950, can be said to have infringed any fundamental rights.

(iv) The effect of an amendment declaring a law void is to repeal that law as from the date on which the declaration is made. It does not render the law void from the date of its inception as happens when the law is ultra vires of the authority which enacted it. AIR 1951 S C 128 and AIR 1951 S C 217, Rel. on.

(v) The contention that the disability incurred by the petitioner by reason of the declaration duly made under S. 8 (1) (b), U. P. Court of Wards Act would not be affected by declaring that provision void at a much later period of time, ignores a distinction between two classes of cases : (a) Cases in which the action has been completed and has become final or there is a 'closed transaction' and in which the liability or obligation or penalty is imposed or incurred once for all as a result of that action; and (b) Cases in which the penalty or liability or disability is a continuing one and though it started before the Constitution came into operation it continues even afterwards. In the former case the right to prosecute any legal proceedings for enforcement of the penalty or for obtaining the remedy continues even after the repeal of the enactment as if the repealing enactment had not been passed. In the latter case, although no completed action can be abrogated by reason of the repeal (or declaration that Act is void) the disability imposed by the repealed Act (or the Act declared void) cannot continue after its repeal because this would be giving to the Statute declared void prospective operation even after it has actually become void. There being conflict of views between the decisions in AIR 1955 S C 781 and AIR 1958 S C 468 on the one hand and the majority view taken in AIR 1959 S C 648 on the other, as regards the effect of the Court's decision declaring a statutory provision unconstitutional, the later view, namely, that taken by the majority in AIR 1959 S C 648 should be regarded as the law declared by the Supreme Court and such a provision must be held to be non est and not merely unenforceable.

Applying this principle, the proviso S. 3 (1) of the Mysore Sales Tax Act, 1948, dealing with the liability of the hotel keepers to pay sales tax, would be held to be non-existent and not merely unenforceable, after the decision by the Mysore High Court declaring the proviso to be unconstitutional and the hotel keepers would be liable to pay tax under S. 3 (1) at the general rate specified in clause (b) thereof. 38 Mys L J 720 : ILR (1960) Mys 267 : AIR 1961 Mys 3 (7) (Pt C) (Prs 11, 12) (DB).

The validation of an Act, which may have been declared by Courts as void, or, which, it is apprehended, may be so declared, by an enactment validating the same by reference and not bodily embodying the provisions of the Act to be validated, is perfectly permissible in law and there is nothing in our Constitution that inhibits such a course, unlike the Constitutions of some States elsewhere. The contention therefore, that if the Acts which are constitutionally void are sought to be validated by the Legislature, they can only do so by re-enacting the provisions of those Acts at length and not by mere reference to their title is not correct. ILR (1965) 15 Raj 285 : 1965 Raj L W 118.

The impugned Act was an existing law at the time when the Constitution came into force. That existing law imposed on the exercise of the right guaranteed to the citizens of India by Art. 19 (1) g) restrictions which could not be justified as reasonable under Cl. (6) as it then stood and consequently under Art. 13 (1) that existing law became void "to the extent of such inconsistency", that is to say, to the extent it became inconsistent with the provisions of Part 3 which conferred the fundamental rights on the citizens. The law continued in force, even after the commencement of the Constitution, with respect to persons who were not citizens and could not claim the fundamental right. Nevertheless, after 18th June, 1951, when Cl. (6) was amended by the Constitution (First Amendment) Act, 1951, the impugned Act ceased to be inconsistent with the fundamental right guaranteed by Art. 19 (1) (g) read with the amended Cl. (6) of that Article, because that clause, as it now stands, permits the creation by law of State monopoly in respect, inter alia, of motor transport business and it became operative again even as against the citizens.

Further, the impugned Act became inconsistent with Art. 31 as soon as the Constitution came into force on 26th January, 1950, and continued to be so inconsistent right up to 27th April, 1955, and therefore, under Art. 13 (1) became void "to the extent of such inconsistency". Nevertheless, that inconsistency was removed on and from 27th April, 1955, by the Constitution, (Fourth Amendment) Act, 1955. The constitutionality of the impugned Act cannot, therefore, be challenged on or after 27th April, 1955. Bhikaji Narain v. ● ——Arts. 13 (1), 245 and 246—Void in Art. 13 (1), meaning of — Effect of declaration of voidness of statute—Declaration of unconstitutionality brought about by lack of legislative power, effect of.

The word 'void' in Art. 13 (1) so far as existing laws were concerned, cannot be held to obliterate them from the statute book, and could not make such laws void altogether, because Art. 13, has not been given any retrospective effect. After the coming into force of the Constitution however the effect of Art. 13 (1) on such repugnant laws is that it nullifies them and makes them ineffectual and nugatory and devoid of any legal force or binding effect. The result therefore is that part of the section of an existing law which is unconstitutional is not law and is null and void. For determining the rights and obligations of citizens, though it may remain written on the statute book and be a good law when a question arises for determination of rights and obligations incurred prior to 26th January, 1950, and also for the determination of rights and obligations of citizens the part declared void should be notionally taken to be obliterated from the section for all intents and purposes, though it may remain written on the statute book and be good law when a question arises for determination of rights and obligations incurred prior to 26th January 1950 and also for the determination of rights of person who have not been given fundamental rights by the Constitution. Thus, in this situation, there is no scope for introducing terms like 'relatively void' coined by American Judges in construing a Constitution which is not drawn up in similar language and the implications of which are not quite familiar in this country. A I R 1951 S C 128, Ref.

A declaration of unconstitutionality brought about by lack of legislative powers does not stand on a different footing from a declaration of unconstitutionality brought about by reason of abridgement of fundamental rights. Both these declarations of unconstitutionality go to the root of the power itself and there is no real distinction between them. They represent but two aspects of want of legislative power. The legislative power of Parliament and the State Legislatures as conferred by Arts. 245 and 246 of the Constitution stands curtailed by the fundamental rights chapter of the Constitution. A mere reference to the provisions of Art. 13 (2) and Arts. 245 and 246 is sufficient to indicate that there is no competency in Parliament or a State Legislature to make a law which comes into clash with Part 3 of the Constitution after the coming into force of the Constitution. The authority conferred by Arts. 245 and 246 to make laws subjectwise in the different legislatures is qualified by the declaration made in Art. 13 (2). That power can only be exercised subject to the prohibition contained in Art. 13 (2). Behram Khurshed v. Any Act that existed before the Constitution, which may have been void to the extent to which it was inconsistent with the provisions of the Constitution, would become a good law as soon as the shadow which was cast and on account of which it was void, was removed. Even in respect of an Act passed after the Constitution came into force, the same view has been taken and such an Act also is not absolutely void for all times. ● ——Art. 13 (1)—"Void" — Meaning of—Effect on pending proceedings—Applicability of S. 6, General Clauses Act.

Action taken under a valid Act which is subsequently declared void cannot be wiped out. The consequences ensued remain unaffected. The policy of the Legislature is that a subsequent repeal or rescission of an Act would not have retrospective effect so as to undo completely the consequences ensued or ensuing. Not only the previous operation of the Act is saved but the continuation of the pending proceedings are allowed even afterwards under S. 6 of the General Clauses Act.

"Void" is used when total lack of existence is intended to be conveyed. Acts which are void and Acts repealed are not the same; they are entirely different.

Section 6 of the General Clauses Act is not applicable to revive for any purpose whatsoever, Acts declared void by the Constitution. Abdul Khadir v. State of Mysore, I L R (1951) Mys 284 : 52 Cri L J 992 : AIR (1951) Mys 72 (86) (Pt K) (Pr 41) (FB).

On the basis of Ss. 25, 26 and 27, Evidence Act, the position which emerges in connection with statements distinctly leading to the discovery of facts, is that if such a statement is made by an accused person in the custody of the police and amounts to a confession it escapes both the bars provided by Ss. 25 and 26 and can be proved in evidence against the person making it. If, however, that very statement is made by the same person while not in such custody the help of S. 27 is not available, and the bar of S. 25 remains. If the statement does not amount to a confession the prohibitions in Ss. 25 and 26 do not apply to it and it can be proved as an admission without recourse to S. 27. No reasonable basis can be assigned to the distinction created between the two classes contemplated by S. 27 and the distinction has no nexus at all with the object with which the section was enacted.

Whether a person is in police custody or not is essentially a question of fact. The distinction between a person in custody and a person out of custody will remain and cannot be altogether obliterated. AIR 1933 Pat 149 (SB)., Dissented from.

Reading Arts. 14 and 13 of the Constitution together it cannot be said that a discriminatory legislation can be hit by Art. 14 and become void under Art. 13 only if the discrimination is deliberately introduced. The conclusion appears to be inevitable that S. 27, as it stands at present, creates a classification which is not based on any reasonable differentia. It is therefore hit by Art. 14 of the Constitution. If S. 27 is invalid the saving clause added to S. 162 (2), Criminal Procedure Code, will have to be struck down along with it.

Held, therefore, (Per Mukerji and Srivastava JJ., Desai J., contra) that inasmuch as S. 27 of the Evidence Act creates an unjustifiable discrimination between 'persons in custody' and 'persons out of custody' and in that way offends Art. 14 of the Constitution and sub-s. ——Arts. 13 and 19 (1) (d) (e)—Influx from Pakistan Control) Act (1949)—Validity.

(Per R. Dayal J.)—The provision requiring a person entering the territory of India from Pakistan to have a proper permit with him is a reasonable restriction on the exercise of rights under Art. 19. But the conditions that after entering the territory of India he has to move in a certain manner and should leave the country after the period mentioned in the permit cannot be said to be a reasonable restriction on the exercise of the aforesaid rights of the citizen. A law allowing the removal from territory of India of any citizen would be in contravention of Article 19 sub-section (1) clauses (d) and (e) of the Constitution and will therefore be void in view of Article 13 sub-section (1) of the Constitution. Such provisions of Influx from Pakistan (Control) Act (23 of 1949) and the rules framed thereunder as lead to the infringement of these rights would be void in view of Art. 13 of the Constitution in their application to the citizens of India. In fact, a person domiciled in India, as every citizen of India must be, is not to be given a conditional permit under these rules and that therefore none of those rules or the provisions of the Influx from Pakistan (Control) Act, 23 of 1949 is void.

Rule 19 of the Permit System Rules, 1949, and S. 7 of the Act and the order of the Central Government issued thereunder, in so far as they are applicable to the citizens of India and are inconsistent with the fundamental rights guaranteed to them under Art. 19 (1) (d) and (e) of the Constitution have, after the commencement of the Constitution become void in view of the provisions contained in Art. 13 (1) of the Constitution. ——Arts. 13, 14 — Validity of S. 133, C. P. Code and Notification thereunder.

Section 133 provides for exemption of individuals and not of classes and that in itself suggests want of any reasonable basis for classification. Provision in S. 133 is not a law relating to a particular individual who forms a class by itself. It is a law which gives the State Government power to exempt any person from appearance before a Court of law, and in order that that power may be upheld, it is necessary to see whether that power is based on any classification which alone is the rational justification for discrimination of this kind.

In the words 'whose rank in the opinion of such Government, entitles him to the privilege of exemption' it is the subjective opinion of the Government, which controls the grant of exemption. The basis that the rank of the person concerned should be such as to entitle him to the privilege of exemption is a very vague, uncertain and elusive basis to form the basis of a sound classification which can be rationally justified. The section can only be held to give unregulated power to the State Government to exempt any person from appearance in Court. There is thus no basis for a classification in the section by the use of the word 'rank'. Section 133, as it stands is invalid by virtue of Art. 13 of the Constitution, as it infringes the provision of equality before law enshrined in Art. 14 of the Constitution. As S. 133 itself is invalid the notification of the 20th March, 1934 which was based on that section falls. A person is proceeded against under S. 108, Criminal Procedure Code for disseminating any seditious matter. Demanding security from a person who disseminates, or attempts to disseminate or abets the dissemination of any seditious matter is imposing reasonable restrictions, on the right conferred by Art. 19 (1) (a) in the interests of the security of the State and public order. Section 108 as it stands does not, therefore, contravene Art. 19 (1) (a).

The mere reference to S. 124-A, Penal Code would not render S. 108 (a) unconstitutional, even if S. 124A were unconstitutional. The custom of pre-emption is not void under Art. 13 as regards pre-emption by a shafi-i-sharik. Custom of pre-emption is void under Art. 13 as regards pre-emption by a shafi-i-jar. Whether custom of pre-emption as regards a shafi-i-khalit is void or not will depend upon the nature of the claim. The custom of pre-emption is void under Art. 13 so far as it gives a right of pre-emption to a shafi-i-khaljit who is merely the owner of an easementary right in the property sought to be pre-empted. Now it does not appear that sale of adjoining property endangers the easementary right. Mere sale of adjoining property does not extinguish easementary rights. Therefore, an owner of an easementary right cannot object to the sale of adjoining property to a stranger. The right of pre-emption on the sole ground that the claimant is the owner of an easementary right cannot be recognised as a reasonable restriction in the interest of general public under Art. 19 (5). (5) of Art. 19. The right of pre-emption in effect restricts the power of acquiring, holding and disposing of the property in derogation of the fundamental right guaranteed by the Constitution under Art. 19 (1) (f). The law of pre-emption existing at the time of commencement of the Constitution placing restrictions is hit by the provision of Art. 13 and is void from the date of the Constitution in so far as it is repugnant to the fundamental right guaranteed by Art. 19 of the Consitution. ● ——Arts. 13, 19, 366 (1), 372 — Customary law of pre-emption in Hyderabad—Validity.

The customary law of pre-emption as enforced by the Courts in Hyderabad State prior to the Constitution violates the fundamental right under Art. 19 (1) (f) of the Constitution and, therefore, has become void and unenforceable under Art. 13 (1) after the coming into force of the Constitution of India. A I R 1951 All 247 and A I R 1953 Punj 30, Distinguished.

The right of pre-emption is a right to acquire by compulsory purchase in certain cases the immovable property of another in preference to other persons, and as such it is a clog on the right to dispose property. This clog on the fundamental right of disposing property as given by Art. 19 (1) (f) is void after the inauguration of the Constitution unless it be covered by Cl. (5) of Art. 19. The right of pre-emption as claimed by a Hindu in Hyderabad State can only exist on the basis of custom and such a law is not covered by the definition of 'existing law' in Art. 366 (10). Therefore, the right is not saved by Cl. (5) of Art. 19.

The expression 'custom or usage having the force of law' is included in the term 'law in force' in Art. 13 (1) and it naturally follows that the customary law of pre-emption in Hyderabad can no longer stand, the law being in violation of Art. 19 (1) (f) of the Constitution. The law may have been advantageous and beneficial to village communities in that it ensured homogeneity, and prevented the coming in of an unwanted neighbour but decidedly the law is not suitable to conditions of life in a city. Further it would be difficult to reconcile such a law with the modern views regarding the desirability of a free disposition of immovable property. Therefore, it cannot be said that the restriction imposed on the acquiring and possession of property is a reasonable restriction in the interests of the general public so as to be saved by Art. 19 (5) of the Constitution. A rule of procedure laid down by law comes as much within the purview of Art. 14 as any rule of substantive law and it is necessary that all litigants, who are similarly situated, are able to avail themselves of the same procedural rights for relief and for defence with like protection and without discrimination. Bihar Land Encroachment Act makes an arbitrary discrimination by imposing restrictions on the rights of persons who have acquired title, absolute or possessory, over lands described as public lands in this statute.

The law of the land is that at the determination of the period limited to any person for instituting a suit for possession of any property, his right to such property shall be extinguished. This law is operative against the State as well as individuals, though the period for actions against the State may be different from the period for actions as against individuals. Absolutely arbitrary distinction has been made by this statute inasmuch as this law is being ignored with regard to lands the nature of which is indicated in Cl. (d) of S. 2 (ii).

The operation of Art. 14 will not be excluded if it is proved that the legislature had no intention to discriminate, though discrimination was the necessary consequence of the Act. So far as this statute is concerned discrimination is not only the necessary consequence of the Act, but the legislature acted with the intention to discriminate. In view of the clear provisions contained in Arts. 13 and 14, the statute is bad, because it is in contravention of these two Articles, both in their letter and their spirit. Case-law foll. The words 'of their choice' in Art. 30 (1) if read with Art. 29 (1) would mean that a minority has a right not only to conserve its own language and culture but also has a right to establish educational institutions of its choice and to administer them in such manner the members thereof choose, without the State having a right to impose upon them any particular mode or method of administering them. The real effect and even the purpose of S. 4 (27) and S. 38-A of the Gujarat University Act and the Statutes 207, 208 and 209 framed under the purported authority thereunder though passed under the guise of promoting Gujarati language are that at least one minority, viz., the Anglo-Indians is prohibited by these enactments from establishing educational institutions of its choice. They are violative of the fundamental rights conferred on minorities by Arts. 29 (1) and 30 (1). They are also repugnant to the spirit of liberal toleration enshrined in Art. 350-A.

The effect is that the University has no power or authority to lay down or impose or enforce any particular language or languages as media of instruction on educational institutions or colleges established and/or administered by minorities, whether religious or linguistic. If the authorities of St. Xavier's College decide to instruct its scholars in a language of their choice, neither the State Legislature nor the University has power or competence to prohibit them from doing so by directing them to have Gujarati or Hindi or any other language or languages as media of instruction to the exclusion of the language or languages of their choice or otherwise. ——Arts. 13, 19, 31—Ss. 48 to 51, Kerala Forest Act, 1961 (4 of 1962)— Validity — Provisions contravene Arts. 19 (1) (f) and (g) and 31—Entire group of the sections has to be struck down as unconstitutional—Provisions are void so far as private forest and their owners in the Malabar area of Kerala State are concerned.

No recognition of claim was made by the Madras Wild Elephants Preservation Act, 1873, which continued to be in force in the Malabar area till that statute was repealed by S. 85 of the Kerala Forest Act, 1961. Even S. 50 of the Kerala Forest Act, 1961 clearly shows that the State itself was aware that they do not have any proprietary right in any wild elephant captured, or the tusks and teeth of any wild elephant killed, because it is by that section that a wild elephant captured, or the tusks and teeth of a wild elephant killed, shall be regarded as property of the Government. Therefore, that clearly shows that the Government had no rights prior to that stage. Admittedly there is no provision in the Kerala Forest Act for compensation payable by the State in respect of the elephants captured and the tusks and teeth of a wild elephant killed which are regarded as property of the State. Therefore, there has been a total deprivation of the rights of persons who carry on business in timber, and as part of that business have to catch elephants for taming and training them in dragging the timber. In consequence, it follows that the provisions of Arts. 19 (1) (f) and (g) and 31 of the Constitution have been very grossly violated and the provisions contained in Ss. 48 to 51 of the Kerala Forest Act, 1961, have to be declared void under Art. 13 (2) of the Constitution inasmuch as they affect the fundamental rights of such persons.

Though the persons may not kill or wound wild elephants intentionally, nevertheless, the killing or wounding can take place when they exercise their right to capture wild elephants from their forests. Even in such a case, the prohibition contained in S. 48 of the Kerala Act as well as the penal provision contained in S. 49 will come into play. Section 50 is expropriatory, because what in law, is the property of the land owner is straightway to be regarded as the property of the Government. The grant of permits for shooting or capturing wild elephants provided under S. 51 is absolutely illusory, because even if the shooting or capturing is done on the basis of those permits, the person concerned will be only exempt from the operation of S. 49 of the Act, i.e., prosecution, and the property in the elephants pass on to the State, with the result that the land owner does not get any benefit by obtaining a licence. Therefore, the entire group of Sections, namely Ss. 48 to 51 in Chap. 7 of the Kerala Forest Act, 1961 (Act 4 of 1962) has to be struck down as unconstitutional and void and as infringing the fundamental rights of the owners of the forests. These provisions are void and unconstitutional so far as private forests and their owners in the Malabar area of the Kerala State are concerned. Despite the saving provision in Cl. (3) of the amended S. 21, with its reference to the usage of the religious institution, that is, the Math in this case, even after the amendment, S. 21 constitutes an unreasonable restriction on the fundamental rights of the Mathadhipathi guaranteed by Arts. 25 and 26 of the Constitution; S. 21, therefore, falls within the mischief of Art. 13 of the Constitution. It is void and unenforceable against the Mathadhipathis of Maths. 69 Mad L W 337 : (1956) 1 Mad L J 532 : AIR 1956 Mad 491 (495, 496) (Pt D) (Pr 14) (DB).

While the old S. 31 (1) referred only to the surplus of the income, the amended S. 31 (1) refers to even surplus accumulated by careful management, and virtually the whole of that surplus is placed at the disposal of the Commissioner, no doubt for utilisation for religious, educational or charitable purposes, which purposes may not be connected with the Math itself. The amended section in effect entirely divests the Mathadhipathi of his power of disposal of the income and the accumulated surplus of the income. Thus the amended S. 31 constitutes an unreasonable restriction on the fundamental rights of the Mathadhipathi guaranteed by Arts. 19, 25 and 26 of the Constitution and is therefore void under Art. 13 and unenforceable against Maths and Mathadhipathis. 69 Mad L W 337 : (1956) 1 Mad L J 532 : AIR 1956 Mad 491 (497) (Pt F) (Prs 24, 26) (DB).

Though S. 92 of Madras Act (10 of 1950) does not in express terms provide for the refusal of the licence by the Panchayat Board the power of refusal was conferred upon the Panchayat by necessary intendment.

Section 93 is an enabling section If rules are framed under S. 93 (1) (c) the Panchayat Board would have to conform to those rules. In the absence of such rules, the Panchayat Board would have to conform to the standards with reference to public safety, convenience and health for which provision has been made in Ch. 5 of that Act. Failure on the part of the Government to exercise the enabling power conferred upon it by S. 93 of the Act does not affect either the existence of the jurisdiction conferred by S 92 of the Act on the panchayat or the exercise of that jurisdiction. Section 92 therefore satisfies the requirements of Art. 19 (6) of the Constitution and it does not therefore offend Arts. 19 (1) (g) and 13 of the Constitution. 68 Mad L W 903 : AIR 1956 Mad 289 (290, 292) (Prs 13, 22, 25, 26).

The Bombay Land Requisition Act (33 of 1948) was, when passed a good law. This Act is not covered by the provisions of Cl. (6) of Art. 31 but is covered by the saving clause, namely, Cl. (5) (a). The Act, therefore, would be valid even if the provisions of Cl. (2) of Art. 31 are not in terms fully satisfied, in so far as the Act did not, before its amendment by Bombay Act 39 of 1950, contain the expression "for a public purpose." Bombay Act 2 of 1950, only extended the life of the Act by two years and Bombay Act 39 of 1950 only made explicit what was not so in the Act as originally passed, and are not such laws as come within the purview of Cl. (3) of Art. 31. The Act which was good law before the commencement of the Constitution did not become void under Art. 13 of the Constitution, because there was nothing in the Act which was inconsistent with the provisions of Part 3 of the Constitution. It follows that the amendments made in 1950, were equally good law, even though the assent of the President had not been obtained. AIR 1955 S C 41, Foll. Lila Vati Bai v. ——Arts. 13 and 14 — Bombay Port Trust Act (Bom. 6 of 1879), S. 87, Paragraph 2 and S. 61-B—Duty imposed on Board of Trustees of Port by S. 61-B—Breach committed by Board in respect of such duty—Paragraph 2 of S. 87 has no application to such a breach—S. 87, Paragraph 2 is concerned with acts or omissions known as torts—So viewed no question of constitutional validity of S. 87 arises.

The scope and the effect of the second paragraph of S. 87 of the Bombay Port Trust Act (1879), is to protect the Trustees from the vicarious liability which they might have otherwise incurred for the torts committed by their employees in the course of employment. The words 'misfeasance, malfeasance or non-feasance' appearing in the second paragraph of S. 87 embrace all possible acts or omissions commonly known as torts. If in the discharge of a number of functions and duties unconnected with the reception, storage and removal of goods brought within the port area an employee of the Board of Trustees incidentally commits a tort, paragraph 2 of S. 87 prevents the aggrieved party from suing the Board on the ground that the Board is vicariously liable for the damage caused. Paragraph 2 of S. 87 has, however, no application where a breach is committed of a duty imposed on the Board itself.

The responsibility for the loss, destruction or deterioration of goods, which has been referred to in S. 61-B of the Act, is the direct responsibility of the Board of Trustees itself and not that of any of its employees. Under S. 61-A (1), the duty of taking charge of the goods after they are landed is the duty of the Board of Trustees. In the normal course, the duties of taking charge of the goods after they are landed and of taking care of those goods are performed by the Board of Trustees' employees but the employees in so far as they are called upon to discharge these duties must be regarded as the agents, and not merely the servants of the Board. It must follow that if the Board of Trustees is sued for the loss, destruction or deterioration of the goods, the cause of action is the failure of the Board of Trustees to take the requisite degree of care by itself or through its agents, and not merely a tort committed by an employee for which the Board of Trustees is sought to be held vicariously liable. ——Arts. 13 and 14 — Territorial discrimination — Validity of Part 4 of Marwar Relief of Indebtedness Act—Conciliation Boards—Characteristics of—(Debt Laws — Marwar Relief of Indebtedness Act (1941), Part 4.)

Enforcement of Part 4 of the Marwar Relief of Indebtedness Act does create discrimination between that part of Rajasthan which was formerly Marwar State and the rest of Rajasthan and would therefore, be hit by Art. 14 unless it can be justified on the basis of reasonable classification, or on the ground that the legislation is a law for the good of the community at large in that part of Rajasthan, and should, therefore, be saved as a progressive and ameliorative law. There is no basis for coming to a conclusion that the part of Rajasthan to which the Act applies has something peculiar which requires the law as compared with the other parts of the State. But the Act could be saved as a piece of ameliorative measure if only it had created conciliation boards which are only conciliation tribunals.

The Debt Conciliation Board under the Marwar Act, though it began under S. 8 (1) (a) as a conciliation tribunal, has become something more than conciliation tribunals in that they have been given certain powers of coercive nature, and which result in a certain type of discrimination. The most important sections in Part 4 of the Act, namely S. 13 (2), S. 14 (1) and S. 20, all of them are discriminatory and there is no reason why such discriminations should exist in that part of the State to which the Act applies as against the other parts. Hence they should all be declared as void. As a consequence of those three provisions being void the entire Part 4 must also be struck down under Art. 14 as a discriminatory piece of legislation and hence void under Art 13. 1957 Raj L W 578 : I L R (1957) 7 Raj 906 : A I R 1958 Raj 26 (30, 31, 32) (Prs 17, 22, 23, 25, 26, 27, 29, 30) (DB).

The right of pre-emption, based on vicinage only, is an unreasonable restriction on the fundamental right to acquire and hold property and is void by virtue of Art. 13 of the Constitution. Therefore sub-clause (ii) of Clause (a) of the proviso to sub-s. ——Arts. 13, 14 — U. P. Government Servants' Conduct Rules, R. 25 — Validity — Barring Government Servant of his right of access to Court of law does not amount to discrimination — R. 25 restrains Government servants from having recourse to Courts of law only in vindication of official acts—Discretion conferred on Government in respect of grant of sanction to Government servant to approach Court of law not arbitrary—Discrimination between Police Officer and Government servants of other kind not unfair and unreasonable—R. 25 held not discriminatory, void or inoperative.

Rule 25 of the U. P. Government Servants Conduct Rules is not void and inoperative by virtue of Art. 13 on the ground that it violates Art. 14.

Government servants form a separate well-defined class, and there is a clear nexus between the basis of this classification and the object of R. 25. That rule restrains a Government servant from having recourse to Courts of law only in vindication of official acts; and there is nothing unreasonable or arbitrary in differentiating between Government servants and other persons on this basis. Nor it is correct to say that R. 25 denies 'equal protection of the laws.' The discretion has been vested not in a subordinate official but in the State Government itself. A I R 1957 S C 397, Rel. on.

Further, the discrimination between police officers on the one hand and all other kinds of Government servants on the other by reason of breaches of U. P. Government Servants Conduct Rules having been made punishable under S. 29 of the Police Act, has an obvious rational basis and cannot be considered unfair or unreasonable and there is no violation of Art. 14. Indeed this distinction has received recognition in the Constitution itself, by Art. 33. 1962 All L J 355: 1962 All W R (HC) 233: 1962 All Cr R 153 (2): (1962) 1 Lab L J 700 : 1962 (2) Cri L J 459 : A I R 1962 All 507 (508, 509) (Pt B) (Prs 4, 5, 6).

——Arts. 13, 19 (1) (a) and (2)—U. P. Special Powers Act (14 of 1932), S. 3 — Validiiy—If offends Art. 19 (1)(a) and saved by Art. 19(2).

The provision of S. 3, U. P. Special Powers Act, 1932, making it penal for a person by spoken words to instigate a class of persons not to pay dues recoverable as arrears of land revenue, was inconsistent with Art. 19 (1) (a) of the Constitution on 26th January, 1950. The restrictions imposed by S. 3 were not in the interests of public order.

The Act clearly and expressly infringes the freedom of speech by prohibiting the uttering of certain words. The Preamble only supplies the reason or intention behind the prohibition. When an Act is impugned on the ground that it runs foul of the guarantee of free speech, the Court is only concerned with the question whether it does so or not; it is not concerned with the reason why it does so, (unless the case is sought to be brought within the prescribed limitation). A Legislature cannot enact a law infringing the freedom of speech, whether the infringement is its primary object or is a subsidiary object or is an unintended effect.

The impugned provision in the Special Powers Act does not impose the restrictions in the interests of the security of the State. The security of the State depends upon factors other than its consolidated funds. Incitement to non-payment of irrigation dues is not such a serious and aggravated form of public disorder as is likely to endanger the security of the State.

The non-payment of Government dues and its incitement are not offences against public order and a prohibition of the incitement to the non-payment has nothing to do with the maintenance of public order.

The words 'in the interests of public order' mean 'for maintenance of public order'. The interests of public order lie only if it is maintained. A restriction can be imposed in the interests of public order, if in the event of its not being imposed disturbance of public order is apprehended. It is not necessary that the apprehension be immediate or present or that the disturbance of public order be substantial. All that is required is that the State must apprehend disturbance if no restriction is imposed.

In considering Art. 13, the Court is merely concerned with the provision that is impugned, and not with the question in what areas it was in force. If S. 3 was not enforced anywhere in January, 1950 it only shows that there was no necessity for it, i.e., that restricting the right to instigate the non-payment was not in the interests of public order then.

The question whether a restriction on the rights guaranteed by Art. 19 (1)(a) is reasonable or not cannot arise when the restriction is not found to be in the interests of public order, etc., or in relation to libel, etc. The restriction under consideration is a prohibition of instigating a class of persons not to pay certain dues realisable as arrears of land revenue. Though it is stated in the preamble of the Act that it was enacted to deal with illegal refusal to pay certain dues, the restriction is on instigation of non-payment of all sums recoverable as land revenue regardless of whether they are legally due or not.

Per M. L. Chaturvedi, J. (dissenting):—The object of the statute is to make instigations of every kind punishable, as the Government does not want interference in the recovery of its legal dues.

"An exhortation to the members of the public not to obey the laws in general or any particular law is likely to disturb the state of tranquillity prevailing among the members of the public, and the preaching of disobedience of a law or laws is meant to disturb that public tranquillity. That, to my mind, is the position keeping in view the meaning and significance of the expression public order as laid down in 'Romesh Thappar's case', AIR 1950 S C 124 and the provisions of the impugned section would be justified as having been enacted 'in the interest of' public order".

Applying even the narrower definition to the expression 'public order' namely, the maintenance of public peace and tranquillity, the making of an instigation in this respect penal is really in the interest of public order, and the legislation is justified under the amended provisions of Cl. (2) of Art. 19 of the Constitution.

The issue of reasonableness is certainly justiciable. But there is a presumption in favour of the validity of a legislation on this point and a restriction imposed by a legislation should be held by the Courts to be unreasonable only if, in spite of the presumption in favour of the legislation, the Court comes to the conclusion that the restriction contained in it is not a reasonable one.

Per Bench.—In order to decide whether a particular law restraining the freedom of speech of inciting disobedience to a law is in the interest of public order or not, two things are to be remembered; first, that incitement to a breach of every law does not necessarily lead to its breach and even if leads to its breach it does not necessarily result in public disorder and second that the connection between the impugned law and the threat to public peace and tranquillity must be clear and proximate and not far-fetched or problematic.

It is more than probable that barring extreme cases, the incitement to non-payment will not be obeyed, and even if it is obeyed, will not lead to violence, and that in any case the connection between the incitement and public order is too far-fetched and problematic rather than clear and proximate. Again, it can hardly be said that if one individual instigates another individual not to pay certain dues or to defer payment of a certain liability when there is no general campaign of non-payment and there is no incitement to a general disobedience of laws, there will be a threat to public order. Such instigation is also covered by the provisions of the impugned section, and therefore the section is unconstitutional because as it stands, it is not possible to make it applicable to those extreme cases alone in which there may be a threat to public peace and tranquillity. ILR (1955) 1 All 355 : 1955 Cri L J 623 : AIR 1955 All 193 (204, 205, 206, 208, 211, 213, 214, 215, 219, 221, 222, 223) (Pt A) (Prs 13, 15, 16, 17, 20, 21, 36, 38, 40, 47, 48, 50, 52, 53, 70, 82, 83, 88 (DB).

● ——Art. 13 — Part III and Art 385 — Legislative authority of Hyderabad State before and after enactment of Constitution — Powers and procedure— Validity of enactment—Test to determine.

There is a limitation imposed by Part 3 of the Constitution upon the legislative powers of the various legislative authorities in the territory of India. The powers of the Legislatures are defined in the Constitution and they cannot go beyond the limitation laid down in the same, unlike in England where Parliament is supreme. Though before the commencement of the Constitution of India, H. E. H. the Nizam had absolute powers of legislation and was the supreme legislative authority whose acts could not be questioned, after the commencement of the Constitution laws can be enacted only if they do not infringe Part 3 or other provisions of the Constitution. The only consideration in judging of the validity of law after the coming into force of the Constitution, is whether it is intra vires the Constitution or void. If an Act is void it is the duty of the High Court under the Constitution to declare it void ; but the High Court should not pass any opinion regarding the wisdom or policy of an Act if it does not infringe the Constitution. Where a question of principle is involved, it is scarcely fair to complicate it by introducing considerations of personalities. Under Art. 385 of the Constitution read with the Removal of Difficulties Order, No. 212-A, Cl. (2), H. E. H. the Nizam, the Rajpramukh, is the legislative authority in Hyderabad State, and the powers of the legislative authority and the procedure relating to the enactment of laws are defined in that clause. ——Arts. 13 and 19 (1) (g)—Act valid when enacted does not become invalid when another Act, increasing the burden on public, is enacted (Madras Commercial Crops Markets Act (20 of 1933).)

It is a novel and somewhat startling proposition to advance that statute good in itself, should become bad in conjuction with others. Art. 13 enacts that any law which is inconsistent with the fundamental rights declared in Part 3 should be void; and when it is alleged that a particular law is bad as infringing the right to free trade guaranteed by Art. 19 (1) (g) the Court has power to strike it down only if that law is not reasonable and in the interests of the general public. It does not possess a general jurisdiction to conduct an enquiry into the totality of the burdens imposed on a citizen by all the laws and to grant any relief, if it is satisfied that it is heavy.

It cannot therefore be contended that Madras Commercial Crops Markets Act, which was valid when it was enacted in 1933, and continued to be valid till 1944, it became invalid during that year when the Central Excise Act came to be enacted or when in the year 1939, the Madras General Sales Tax Act was enacted. (1954) 1 Mad L J 117 : A I R 1954 Mad 621 (629) (Pt C) (Pr 24) (DB).

——Arts. 13 and 245—Statute invalid because of constitutional check—It can become valid if constitutional prohibition is removed.

A statute may be invalid because there is lack of legislative competence or lack of affirmative grant of power. A statute may also be invalid because there is a constitutional check imposed upon legislation. As a matter of principle, the invalidity arising in the former case cannot be cured by the subsequent grant of the affirmative power. But in the latter case the statute would become valid and enforceable once the constitutional prohibition is removed. 1956 B L J R 760 : 1956 Pat L R 540 : ILR 35 Pat 847 : AIR 1957 Pat 44 (48) (Pt A) (Pr 11) (DB).

● ——Art. 13 - Scope of judicial review.

When the legislature enacts a measure which is not repugnant to the provisions of the Constitution, the legislative will is supreme and its policy is not subject to review by the Courts. If an Act has been regularly passed by a legislature and it does not impinge upon the inherent right of life, liberty or property, its determination as to the reasonableness of the legislation is conclusive on Courts. But if the legisluture travels beyond the reasonable limits set by the Constitution, or if it abridges some fundamental rights guaranteed to a citizen or if it assumes jurisdiction over subjects, not within its legislative cognizance, it is open to the Court to determine the constitutional validity of legislative Acts. It must, however, proceed on the assumption that every Act is constitutional unless its repugnancy to the Constitution is made to appear clearly, plainly, palpably and by irrefutable evidence Sardha Ram v. Haji Abdul, 62 Pun L R 201 : AIR 1960 Punj 196 (198)(Pt C) (Prs 8, 9) (FB).

[Overruled on another point in AIR 1962 S C 1476.]

——Arts. 13 and 19—Judicial review of legislation—Principles.

The powers conferred by Art. 19, Cls. (2) to (6) of our Constitution correspond to the American concept of police powers. The fundamental rights enumerated in Article 19 (1) of the Constitution, are not absolute, and yield to the regulatory powers of the Government which may become subject to encroachment on the part of the State.

The acts of the sovereign legislature, cannot be annulled by judicial decrees, so long as, the constitutional guarantees are not contravened by them. If there is a reasonable relation to an object within the ambit of governmental authority, the exercise of the legislative discretion is not subject to judicial review. A Court, making a judicial enquiry, may legitimately decide the question of power of the legislature, but the question of policy underlying the law, is a matter exclusively within legislative consideration.

By Clauses (2) to (6) of Art. 19, the law curtailing or impairing the fundamental rights, mentioned in Cl. (1) is required to be reasonable and the reasonableness of the legislative provision is a matter expressly placed within the ambit of judicial determination. On the Courts is cast, the sentinel duty, of protecting the seven freedoms conferred upon the citizen. The constitutional liberties which Clause (1) of Art. 19 declares are susceptible of legislative infringement, but within the bounds of reasonableness. If a proper balance is struck between the freedom guaranteed and the social control imposed, legislative interference whether regulatory, restrictive or prohibitory will be deemed reasonable, and will not be considered to be within the constitutional inhibitions. 59 Punj L R 289 : 1957 Cri L J 1173 : ILR 1957 Punj 1388 : AIR 1957 Punj 244 (251, 252, 253) (Pt D) (Prs 23, 24, 25, 31, 34, 35) (DB).

——Art. 13—Part III (Arts. 12 to 35) - Nomination for admission into State aided or State educational institutions.

It may be that nomination is not a very healthy method of taking students into colleges but it cannot be said that marks and marks alone is the most suitable method for taking students into colleges. Nomination for admission into State aided or State educational institutions is not against the fundamental rights. ——Art. 13 — Validating Act — Interpretation of—Principles.

In intetpreting a validating Act or for that matter an amending Act the Courts follow the principles of construction used in the interpretation of the original Act and to start with, as in the case of an original Act, the object in construing a validating Act is to determine the legislative intent, and, in order to find out that intent, the Act must be read as a whole, and effect must be given to every word thereof.

Further, the amendment must be given a reasonable construction in the sense that the Court must determine what defects existed in the original Act and which the Legislature intended to cure, and, then, so far as reasonably possible, its endeavour should be to construe the amendment, so as to reduce or eliminate the defect intended to be remedied.

It is not the old enactment which of its own force stands validated by the subsequent Validation Act, but it is the subsequent enactment that achieves this object. In other words, the validating Act, reincarnates the old provisions having due regard to all the constitutional requirements and fulfilling the same. And if that is done, it is the new Act that is constitutionally perfect which invests them with force and validity which they lacked before. ILR (1965) 15 Raj 285 : 1965 Raj L W 118.

● ——Art. 13 (2)—Effect of—Law infringing fundamental rights—Validity.

Any Article of the Constitution other than Art. 13 may exclude the operation of the fundamental rights in respect of a specific matter. An Article embodying a fundamental right may also exclude another by necessary implication; but before such a construction excluding the operation of one or other of the fundamental rights is accepted, every attempt should be made to harmonise the two. Any law made would be void if it infringes any one of the fundamental rights. Kochuni v. ● ——Arts. 13 and 245—Constitutionality of legislation—Duty of Court — (Constitutional Law — Ultra vires—Duty of Court).

In order to decide whether a particular legislation is unconstitutional as offending the provisions of the Constitution it is necessary to examine with some strictness the substance of the legislation for the purpose of determining what it is that the legislature has really done; the Court, when such questions arise, is not overpersuaded by the mere appearance of the legislation. In relation to constitutional prohibitions binding a legislature it is clear that the legislature cannot disobey the prohibitions merely by employing indirect method of achieving exactly the same result. Therefore, in all such cases the Court has to look behind the names, forms and appearances to discover the true character and nature of the legislation. Dwarkadas Shrinivas v. ● —Art. 13 — Constitutionality of statute—Power of Court to examine.

The Constitution of India contains express provisions for judicial review of legislation as to its conformity with the Constitution, unlike in America where the Supreme Court has assumed extensive powers of reviewing legislative acts under cover of the widely interpreted "due process" clause in the Fifth and Fourteenth Amendments. If, then, the Courts in India face up to such important and none too easy task, it is not out of any desire to tilt at legislative authority in a crusader's spirit, but in discharge of a duty plainly laid upon them by the Constitution. This is especially true as regards the "fundamental rights" as to which the Supreme Court has been assigned the role of a sentinel on the qui vive. While the Court naturally attaches great weight to the legislative judgment, it cannot desert its own duty to determine finally the constitutionality of an impugned statute. State of Madras v. Row V. ● —Art. 13—Fundamental right — Duty of Court.

Per Bose, J.—The fundamental rights conferred by the Constitution are not absolute. They are limited. In some cases the limitations are imposed by the Constitution itself. In others, Parliament has been given the power to impose further restrictions and in doing so to confer authority on the executive to carry its purpose into effect. But in every case it is the rights which are fundamental, not the limitations; and it is the duty of the S. C. and of all Courts in the land to guard and defend these rights jealously. It is the duty and privilege of the S. C to see that rights which were intended to be fundamental are kept fundamental and to see that neither Parliament nor the executive exceed the bounds within which they are confined by the Constitution when given the power to impose a restricted set of fetters on these freedoms; and in the case of the executive, to see further that it does not travel beyond the powers conferred by Parliament. —Art. 13—Scope — Declaration by Court that law is void—Necessity.

Even though a law becomes void automatically under Art. 13, without the necessity of any declaration by a Court a declaration that a law has become void is necessary before a Court can refuse to take notice of it. The voidness of a law is not a tangible thing which can be noticed as soon as it comes into existence; a declaration that it is void is necessary before it can be ignored. 1961 All L J 39 : 1961 All W R (H C) 98 : 1961 All Cr R 46 : 1961 (2) Cri L J 443 : AIR 1961 All 522 (524) (Pt B) (Pr 5)

—Art. 13 — Power of High Court to declare law void.

Where the High Court finds that the impugned provision as enacted violates a fundamental right claimed by the petitioner, it is its duty to give redress to him, even if that involves the striking down of the provisions of a law enacted by the Parliament, or of a law which must be deemed to have been enacted by the Parliament. 61 Bom L R 976 : 1959 Nag L J 350 : AIR 1960 Bom 83 (85) (Pt A) (Pt 5) (DB).

—Art. 13 (2)—Protection of fundamental rights.

The High Court is not concerned with allegations of bad faith in the sense how far promises made by legislators or Ministers in the Statements of Objects and Reasons of a statute are ultimately formulated in the statute itself. —Arts. 13 and 19—Scope of inquiry — Validity of statutory provision impugned — Court's duty — "Reasonable restriction."

In considering the validity of an impugned statutory provision, the Court proceeds on the basis, that the statutory authority will exercise the statutory power reasonably, and that such a power will not normally be abused. All the same, to widen by an amending Act the scope of a statutory power already held invalid by the Court does not help to establish the reasonableness of the restriction imposed by the said amending Act. 69 Mad L W 337 : (1956) 1 Mad L J 532 : AIR 1956 Mad 491 (495) (Pt C) (Pr 8) (DB).

—Art. 13—Invalidity of statute as being repugnant to the Constitution—Extent of invalidity.

With the initial presumption being in favour of the validity of a statute, investigation of the validity of a given statute or any part thereof should be limited to the extent absolutely necessary for the disposal of the issue before the Court.

By reason of Art. 13 a section offending the said article is not struck out from the statute book but no effect will be given to any of its provisions in regard to a person claiming that his fundamental rights are affected thereby.

When such is the comparatively limited scope of determination by a judicial Court even in cases where Art. 13 (1) of the Constitution is invoked, a Court will not undertake the investigation of the alleged invalidity of a statute except to the extent absolutely necessary. The Article does not declare any law void independently of the existence of the freedom guaranteed by Part 3. A citizen must be possessed of a fundamental right before he can ask the Court to declare a law which is inconsistent with it void; but if a citizen is not possessed of the right, he cannot claim this relief. ——Arts. 13 and 19 — Validity of legislation—Duty of Court.

Courts must attempt so far as possible to uphold legislation; it is only when it is plainly impossible to do so and when the legislation contravenes the fundamental rights that the Court feels compelled to interfere, it may declare it void. AIR 1956 Bom 304 (314) (Pt G) (Pr 19).

——Art. 13 (2)—Test to determine validity of statute.

In testing the validity of a statute it is not proper to assume that those who are entrusted with carrying out the provisions of that statute will act arbitrarily, capriciously and without regard for the feelings of people and the public. On the contrary, the approach should be that responsible officers act with responsibility and that the objects of the Act will be carried out in the spirit in which they were conceived by the legislature. If there is a possibility of administrative or executive action which may contravene the fundamental rights of a citizen, the Court must hold such provision unconstitutional.

In deciding upon the constitutionality of any statute the question has to be decided not upon considerations of inconvenience or upon considerations of sentiment, but upon the consideration whether any particular statute is inconsistent with the fundamental freedoms wnich have been conferred upon the citizens and others or whether it travels beyond the legislative competence of the Legislature which has passed the statute which is impugned. I L R (1953) Bom 1187 : 55 Bom L R 86 : A I R 1953 Bom 242 (251, 253) (Pt H) (Prs 20, 26) (DB).

When a legislation is impugned on the ground that it adversely affects rights guaranteed by Part III of the Constitution, the Courts would first have to ascertain whether the right claimed is one of the rights guaranteed by the Constitution, and secondly, whether the right is affected in a manner not warranted by the Constitution. ——Arts. 13 and 19—Constitutionality of legislation —Test of—Presumption as to constitutionality — If ground for striking down a provision.

Before condemning the provisions of a statute as violative of the constitutional liberties granted under Part III of the Constitution, the Courts always start with an assumption in favour of the constitutionality of an enactment. The invalidity or unconstitutionality of an Act cannot be assumed.

The fear, that reasonable safeguards as have been provided, may be disregarded, or the power, conferred upon the executive authority to administer the law, may be exceeded, is not a relevant consideration in determining the ultra vires or intra vires character of the statutory provisions. A law, otherwise good, cannot be thrown out as unconstitutional, because of its harsh and reckless enforcement in a particular case. 59 Punj L R 289 : 1957 Cri L J 1173 : I L R (1957) Punj 1388 : AIR 1957 Punj 244 (251) (Pt C) (Prs 19, 20) (DB).

● ——Art. 13 (2)—Constitutionality of Act.

The constitutional power of the law-making body to legislate in the premises being granted, the wisdom or expediency of the manner in which that power is exercised is not properly subject to juridical review and there being presumption in favour of the constitutionality of the Act, the Court would not pronounce the Act to be contrary to the Constitution unless the violation of the Constitution is proved beyond all reasonable doubt. 15 (d). Presumption of constitutionality.

● ——Art. 13—Scope — Drugs and Magic Remedies (Objectionable Advertisements) Act (21 of 1954) —If void.

When the constitutionality of an enactment is challenged on the ground of violation of any of the articles in Part III of the Constitution, the ascertainment of its true nature and character becomes necessary, i.e., its subject-matter, the area in which it is intended to operate, and its purport and intent have to be determined. A I R 1955 S C 661 and AIR 1957 S C 628 and A I R 1959 S C 942, Rel. on. Presumption is in favour of the constitutionality of an enactment. AIR 1959 S C 942 and A I R 1951 S C 41 and A I R 1951 S C 318, Rel. on. Further, in order to sustain the presumption of constitutionality the Court may take into consideration matters of common knowledge and the history of the times and may assume every state of facts which can be conceived of as existing at the time of legislation. AIR 1958 S C 538, Rel. on.

Thus, for the purpose of determining the constitutionality of the Drugs and Magic Remedies (Objectionable Advertisements) Act, 1954, it is open to the Court to take into consideration all the above facts. There is reason, therefore, to assume that the state of facts existed at the time of the legislation which necessitated the Act. Hamdard Dawakhana v. There is a presumption in favour of the constitutionality of an enactment and the burden is upon him who attacks it to show that there has been a clear transgression of the constitutional guarantee. There is always a strong presumption in favour of the constitutionality of an enactment. The legislation which discriminates may be justified on the ground of reasonable classification but the classification must have a reasonable relation to the objective of the Act itself. ——Arts. 13 (2), 19 (1) (d) and (e), (5) and 21—Scope —"Reasonable restrictions" — What are — Test to decide — Orissa Maintenance of Public Order Act (1950), Ss. 2 (1) (b) and 3 — If void as violating fundamental rights guaranteed by Arts. 19 (1) and 21.

In considering the reasonableness of the restrictions contemplated by Art. 19 (5) of the Constitution of India, the Court has to consider whether the fundamental principles of natural justice which require that no party ought to be condemned or to have a decision given against him without having been given a reasonable opportunity of putting forward his case before an impartial tribunal, have been contravened. Judged by this test, Ss. 2 (1) (b) and 3 of the Orissa Maintenance of Public Order Act, 1950, cannot be held to authorise the imposition of reasonable restrictions on the fundamental rights guaranteed by the Constitution to a citizen under Art. 19 (1) (d) and (e). Since the District Magistrate, as the delegated authority, has the power to pass an order of internment which shall remain in force for a period of one year, without any duty being cast upon him to furnish the grounds of such internment to the internee so as to enable the latter to make a representation against the order, there being also no provision for referring the whole case to an impartial tribunal such as an Advisory Council constituted under the Preventive Detention Act or the earlier Orissa Maintenance of Public Order Act, 1948, the provisions of Ss. 2 (1) (b) and 3 of the Act 10 of 1950 must be held to be void under Art. 13 (2) of the Constitution.

The expression "reasonable restrictions" is more a matter of substance than of procedure in the background of the Constitution of India. The Court must be satisfied and make sure that the restrictions, considered in the light of "the interest of the general public" for the protection of which they are imposed are reasonable, that is to say, that the restrictions are so imposed as to ensure that the execution of the law will not generally entail greater restrictions than are required for such protection. In this respect Orissa Act 10 of 1950 does not stand the test and is, therefore, void under Art. 13 (2) as offending against Art 19 (1) (d) and (e). Secondly, it is also void as inconsistent with Art. 21 of the Constitution as it does not provide for the essentials of a legal procedure. See Ibid, Art. 19 (1) (g). AIR 1955 Pat 223.

15 (f). Taxing statute.

—Art. 13 — Part III (Gen.), Arts. 14, 19, 31 and 265—Taxing statute when can be challenged as violating Arts. 14, 19 and 31.

A taxing statute can be held to contravene Art. 14 if it purports to impose on the same class of property similarly situated an incidence of taxation which leads to obvious inequality. It is true that the Legislature is competent to classify persons or properties into different categories and tax them differently and if the classification thus made is rational, the taxing statute cannot be challenged merely because different rates of taxation are prescribed for different categories of persons or objects. But, if in its operation, any taxing statute is found to contravene Art. 14, it would be open to Courts to strike it down as denying to the citizens the equality before the law guaranteed by Art. 14.

Similarly, if a taxing statute makes no specific provision about the machinery to recover tax and the procedure to make the assessment of the tax and leaves it entirely to the executive to devise such machinery the imposition of the tax in the absence of a prescribed machinery and the prescribed procedure, would partake of the character of a purely administrative affair and can, in a proper sense, be challenged as contravening Art. 19 (1) (f).

The position, however, is different when the challenge is made on the ground that the Act is inconsistent with Art. 31. The authority of law, postulated by Art. 31 (1), is obviously the authority of a valid law. If the law is not valid because it offends against Art. 14 or Art. 19 or some other fundamental right guaranteed by Part III, then the imposition of tax levied by it cannot be said to meet the requirements of Art. 31 (1). But if the Act in question is otherwise valid, then the Art. 31 (1) is complied with. Article 31 (2) would be inapplicable to a taxing statute. It may be that the imposition of the tax levied by the statute is excessive and may ultimately lead to loss of the assessee's property but even so it cannot be said that by virtue of the Act the property has been acquired or requisitioned. Article 31 (2-A) clearly brings out the limits of the application of Art. 31 (2). Similarly, Art. 31 (5) (b) (i) specifically provides that nothing in Cl. (2) shall affect the provisions of any law which the State may hereafter make for the purpose of imposing or levying any tax or penalty. Thus, it is clear that the provisions of Art. 31 (2) cannot be invoked in impeaching the validity of a taxing statute. Raja Jagannath Baksh Singh v. State of Uttar-Pradesh, (1962) 46 I T R 169 : 1962 All L J 799 : 1962 All W R (HC) 649 : (1962) 2 S C A 679 : (1963) 1 S C R 220 : AIR 1962 S C 1563 (1570, 1571) (Pt G) (Prs 16, 17, 18).

—Art. 13—Part III (General), Arts. 12 to 35—Tax laws — Not free from being challenged as being repugnant to fundamental rights.

Per P. Chatterjee, J.: Tax law is not free from being challenged as being repugnant to the fundamental rights under the Constitution. But the question whether the tax law concerned is reasonable or unreasonable, is to be decided with reference to the rights of the assessee, namely, whether the tax-payer had an opportunity to challenge the levying of the tax and whether principles of natural justice were violated so far as the actual assessment and realisation of tax is concerned. If the assessment is to be made by a process which violates the principle of natural justice, that has been considered by the Supreme Court to be unreasonable. If a tax is imposed by adopting unreasonable procedure, the imposition may be bad because of such procedure. 16. Waiver of fundamental rights.

—Art. 13, Part III—Non-exercise of fundamental right—Effect.

There can be no loss of fundamental right merely on the ground of non-exercise of it. In re, The Kerala Education Bill, 1957, I L R (1958) Ker 1167 : 1959 S C A 450 : 1959 S C J 321 : 1959 S C R 995 : 1958 Ker L T 465 : A I R 1958 S C 956 (981) (Pt M) (Pr 26).

—Art. 13, Part III — Constitutional and fundamental rights — Accused in criminal trial, cannot waive them.

In a criminal prosecution it is not open to an accused person to waive his constitutional right and get convicted. The doctrine of waiver enunciated by some American Judges in construing the American Constitution cannot be introduced in our Constitution without a fuller discussion of the matter. The rights described as fundamental rights are a necessary consequence of the declaration in the preamble that the people of India have solemnly resolved to constitute India into a sovereign democratic republic and to secure to all its citizens justice, social, economic and political, liberty of thought, expression, belief, faith and worship, equality of status and of opportunity. These fundamental rights have not been put in the Constitution merely for individual benefit, though ultimately they come into operation in considering individual rights. They have been put there as a matter of public policy and the doctrine of waiver can have no application to provisions of law which have been enacted as a matter of constitutional policy. Reference to some of the Articles, inter alia, Arts. 15 (1), 20, 21 makes the proposition quite plain. A citizen cannot get discrimination by telling the State "you can discriminate" or get convicted by waiving the protection given under Arts. 20 and 21. Behram Khurshed v. ● —Art. 14 — Discrimination envisaged under Art. 14 is conscious discrimination and a discrimination arising out of oversight is no discrimination at all. The mistake committed by oversight can be rectified. Ramnath v. State of Rajasthan, (1962) 1 SC D 856: (1963) 2 SCR 152: (1963) 2 SCJ 437.

● ——Art. 14 — Interpretation of — Rules of guidance — Equal protection of laws.

(1) If the statute itself or the rule made under it applies unequally to persons or things similarly situated, it would be an instance of a direct violation of the constitutional guarantee.

(2) The enactment or the rule might not in terms enact a discriminatory rule of law but might enable an unequal or discriminatory treatment to be accorded to persons or things similarly situated. The very provision of the law which enables or permits the authority to discriminate in certain circumstances offends the guarantee of equal protection afforded by Art. 14.

(3) The above rule would not apply to cases where the legislature lays down the policy and indicates the rule or the line of action which should serve as a guidance to the authority. Where such guidance is expressed in the statutory provision conferring the power, no question of violation of Art. 14 could arise.

(4) For the legislation to comply with the rule as to equal protection, it is not essential that the rules for the guidance of the designated authority, should be laid down in express terms. Such guidance may thus be obtained from or afforded by the preamble read in the light of the surrounding circumstances, which necessitated the legislation.

In the circumstances indicated under the fourth head, the law enacted would be valid being neither a case of excessive delegation, nor open to objection on the ground of violation of Art. 14. The criteria to be applied to determine the validity of rules could be appropriately applied to determine the validity of the action under the provisions like the one dealt with under the last two heads. ● ——Arts. 14, 15 and 16 — Relative scope of.

Article 14 guarantees the general right of equality; Arts. 15 and 16 are instances of the same right in favour of citizens in some special circumstances. Art. 15 is more general than Art. 16, the latter being confined to matters relating to employment or appointment to any office under the State. Art. 15 does not mention descent as one of the prohibited grounds of discrimination, whereas Art. 16 does. Gazulal Dasaratha Rama Rao v. ● ——Art. 14 — Whether a law offends Art. 14 — Test — Retrospective character or otherwise — Relevancy.

Per Sarkar, J.: Whether a law offends Art. 14, does not depend upon whether it is prospective or retrospective. There is nothing in Art. 14 to indicate that a law operating retrospectively cannot offend it. It is possible both for prospective and retrospective statutes to contravene the provisions of that article. Kangshari Haldar v. ● ——Arts. 14 (1) (g), 31 and 32 — Applicability — Petitioner holding contracts for supply of milk to Government Hospital — Tender for certain year accepted but later on cancelled — Effect — Fundamental right — If violated.

Held, on facts (1) that none of Arts. 14, 16 (1), 19 (1) (g) and 31 could be made applicable to the facts of the case for the following reasons:

(a) When one person is chosen rather than another, the aggrieved party cannot claim the protection of Art. 14, because the choice of the person to fulfil a particular contract must be left to the Government. The breach of the contract, if any, may entitle the person aggrieved to sue for damages but he cannot complain that there has been a deprivation of the right to practise any profession or to carry on any occupation, trade or business, such as is contemplated by Art. 19 (1) (g).

(b) A contract for the supply of goods is not a contract of employment in the sense in which that word has been used in Art. 16 (1).

(2) That no fundamental right was involved and at the best, it was a right to take the matter to the Civil Court and to claim damages for breach of contract, if any, and, therefore, the petition under Art. 32 was wholly misconceived. C. K. Achutan v. ● ——Art. 14 — Validity of statute — Violation of Art. 14 — Test.

While Art. 14 forbids class legislation, it does not forbid reasonable classification for the purposes of legislation. It is also well established by the decision of Supreme Court that Article 14 condemns discrimination not only by a substantive law but also by a law of procedure. The decisions further establish:

(a) that a law may be constitutional even though it relates to a single individual if, on account of some special circumstances or reasons applicable to him and not applicable to others, that single individual may be treated as a class by himself;

(b) that there is always a presumption in favour of the constitutionality of an enactment and the burden is upon him who attacks it to show that there has been a clear transgression of the constitutional principles;

(c) that it must be presumed that laws are directed to problems made manifest by experience and that discriminations by the Legislature are based on adequate grounds;

(d) that the Legislature may confine its restrictions to those cases where the need is deemed to be the clearest;

(e) that in order to sustain the presumption of constitutionality the Court may take into consideration matters of common knowledge, matters of common report, the history of the times and may assume every state of facts which can be conceived existing at the time of legislation; and

(f) that the presumption of constitutionality cannot be carried to the extent of always holding that there must be some undisclosed and unknown reasons for subjecting certain individuals or corporations to hostile or discriminating legislation. ● ——Art. 14 — Applicability — Discretion — Fundamental right and statutory right — Distinction.

There is a broad distinction between discretion which has to be exercised with regard to a fundamental right guaranteed by the Constitution and some other right which is given by the statute. If the statute deals with a right which is not fundamental in character the statute can take it away but a fundamental right the statute cannot take away. Where, a discretion is given in the matter of issuing licences for carrying on trade, profession or business or where restrictions are imposed on freedom of speech, etc., the discretion must be controlled by clear rules so as to come within the category of reasonable restrictions. The discretion vested has to be looked at from two points of view, viz., (1) does it admit of the possibility of any real and substantial discrimination, and (2) does it impinge on a fundamental right guaranteed by the Constitution? Article 14 can be invoked only when both these conditions are satisfied. Messrs Pannalal Binjaraj v. Union of India, 1957 SCA 660: (1957) 31 ITR 565: 1957 SCR 233: AIR 1957 SC 397 (410) (Pt C) (Pr 34).

● ——Art. 14 — Discretionary power.

● ——Arts. 14, 15, 16 and 21 — Scope — Discriminate against, meaning of.

Per Patanjali Sastri, C. J.: All legislative differentiation is not necessarily discriminatory. In fact, the word "discrimination" does not occur in Art. 14. The expression "discriminate against" is used in Art. 15 (1) and Art. 16 (2), and it means, according to the Oxford Dictionary, "to make an adverse distinction with regard to; to distinguish unfavourably from others". Discrimination thus involves an element of unfavourable bias and it is in that sense that the expression has to be understood in this context. If such bias is disclosed and is based on any of the grounds mentioned in Arts. 15 and 16, it may be well that the statute will, without more, incur condemnation as violating a specific constitutional prohibition unless it is saved by one or other of the provisos to those articles. But the position under Art. 14 is different. Equal protection claims under that article are examined with the presumption that the State action is reasonable and justified. This presumption of constitutionality stems from the wide power of classification which the legislature must, of necessity, possess in making laws operating differently as regards different groups of persons in order to give effect to its policies. The power of the State to regulate criminal trials by constituting different courts with different procedures according to the needs of different parts of its territory is an essential part of its police power. Though the differing procedures might involve disparity in the treatment of the persons tried under them, such disparity is not by itself sufficient to outweigh the presumption and establish discrimination unless the degree of disparity goes beyond what the reason for its existence demand as, for instance, when it amounts to a denial of a fair and impartial trial. It is, therefore, not correct to say that Art. 14 provides no further constitutional protection to personal liberty than what is afforded by Art. 21. Notwithstanding that its wide general language is greatly qualified in its practical application by a due recognition of the State's necessarily wide powers of legislative classification, Art. 14 remains an important bulwark against discriminatory procedural laws. ● ——Art. 14 — 'Equal protection of laws' — Meaning of.

The phrase 'equal protection of the laws' means in essence the right to equal treatment in similar circumstances. The right is equally observed if the law makes all prosecutions for a particular offence subject to the sanction of a prescribed authority or if it provides that no such sanction is necessary. It is violated if, without reasonable grounds, it provides that sanction shall be necessary in some cases and not in others. Bhai Singh v. ——Arts. 14 and 31 — Distinction between Art. 31 (4) and (5) (a) — Existing law coming under Art. 31 (5) (a), if can be challenged on ground that it denies equality before law.

Art. 31 (5) (a) is worded differently to Art. 31 (4); for instead of providing that an existing law cannot be challenged because it contravenes Art. 31 (2) it provides, in effect, that Art. 31 (2) shall not apply at all to such a law (other, of course, than a law to which the provisions of Cl. (6) apply). But if Art. 31 (2) does not apply to an existing law the bar which that clause constituted to a challenge under Art. 14 disappears, and an existing law can be called in question on the ground that it denies equality before the law. Article 31 (4) presupposes the existence of a law which contravenes the provisions of Art. 31 (2); Art. 31 (5) (a) makes Art. 31 (2) inapplicable to an existing law. By a writ petition filed under Art. 226 of the Constitution in the High Court during the pendency of the declaration of emergency made by the President under Art. 359, the petitioner challenged the constitutional validity of R. 149 of the Indian Railway Establishment Code, Vol. I. However, in view of the provisions contained in the Order made under Art. 359 by the President, which inter alia suspended the right of a person to move any Court for the enforcement of the right conferred by Art. 14, the counsel for the petitioner made a statement that he did not wish to challenge the validity of R. 149 on the ground that it violated Art. 14. But the counsel challenged the validity of the rule on the ground that it violated Art. 16 of the Constitution.

Held, by Mehrotra, C. J., and S. K. Dutta, J., that the fundamental right guaranteed under Art. 14 was a general right of which the right conferred under Art. 16 was a species and therefore the petitioner in view of his statement was not entitled to contend that Rule 149 violated Art. 16 of the Constitution.

Held by C. S. Nayudu, J. (Contra): the fact that the petitioner did not rely on Art. 14 would not preclude his placing reliance on Art. 16 and seek the aid of the Court to enforce the fundamental rights guaranteed under that Article. Hence, the objection to R. 149 could be examined in the light of Art. 16 (1) and (2) of the Constitution. Shyam Behari Iswari v. ——Arts. 14, 226 — Discriminatory administrative order of individual officer.

If a law is so passed as to make discrimination or deny its application equally to all subjects, such a law can be challenged under Art. 226 as offending against Art. 14. A clear distinction must be borne in mind between the law and the administration of the law. If the law itself permits discrimination, even though the law may appear to be fair and undiscriminatory, the Court may interfere. One may even have a case where in exercising the discretion vested in officers under the statute the State may, as a policy of administration, require its officers to exercise the discretion unfairly and unequally. Even in such a case the Court may interfere and say that although administrative orders are being challenged, the administrative orders suggest behind them a policy of the State of discrimination. But when a subject comes to the Court and challenges a specific act of an individual officer as being in contravention of Art. 14, the Officer in acting contrary to Art. 14 is really acting contrary to the law and not in conformity with or in consonance with the law. When the law invests an officer with a discretion, the law assumes that the officer will exercise the discretion bona fide and not dishonestly, arbitrarily or capriciously, and if he exercises the discretion dishonestly, arbitrarily or capriciously, he is really going contrary to the law. In such a case the subject comes to Court not for protection under Art. 14, but for protection against the dishonest, arbitrary or capricious act of the officer. The Court is not powerless to give the subject protection against a dishonest officer, but that protection cannot be sought under Art. 14 or under Art. 226. (1885) 118 USR 220. (1902) 188 USR 572. ● ——Arts. 14 and 19 — Tests of reasonableness in Art. 14 and Art. 19 are not the same.

Per P. B. Mukharji, J.: No question of reasonableness arises on the language of Art. 14 as distinguished from the specific words of reasonable restriction in the different sub-clauses of Art. 19. In considering however if a statute is hit by Art. 14 the Court considers its policy only in the limited sense of reasonable classification and nexus. Legislative policy in no other sense is under constitutional review by the Courts under Art. 14. In considering if a statute is hit by Art. 19 the Court will consider only the reasonableness of the restriction. To attempt to equate a common standard of reasonableness both for Art. 14 and Art. 19 will be really to introduce in the Indian Constitution the entire doctrine of 'Due process' of the American law which the Supreme Court has repeatedly said does not apply to the Indian Constitution. ● ——Art. 14 — Scope and object of.

The "equal protection" clause in Art. 14 is not intended to hamper the States in the discretionary exercise of their appropriate sovereign powers but this discretion should not be tantamount to arbitrary invasion of substantial rights, by oppressive executions and discriminations.

Article 14 means that all persons "should have like access to the Courts of the country for the protection of their persons and property, the prevention and redress of wrongs, and the enforcement of contracts".

The right to institute a suit in a Court of law regarding one's claim is a civil right and if a person is to be deprived of his right to claim property under his personal law by his claim being dismissed by an enactment of the Legislature unless such a thing is allowed under Part 3 of the Constitution, it is no doubt a denial of the equal protection of the laws under Art. 14. This means that the principle of the equality of the application of the law is denied and it is a discrimination against him. Mahbub Begum v. ——Art. 14 — Discrimination need not be shown to be intended by the Legislature.

In order to invalidate a statute which is discriminatory it is not necessary that it should be shown that the legislature was conscious of and intended to discriminate. The general presumption is that the legislature acts in good faith and with knowledge of the existing conditions, but that presumption cannot always be carried to the extent of holding that even if there is any discrimination, the person attacking the legislation should prove further that the legislature intended such discrimination. What one has to see when a legislation is impugned under Art. 14 is whether in its operation, the statute discriminates, and not whether such discrimination is the result of a conscious or indifferent act on the part of the legislature. 1906 AC 360 and AIR 1956 SC 20, Disting. ILR (1963) Mad 1054: 76 Mad LW 381: AIR 1963 Mad 369 (376, 377) (Pt H) (Prs 37, 39) (DB).

The expressions 'equality before the law' and 'equal protection of the laws' in Art. 14, aim at establishing "equality of status" referred to in the preamble of the Indian Constitution. But they do not convey the same meaning. While "Equality before the law" is a somewhat negative concept implying the absence of any special privilege in favour of any individual and the equal subjection of all classes to the ordinary law, "equal protection of the laws" is a more positive concept implying equality of treatment in equal circumstances. There is, however, one dominant idea common to both the expressions, that is, equal justice. Art. 14 providing the equal protection of the laws embodies a prohibition against discrimination, discrimination in favour of any person or class as much as discrimination against any person or class. Equal protection of the laws is a pledge of the protection of equal laws. When the Madras Co-operative Societies Act itself was not impugned as offending Art. 14 of the Constitution, merely because the police did not send up for trial the President of the Society the petitioner who was the secretary could not claim that the proceedings against him should be quashed. It cannot also be said that the liability of the secretary and the President of the Co-operative Society is equal under all circumstances. It may be that the President was a mere figure head in most of the transactions and it is generally left to the prosecuting authorities to discriminate, as regards the degree of culpability, amongst several persons charged with an offence, and to prosecute only the real offenders and refrain from prosecuting the other persons. Such a discretion must necessarily vest in them. Merely because the prosecuting authorities did not consider it advisable to initiate prosecution against the President of the Society it cannot be said that the prosecution of the secretary offends Art. 14 of the Constitution, especially when it is not denied that there is a prima facie case against the secretary. ILR (1958) Cut 140: 24 Cut LT 135.

——Art. 14 — Equality before law — Duty of Courts and Administrative Officers and Tribunals pointed out.

No citizen in this Republic, however objectionable or blameworthy his conduct may be reputed to be according to the accepted social or moral standard, can be treated prejudicially, for that reason alone, unless, of course, the law so provides. The equal protection of laws and equality before law is a golden thread which generally runs throughout the entire fabric of our set-up. State and its Tribunals must, therefore, proceed strictly in accordance with law in discharging their duties and functions, uninfluenced by any irrelevant or collateral consideration. In matters requiring calm, balanced, judicial approach, the scales must be held even; neither prejudice nor sympathy, the two off-the-record witnesses have any place in such proceedings which are guided by law alone. The judicial gaze or vision has to be steadfast seeing everything relevant, unobstructed by the haze of fear or favour.

Administrative Officers and civil servants in this Republic are assumed to be men of conscience and intellectual discipline, capable of discharging their duties fairly on the basis of relevant considerations uninfluenced by any personal or collateral factor of fear or favour, which conflicts with the impartiality of their solemn official duty or cuts across the rule of law. They cannot under the Republican law and traditions be hired and fired at the arbitrary whim or caprice of any authority, there being no 'boss' to dismiss them in a fit of temper, and their security of tenure being reasonably guaranteed by law. It is on the impartial objectivity and aloofness of the administrator from personal power-politics, that the success of our constitutional set-up, and consequently of our national progress largely depends. An infirm conduct of a responsible and experienced administrator can, however, constitute little justification by itself for the law not taking its course, if otherwise, the dictates of impartial justice so warrant, of course, subject to considerations of resultant prejudice caused thereby to an innocent citizen. 67 Pun LR 636: (1965) 16 STC 590.

——Arts. 14 and 19 (1) (g) and (6) — Orders passed under valid law — Applicability of articles to test correctness of orders — Orders under Motor Vehicles Act.

The test prescribed in Art. 19 (6) has to be applied to the law, and it has to be seen whether the law imposes reasonable restrictions on the exercise of the fundamental right. Once it is clear that the law is reasonable, it is difficult to hold that every order passed by any authority constituted under the law has again to undergo the test of reasonableness, and if it fails to pass that test, it is liable to be set aside as an unreasonable restriction on the fundamental right contained in Art. 19 (1) (g).

Therefore the validity of every order passed under the Motor Vehicles Act by a Transport Authority cannot be questioned on the ground of arbitrariness or unreasonableness by the use of Art. 19 (6), and it cannot be said that the order is invalid because it contravenes that Article. AIR 1950 Pat 322 (FB), Rel. on; AIR 1953 Mad 279, Diss. from.

Similarly, Art. 14 cannot be applied to test correctness of orders passed under laws which are themselves valid. The principle is the same as in the case of Art. 19 (6).

Article 19 (6) or Art. 14 can only be employed to declare individual orders invalid, if, in the first instance the law itself, under which the orders are passed, is declared invalid under these articles. ILR (1953) 3 Raj 931: 1954 RLW 649: AIR 1955 Raj 19 (28, 29) (Pt H) (Prs 24, 25, 26) (DB).

The expression 'equality before the law' does not involve the idea of absolute equality among human beings, which is a physical impossibility. Equality before the law means that among equals the law should be equally administered.

The article is designed to protect all persons against legislative discrimination amongst equals, and to prevent any person or class of persons from being singled out as a special subject for discriminating and hostile legislation. 1956 All WR (HC) 207: 1956 All LJ 276: 1956 Cr LJ 1031: AIR 1956 All 520 (521) (Pt A) (Pr 4).

"Equality before the law" does not mean an absolute equality of men but it postulates that there shall not be any special privilege by reason of birth or creed or the like in favour of an individual. "Equal protection" must mean that there will not be arbitrary discrimination made by the laws themselves in their administration. AIR 1951 Bom 105 (120, 121) (Pt L) (Pr 40) (DB).

——Art. 14 — Arbitration — Equality before law.

Article 14 of the Constitution prevents the State from denying any person equality before the law or equal protection of the laws but does not prevent parties by a private agreement to make the contract to go to arbitration as an alternative method of settling their disputes without going through the formalities of a public trial in the public Courts of the land. When the parties agree to such a procedure by arbitration, it is not for such consenting parties to come to the High Court and complain that the procedure of justice is discriminatory when compared to trials by public Courts of the land. The constitutional doctrine of equality before the law or equal protection of the laws does not signify that the same law applies to every situation. It means the same law for the same situation and not when the situations are different and entirely dissimilar. Arbitration does not mean or involve any unconstitutional discrimination such as is prohibited by the Indian Constitution. 60 Cal WN 810: AIR 1956 Cal 476 (478, 479) (Pt B) (Pr 6).

——Art. 14 — Equality before law — What is.

Equality before the law does not mean an absolute equality of men which is a physical impossibility. It means that there shall be no denial of any privilege by reason of birth, creed or the like to any individual and there will be equal subjection of all individuals and classes to the ordinary law of the land administered in the Courts of the country. ILR (1954) Hyd 983: AIR 1955 Hyd 97 (98) (Pt C) (Pr 3) (DB).

● ——Art. 14 — "Equality before the law" — Interpretation of.

The principle of equality before the law is not violated by the existence of special laws providing for particular groups in the State, e.g., soldiers, doctors or lawyers. Such laws may not affect the rest of the people but apply only to the members of a particular calling. But in the enforcement of these laws as well as in the enforcement of general law, no distinction is made between man and man. The principle of equality before the law does not come into play in any controversy as to the legality of a law enacted by the State. It comes into play really in the sphere of its enforcement. ● ——Arts. 14 and 21 — "Equality before law" — "Procedure established by law" — Meaning of.

Equality before the law does not require mathematical equality of all persons in all circumstances. From the very nature of society there should be different laws in different places and the Legislature controls the policy and enacts laws in the best interests and for the safety of the State.

The word 'procedure' in the expression "Procedure established by law" in Art. 21, is not used in its technical sense indicating a particular law as contained in the Codes of procedure but in the general sense to mean the steps to be taken in an orderly trial. AIR 1950 SC 27, Ref. 'Procedure established by law' means the law of the land having statutory origin. Abdul Kadir v. ● ——Art. 14 — Plea of denial of equal protection of the laws — Proof that should be offered to sustain plea.

To make out a case of denial of the equal protection of the laws under Art. 14 of the Constitution, a plea of differential treatment is by itself not sufficient. An applicant pleading that equal protection of the laws has been denied to him must make out that not only he had been treated differently from others but he has been so treated from persons similarly circumstanced without any reasonable basis, and such differential treatment is unjustifiably made. For instance, a mere plea that the Company and other agriculturists within the region of the former Bhopal State had to pay the agricultural income-tax, whereas the agriculturists elsewhere, in the regions of Madhya Pradesh had not to pay such tax, is not sufficient to make out a case of infringement of the fundamental right under Art. 14 of the Constitution. ● ——Art. 14 — Discrimination — Reasonable classification — Validity of provisions in Act — Determination of — Tests.

Article 14 forbids class legislation, it does not forbid reasonable classifications for the purposes of legislation. When any impugned rule or statutory provision is assailed on the ground that it contravenes Art. 14, its validity can be sustained if two tests are satisfied. The first test is that the classification on which it is founded must be based on an intelligible differentia which distinguishes persons or things grouped together from others left out of the group; and the second is that the differentia in question must have a reasonable relation to the object sought to be achieved by the rule or statutory provision in question. The classification on which the statutory provision may be founded may be referable to different considerations. It may be based on geographical considerations or it may have reference to objects or occupations or the like. In every case, there must be some nexus between the basis of the classification and the object intended to be achieved by the statute. J. Pandurangarao v. Certain offences may be so henious or serious that they may in certain circumstances be treated as a class and tried in a different way. For instance, offence created by S. 3 of the Jammu and Kashmir Enemy Agents Ordinance is not found as such in the Penal Code but is a new offence of an aggravated kind which may in the circumstances prevailing in the State be treated as different from the ordinary offences and may well be dealt with by a drastic procedure without encountering the charge of violation of the equal protection clause. While Art. 14 forbids class legislation, it does not forbid reasonable classification for the purposes of legislation. One can conceive of classifications that will have direct and reasonable relation to the object sought to be achieved and yet which are bad because despite all that, the object itself cannot be allowed on the ground that it offends Art. 14. It is well settled that the guarantee of equal protection of laws does not require that the same law should be made applicable to all persons. Article 14 does not forbid classification for legislative purposes, provided that such classification is based on some differentia having a reasonable relation to the object and purpose of the law in question.

Further, there is a strong presumption in favour of the validity of legislative classification and it is for those who challenge it as unconstitutional to allege and prove beyond all doubt that the legislation arbitrarily discriminates between different persons similarly circumstanced. A legislature which must, of necessity, have the power of making special laws to attain particular objects must have large powers of selection or classification of persons and things upon which such laws are to operate. Mere differentiation or inequality of treatment does not per se amount to discrimination and it is necessary to show that the selection or differentiation is unreasonable or arbitrary and that it does not rest on any rational basis having regard to the object which the Legislature has in view in order to invalidate an enactment under Art. 14. ● ——Art. 14 — Scope — Equal protection of laws.

Per Mukherjea, J.: A legislature for the purpose of dealing with the complex problems that arise out of an infinite variety of human relations, cannot but proceed upon some sort of selection or classification of persons upon whom the legislation is to operate. The consequence of such classification would undoubtedly be to differentiate the persons belonging to that class from others, but that by itself would not make the legislation obnoxious to the equal protection clause. Equality prescribed by the Constitution would not be violated if the statute operates equally on all persons who are included in the group, and the classification is not arbitrary or capricious, but bears a reasonable relation to the objective which the legislation has in view. The legislature is given the utmost latitude in making the classification and it is only when there is a palpable abuse of power and the differences made have no rational relation to the objectives of the regulation, that necessity of judicial interference arises.

If the legislative policy is clear and definite and as an effective method of carrying out that policy, a discretion is vested by the statute upon a body of administrators or officers to make selective application of the law to certain classes or groups of persons, the statute itself cannot be condemned as a piece of discriminatory legislation. In such cases, the power given to the executive body would import a duty on it to classify the subject-matter of legislation in accordance with the objective indicated in the statute. The discretion that is conferred on official agencies in such circumstances is not an unguided discretion; it has to be exercised in conformity with the policy to effectuate which the direction is given and it is in relation to that objective that the propriety of the classification would have to be tested. If the administrative body proceeds to classify persons or things on a basis which has no rational relation to the objective of the legislature, its action can certainly be annulled as offending against the equal protection clause. On the other hand, if the statute itself does not disclose a definite policy or objective and it confers authority on another to make selection at its pleasure, the statute would be held on the face of it to be discriminatory irrespective of the way in which it is applied. 118 US 356, Ref.

——Art. 14 — Equal protection of laws — Meaning.

The equal protection of the laws means protection of equal laws. It forbids class legislation but does not forbid classification which rests upon reasonable ground for distinction. It does not prohibit legislation which is limited either for the object to which it is directed or the territory within which it is to operate. It merely requires that all persons subjected to such legislation shall be treated alike under like circumstances and conditions both in the privileges conferred and in the liabilities imposed. 1955 All LJ 657: AIR 1956 All 100 (102) (Pt A) (Pr 6).

● ——Art. 14 — Equal protection of laws.

The guarantee of equal protection is not to be understood as requiring that every person in the land shall possess precisely the same rights and privileges as every other person. The classification must be based upon reasonable ground. It cannot be a mere arbitrary selection. What the Article contemplates is that both in the matter of the laws applicable and the mode in which they are administered, all persons, in like circumstances and conditions should possess the same privileges and be subject to the same liabilities. ——Art. 14 — "Equal protection of the laws" — Meaning.

What the equal protection clause means is simply this that the same law should govern those similarly circumstanced; it cannot and does not prohibit different laws for those differently circumstanced. The Legislature has full freedom to classify people according to circumstances and enact different laws for different classes; but it must treat equally all similarly circumstanced or falling in one class and the difference in treatment must have some intelligible or rational connection with the difference in circumstances and not be arbitrary. Discrimination among persons in one class or similarly circumstanced, whether apparent on the face of the Statute or resulting in practice, is all that is prohibited under the clause. It is competent for the Legislature to leave it to the discretion of an authority to apply different laws to people in different circumstances but always provided that it lays down a rational standard to guide its discretion or such a standard can be presumed to exist; it cannot leave it to its arbitrary or naked discretion. A statute is presumed to be within the power of the Legislature and the onus of showing that it is not is on the assailant. But a statute enacted before the Constitution cannot be presumed to be constitutional. 52 Cri LJ 1251: ILR (1951) 2

Article 14 does not prohibit the Legislature from classifying or setting up different classes to some of which the law may apply and to others the law may not. But in order that there should be a classification which can be upheld by the Court, the classification must be on some rational basis. Section 242 (3), M. P. ——Art. 14 — Scope.

Article 14 is framed in very wide terms. Equal protection of laws does not mean that all laws must be general or universal in their character and application. The Legislature in the process of legislation is entitled to classify persons or things to be brought under the operation of law, and if the basis of classification is just, and has a reasonable relation to the object which the Legislature has in view, it is not open to the Courts to sit in judgment over the wisdom of the Legislature in making the classification. Even if the law makes a special provision with regard to a class it must be regarded as good, provided the classification is founded upon a real and substantial distinction and is not made arbitrarily. Again entrustment by law of authority to select for special treatment a person or object to an executive authority is by itself not a ground for holding that the equal protection clause is violated. 57 Bom LR 1088: AIR 1956 Bom 368 (373) (Pt B) (Pr 26) (DB).

——Art. 14 — Equality before the law — Meaning.

The equality before the law which is guaranteed by Art. 14 is not offended if the classification which an Act makes is based on reasonable and rational considerations. It is not obligatory for the State Legislature always and in every case to provide for social welfare and reform by one step. So long as the State Legislature in taking gradual steps for social welfare and reform does not introduce distinctions or classifications which are unreasonable, irrational or oppressive, it cannot be said that the equality before law is offended. 53 Bom LR 779: 21 Bom Cr C 244: 1952 Cri LJ 354: ILR (1951) Bom 775: AIR 1952 Bom 84 (95) (Pt F) (Pr 30) (DB).

——Art. 14 — Meaning and nature of guarantee under.

Article 14 deals with equality before the law. It postulates that the State shall not deny to any person equality before the law or the equal protection of the laws within the territories of India. This Article corresponds to the equal protection clause of the Fourteenth Amendment of the Constitution of the United States of America, which declares that "no State shall deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws". The guarantee of the equal protection of the laws means the protection of equal laws. It forbids class legislation, but does not forbid classification which rests upon reasonable grounds of distinction. Mathematical nicety and perfect equality are not required. If any state of facts can reasonably be conceived to sustain a classification, the existence of that state of facts must be assumed. Where a statute itself indicates the persons or things to whom its provisions are intended to apply, and where the bases of the classification of such persons or things appear on the face of the statute, or gathered from the surrounding circumstances, known to, or brought to the notice of the court, it has to examine whether there is an intelligible differentia between the persons or things grouped togeiher and those left out of the group and whether such differentia has any nexus to the object sought to be achieved by the statute. Case Law referred. ('65) 69 Cal WN 346.

——Art. 14 — Reasonable classification.

It cannot be held that the State makes a discrimination between different persons of the same category when it chooses to prosecute some under S. 409 of the Penal Code and others committing the same act under S. 5 (2) of the Prevention of Corruption Act. The Prevention of Corruption Act although it does not expressly lay down any basis for classification does by implication in its various provisions lay down a line of classification of offenders who are to be prosecuted under that Act. It is the case of those public servants alleged or suspected to be corrupt who cannot be brought within the law by available evidence and who can only be brought to justice by certain rules of presumption which was intended to be met by this Act. Thus, there is an implied basis of classification so that no question of discrimination really arises. 1955 Cr LJ 784: AIR 1955 Cal 236 (239, 240, 241) (Pt D) (Prs 8, 9) (DB).

——Art. 14 — Discrimination.

Infringement of Art. 14 of the Constitution occurs where similarly situated or similarly circumstance individuals are treated differently by the same law. If the law creates a classification, which is reasonable and has a basis not capricious or arbitrary then such classification is not discrimination so as to be an infringement of Art. 14 of the Constitution and, therefore, bad. AIR 1951 S.C. 41 and AIR 1951 S.C. 318, Rel. on. 57 Cal WN 744: AIR 1953 Cal 758 (759) (Pt A) (Pr 10).

——Art. 14 — Reasonable classification not barred.

The fundamental right as to the equal protection of the laws and equality before the law oniy means that there should be equal operation of law in respect of all persons similarly circumstanced. The Legislature may make special laws applicable to particular classes provided there is a reasonable basis for the classification. 1953 Cri LJ 899: 57 Cal WN 350: AIR 1953 Cal 394 (395) (Pt A) (Pr 5) (DB).

——Art. 14 — Principle of classification.

The principle that the classification should be deducible from the terms of the Act itself including the preamble is applicable only in respect of Special Acts seeking for the purpose of a particular class of cases to supersede the ordinary criminal law of the country as contained in the Criminal Procedure Code and substitute therefor a procedure less advantageous to the accused. The rule does not affect the question of validity of the ordinary criminal law of the land as contained in the Criminal Procedure Code. AIR 1953 S. C. 123, Rel. on. 1953 Cri LJ 899: 57 Cal WN 350: AIR 1953 Cal 394 (396) (Pt C) (Pr 9) (DB).

——Art. 14 — Reasonable classification — Tests — Must have nexus with object of Act — Wholesale distribution of sugar entrusted to licensed dealers who are co-operative societies to the exclusion of those who are not — It is discrimination — Essential Commodities Act (1955), Ss. 5, 3 — Bombay Sugar Dealers Licensing Order (1959).

A State can make classification for the purpose of achieving particular legislative objects but requires that the classification must satisfy two conditions namely, (1) that the classification must be founded on an intelligible differentia which distinguishes those that are grouped together from others and (2) that that differentia must have a rational relation to the object sought to be achieved by the legislation. The classification may be made on different bases but it must not be arbitrary, artificial or evasive and it must rest always upon real and substantial distinction bearing a reasonable and just relation to the thing in respect of which the classification is made. AIR 1955 S. C. 191, Foll. The inhibition of Art. 14 applies not only to legislation but also to executive action. The action of the State Government under the Essential Commodities Act in entrusting wholesale distribution of sugar to Co-operative Societies to the exclusion of other licence-holders as a matter of policy is discriminatory between licence-holders who are Co-operative Societies and those who are not.

If the action of the State offended against the equal protection clause, it cannot be saved by resort to the directive principles of State policy namely that of the promotion of co-operative movement. (1961) 2 Guj LR 38: AIR 1961 Guj 38 (44, 45, 46, 47, 48) (Pt B) (Prs 12, 15, 17) (DB).

——Art. 14 — Rational classification.

The test of rational classification is generally applied for ascertaining whether any order is violative of the article. This classification means a differentia between the persons covered by the orders and those excluded, an object for which the order was passed and a nexus between the differentia and the object. Applying the aforesaid test to circular No. 1864/1887, dated 19th May, 1950 issued by the Director of Public Instruction, Hyderabad, it appears that its object is to carry effectively the policy of education in its primary stages being given through regional languages. The differentia between the public servants entrusted with giving effect to the aforesaid policy and those entrusted with the other functions of the state is obvious in the circular and the provisions that the teachers must satisfy the test of knowing the languages within a reasonable time with a view to give the instructions appears to be a rational nexus, and hence the impugned circular, cannot be held as violating the guarantee under Article 14. ILR (1953) Hyd 498: AIR 1953 Hyd 298 (302) (Pt D) (Pr 14) (DB).

——Art. 14 — Scope — Power of Legislature to make classification — What Court has to see.

It is well settled that it is open to a Legislature to make classification and the only thing that the Court has to see is as to whether the classification has been made on rational basis and further that there is no discrimination as between the persons constituting one class. AIR 1959 J & K 21 (23) (Pt C) (Pr 6) (DB).

● ——Art. 14 — Power of State Legislature to make special laws to attain particular object.

Mere differentiation or inequality of treatment does not 'per se' amount to discrimination within the inhibition of the equal protection clause. As the Legislature is the best judge of the need for different legislation for different areas it is not open to the Courts to sit in judgment over the wisdom and judgment of the Legislature in making the classification. AIR 1955 S. C. 191 Foll. Jagat Ram v. State of J. & K., AIR 1957 J & K 40 (43) (Pt A) (Pr 17) (FB).

——Art. 14 — 'Reasonable classification' — Classification having reasonable nexus — Validity.

A classification which is based on an intelligible principle, having a reasonable nexus with the object of legislation does not offend Art. 14. 1957 MPC 694: 1957 MPLJ 830: 1957 Jab LJ 1057: AIR 1958 Madh Pra 193 (196) (Pt C) (Pr 9).

——Art. 14 — Scope and applicability — Equality before law and equal protection of laws.

Equality before law means that among equals the law should be equal and should be equally administered and that the like should be treated alike. Hence, equality before the law does not mean that things which are different shall be treated as though they were the same. What it does mean is the denial of any special privilege by reason of birth, creed or the like and also equal subjection of all individuals and classes to the ordinary law of the land.

Therefore, the principle of equality enacted in Art. 14 does not absolutely prevent the State from discriminating. The State has the power of what is known as "classification" on a basis of rational distinctions relevant to the particular subject dealt with.

The meaning of equality contemplated by Art. 14 does not fetter the discretion of the State to pass appropriate laws to meet different situations and solve different problems that arise in the affairs of the State dedicated to the ideal of promoting the common weal of the nation entrusted to its charge. Thus, equality before law and equal protection of laws would not be offended by territorial discrimination based upon reasonable classification arising from the particular factual background relating thereto. 1955 Cr LJ 452: AIR 1955 Mad 100 (104, 105, 109) (Pt C) (Prs 16, 17 39).

——Art. 14 — Scope.

Equality before the law means that among equals the law should be equal and should be equally administered and that like should be treated alike. Class legislation discriminating against some and favouring others is prohibited; but legislation which in carrying out a public purpose is limited in its application is not prohibited if within the sphere of its operation it affects alike all persons similarly situated. But a classification if reasonable and is not arbitrary and is reasonably related to the object or the purpose for which the classification is introduced is not prohibited. Law in the ordinary sense is not confined merely to the substantive law but includes also the procedural law. ● ——Art. 14 — Differentiation abridging individual freedom — Validity of.

Per Viswanatha Sastri, J.: The guarantee of equality before law and equal protection of laws does not require that absolutely the same rules shall apply to all persons irrespective of differences of circumstances. The power of the State to ensure public health, safety, morals, is inherent in every State and it involves classification, differentiation and abridgement of individual freedom. So long as the power is exercised bona fide and in a reasonable manner for the end designed and subject to the express provisions of the Constitution the exercise of that power is not hit at by Art. 14, though to some extent it might trench upon the freedom of the individual citizen. ——Art. 14 — Scope.

Article 14 merely guarantees equal laws for equal men. All that it inhibits is a hostile legislation directed against a particular class of people may be on political, religious or other grounds. The equality clause is subject to the well-known doctrine of classification. Art. 14 is not intended to preserve the existing inequalities. It is not a negative doctrine. It is positive in its contents. 36 Mys LJ 139: ILR (1957) Mys 448: AIR 1958 Mys 132 (133) (Pt A) (Pr 3).

● ——Art. 14 — "Equality before the law" and "Equal protection of laws" — Meaning — Reasonable classification by law is not forbidden.

While both the expressions namely, 'equality before the law' and 'equal protection of the laws' aim at establishing what may be regarded as equality of legal status for all, there is some difference between these expressions. The former expression is somewhat a negative concept implying the absence of any special privilege in favour of an individual while the latter is a more positive concept implying equality of treatment in equal circumstances. There is, however, one dominant idea common to both the expressions, that is, equal justice. At the same time, equality before the law does not mean absolute equality of men, which is a physical impossibility. Nor does it mean that things which are different shall be treated as though they were the same. What it does mean is a denial of any special privilege by reason of birth, creed or the like, and also equal subjection of all individuals and classes to the ordinary law of the land.

Further, reasonable classification by law is not a denial of equal protection. What the constitutional guarantee forbids is class legislation but not classification which rests upon reasonable grounds of distinction. The classification permissible by the State extends to all kinds of activities and the State has wide discretion in the matter. It is only where there is no reasonable basis for a classification that legislation making such classification may be declared discriminatory.

Apart from the above, laws creating classifications have been upheld in several other cases on the ground that they were intended for the protection of individuals or a class or classes of persons or for the promotion of the public good. Where a law grants protection to a class which needs it, it has the effect of placing that class if not on a par with the rest of the community, at least as nearly so as is practicable. It would therefore be correct to say that the whole object of classification is to minimise and not to accentuate inequality.

But it clearly follows that a classification which allows some to do what all are not, in the public interest, allowed to do, will not be upheld. Sheo shankar v. State Govt. of Madhya Pradesh, 52 Cri LJ 1140: ILR (1951) Nag 646: AIR 1951 Nag 58 (86, 87) (Pt L) (Prs 185, 188, 195) (FB).

——Art. 14 — Equal protection of law.

All that Article 14 requires is that legislative classification must not be arbitrary but should be based on an intelligible principle having a reasonable relation to the object which the legislature seeks to attain. AIR 1956 Pepsu 58 (62) (Pt E) (Pr 17) (DB).

——Art. 14 — Equality before law — Meaning of.

'Equality before the law' only means that amongst equals the law should be equal and should be equally administered, and that the like should be treated alike. Equality before the law does not mean that persons who are different and can be discriminated as a class with regard to their position and character, should in every respect, be treated as if they were the same. Reasonable classification and grouping is always permissible. AIR 1956 Pepsu 14 (16) (Pt E) (Pr 12) (DB).

● ——Art. 14—Discrimination — Classification — Effect of.

It is in the nature of things impossible that all laws should have universal application, and that the Legislature has to be constantly engaged in devising laws to suit various classes of persons and to meet differing circumstances. Classification is, therefore, a necessary part of legislation and does not as such imply any discrimination intended to be prohibited by our Constitution. Shri Harish

● ——Art. 14 — Equality protection both as regards substantive and procedural laws.

Art. 14 guarantees to all persons the rights of equality before the law and equal protection of the laws within the territory of India. This Article not only guarantees equal protection as regards substantive laws but procedural laws also come within its ambit. The protection given by Art. 14 extends to all discriminatory actions, whether executive or legislative. (S) AIR 1956 SC 479 and AIR 1959 SC 149, Rel. on. The function of issuing passports vests with the Government of India by virtue of Art. 73 read with List I, Item 19 of the Seventh Schedule of the Constitution. By virtue of Art. 14 that function must be discharged by the Government of India without any discrimination. It must logically follow from the fundamental right of equality guaranteed by Art. 14 that the Government of India can either refuse passports to all Indian citizens or grant them to all Indian citizens. To grant passports to some and not to others involves the exercise of arbitrary and unregulated discretion which is repugnant to Art. 14. AIR 1954 Mad 240, Diss. from.

The fact that no such discriminatory law has been passed by the legislature cannot possibly enable the executive to claim an absolute and unfettered discretion in the matter of issuing passports.

——Arts. 14, 19 (1) (g) and 265 — "Authority of law" — Law and executive order—Gwalior Darbar Order dated 27th July, 1946, whether law.

The essence of the law is that it is enforceable in the Courts of law and is not capable of being rejected by the Courts as uncertain. The element of compulsion cannot be a valid criterion for distinguishing a law from an executive order and a decision taken for administrative purposes and enforced as such cannot by that enforcement become a law or acquire the force and effect of law.

A sugar factory having been erected in the former State of Gwalior, the Maharaja of Gwalior appointed a committee to consider the desirability of imposing a cane cess on the sugar company. The committee produced a report wherein it made certain recommendations for levying cane cess. When the report was submitted to the Maharaja he put down on it "Guzarish sanctioned" on 27th July, 1946.

Held (1) that the order dated 27th July, 1946 was only an executive order and not a law under Art. 265 and could not justify imposition of the cess on the company after 26th January, 1950. AIR 1951 SC 467, Disting.

(2) that assuming that the order was a law, it did not infringe the company's right guaranteed under Art. 19 (1) (g), as the cess did not put any restriction on the company's right under that Article.

(3) that as the cess was levied on the petitioner company alone and the other sugar factories were not required to pay any cess the levy of the cess was discriminatory and in contravention of Art. 14. Madh BLR 1955 Civ 17: Madh BLJ 1954 HCR 1413: AIR 1954 Madh B. 196 (200, 203) (Pt A) (Prs 14, 19) (DB).

The obligation thus imposed on the State, no doubt, enures for the benefit of all persons. Article 14 is an injunction to both the legislative as well as the executive organs of the State and the other subordinate authorities. ● ——Art. 14 — Introduction of small taxis at cheaper rate is not discriminatory — [Motor Vehicles Act (1939), S. 42.]

In construing Art. 14 the Courts should not adopt a doctrinaire approach which might well choke all beneficial legislation and that legislation which is based on a rational classification is permissible. A law applying to a class is constitutional if there is sufficient basis or reason for it. Thus, a statutory discrimination cannot be set aside as the denial of equal protection of the laws if any state of facts may reasonably be conceived to justify it. Where, therefore, in the interests and for the benefit of a section of the public small taxis have been introduced and cheaper rates have been fixed having regard to the size, horse power and expenses of running such cars, there is nothing unreasonable in this classification or any discrimination which infringes the provisions of Art. 14 of the Constitution. ——Art. 14 — Construction of — Classification and discrimination by Legislature.

No legislation in any practical sense is possible without some kind of classification and some kind of discrimination. The very nature and purpose of every legislation depend on the choice of some subject or others, to the exclusion of the rest and some arena for its operation. This selective quality is inherent and implicit in every legislation. The fundamental guarantee of Art. 14 of the Constitution should not be construed in such a manner as to make legislation impossible for all practical purposes. 88 Cal LJ 233: AIR 1951 Cal 539 (544) (Pt B) (Pr 28).

3. Mode of construing Act to test constitutionality.

● ——Art. 14 — Rule made under power vested by statute — Validity of — How determined.

In testing the validity of any rules, the Court has to consider the true scope and effect of the impugned rule itself and the decision of the question will have to be confined to the relevant considerations in respect of the said rule and no more. Just as the presence of one invalid rule cannot invalidate the other rules which may be valid, so the presence of a number of valid rules will not help to validate an impugned rule if it is otherwise invalid. Hence, it is not an acceptable argument that urges that the impugned rule cannot and need not be considered by itself but must also be treated as a part of a bigger scheme of rule and since the other rules are valid the impugned rule must also be treated as valid. Legislation enacted for the achievement of a particular object or purpose need not be all embracing. It is for the Legislature to determine what categories it would embrace within the scope of legislation and merely because certain categories which would stand on the same footing as those which are covered by the legislation are left out would not render legislation which has been enacted in any manner discriminatory and violative of the fundamental right guaranteed by Art. 14. ——Art. 14 — Right under, cannot be waived — Reasonable classification — What is — Particular provision of statute, if severable can be struck down.

Art. 14 has been placed on a very high pedestal, even amongst fundamental rights, and it has been declared that that fundamental right cannot be waived by a party.

The first requisite for reasonable classification is that the persons grouped together must be similarly circumstanced, and their position must be substantially the same as regards the subject-matter of the legislation. These principles would also apply while examining the constitutional validity of a particular provision of a statute. If all the provisions of a statute are closely interlinked and a reasonable basis for classification can be found applicable to all of them, the separate exmination of the constitutional validity of a particular provision may not arise. But if a provision is severable from the remaining provisions and it appears that the Legislature had in mind a separate basis for classification in respect of the particular provision, its constitutional validity will have to be examined independently. The Ministry of Defence passed an order on 20-4-1955 by which in modification of certain orders passed previously, certain rules were laid down for the computation of the seniority of clerks falling within the category of Extra Temporary Establishment Service. The petitioner, who was employed by the Ministry of Defence in 1942 as an Extra Temporary Establishment clerk, challenged the constitutionality of the order under Arts. 14 and 16 of the Constitution. It was the case of the petitioner that by reason of certain orders of Government there was an amalgamation of the service known as the non-industrial staff in the Extra Temporary Establishment with those in the Temporary Establishment and that, as a result, seniority in both these services had to be reckoned on the same basis, viz., the date when any employee entered service.

Held, that as before January 26, 1950, by reason of orders passed by Government, the rights of the petitioner and those like him had become settled, the petitioner could not invoke the constitutional guarantees under Part III of the Constitution for their enforcement, for challenging the legality of the orders passed before the Constitution, as the Constitution was not retrospective. The Extra Temporary Establishment came by reason of the Army Instructions of 1946, in regard to their own service, to be governed by uniform conditions of service, grades of pay, allowances, etc., (as in the case of temporary clerks under the Army Instructions of 1945) with option to the members of that service to opt for the new conditions which would have effect, again from September 1, 1944 in the event of their so opting. But the effect of the two Army Instructions was that the two services remained separate and were not amalgamated into a unified Service. In the absence of an express provision providing for a common basis of seniority based on length of service of the personnel falling under the two groups there was no intention of providing a common rule for determining seniority.

On the date when the Constitution came into force the position was that for the determination of the relative seniority between the Extra Temporary clerks and the Temporary clerks, while in the case of the former the date from which they should be deemed to have come into the regular establishment and the common roll was August 1, 1949, in the case of the latter it was from the date when they entered service. On this basis the petitioner (Extra Temporary clerk) could obviously not claim that any rights as to seniority which he possessed on the date when the Constitution came into force were, in any way, restricted or denied to him by the impugned order of April 20, 1955. In the circumstances the allegation that there had been an infringement of the fundamental right of the petitioner to equal protection of the laws under Art. 14 or equality of opportunity for employment under Art. 16 (1) must be held to have no factual basis. Kunj Behari Lal Agarwal v. Union of India, (1963) 2 SCJ 217: (1963) 2 SCR 1: (1962) 2 SCA 628: AIR 1963 SC 518 (524, 525, 526, 527) (Prs 16, 17, 21, 23).

● ——Art. 14 — Challenge to validity of statute on ground of contravention of Article — Pleading and proof.

When a citizen wants to challenge the validity of any statute on the ground that it contravenes Art. 14, specific, clear and unambiguous allegations must be made in that behalf and it must be shown that the impugned statute is based on discrimination and that such discrimination is not referable to any classification which is rational and which has nexus with the object intended to be achieved by the said statute. ● ——Art. 14 — Scope — Presumption as to constitutionality.

While Art. 14 forbids class legislation it does not forbid reasonable classification for the purposes of legislation and in order to pass the test of permissible classification two conditions must be fulfilled, namely (i) the classification must be founded on an intelligible differentia which distinguishes persons or things that are grouped together from others left out of the group and (ii) such differentia must have a rational relation to the object sought to be achieved by the statute in question. The classification may be founded on different bases namely, geographical, or according to objects or the occupations or the like and what is necessary is that there must be a nexus between the basis of classification and the object of the Act under consideration. There is always a presumption in favour of the constitutionality of an enactment and the burden is upon him, who attacks it, to show that there has been a clear violation of the constitutional principles. The Courts must presume that the legislature understands and correctly appreciates the needs of its own people, that its laws are directed to problems made manifest by experience and that its discriminations are based on adequate grounds. It must be borne in mind that the legislature is free to recognise degrees of harm and may confine its restrictions to those cases where the need is deemed to be the clearest and finally that in order to sustain the presumption of constitutionality the Court may take into consideration matters of common knowledge, matters of common report, the history of the times and may assume every state of facts which can be conceived existing at the time of legislation. ● ——Art. 14 — Application of presumption of constitutionality of an Act—(Interpretation of a Statute — Presumption of constitutionality).

Though the presumption is in favour of the constitutionality of a legislative enactment and it has to be presumed that a legislature understands and correctly appreciates the needs of its own people, when on the face of a statute there is no classification at all, and no attempt has been made to select any individual or group with reference to any differentiating attribute peculiar to that individual or group and not possessed by other, this presumption is of little or no assistance to the State. ● ——Art. 14 — Legislative discrimination — Presumption — Burden of proof — Discretion of Legislature — Right of Court to question.

A law applying to one person or one class of persons is constitutional if there is sufficient basis or reason for it. Any classification which is arbitrary and which is made without any basis is no classification and a proper classification must always rest upon some difference and must bear a reasonable and just relation to the things in respect of which it is proposed.

The presumption is always in favour of the constitutionality of an enactment, and the burden is upon him who attacks it to show that there has been a clear transgression of the constitutional principles.

Per Das, J. :— If there is a classification, the Court will not hold it invalid merely because the law might have been extended to other persons who in some respects might resemble the class for which the law was made for the legislature is the best judge of the needs of the particular classes and to estimate the degree of evil so as to adjust its legislation according to the exigency found to exist. If, however, there is, on the face of the statute, no classification at all or none on the basis of any apparent difference specially peculiar to any particular individual or class and not applicable to any other person or class of persons and yet the law hits only the particular individual or class it is nothing but an attempt to arbitrarily single out an individual or class for discriminating and hostile legislation. The presumption in favour of the legislature cannot in such a case be legitimately stretched so as to throw the impossible onus on the complainant to prove affirmatively that there are other individuals or class of individuals who also possess the precise amount of the identical qualities which are attributed to him so as to form a class with him. At the same time, while good faith and knowledge of the existing conditions on the part of a Legislature are to be presumed, if ex facie there is nothing in the law or the surrounding circumstances to show the basis of classification, the presumption of constitutionality cannot be resorted to for holding that the 'discrimination' is justified for some undisclosed and unknown reasons. 1961 MPLJ 652: 1961 Jab LJ 690: 1961 MPC 356: AIR 1961 Madh Pra 282 (284) (Pt C) (Pr 4) (DB).

There is a strong presumption in favour of the constitutional validity of a law made by a competent Legislature; and it is the duty of the Courts to adopt such construction as will, without doing violence to the language of the statute or words used, reconcile it with the Constitution. 7. Legislation affecting single person.

●——Art. 14 — Legislation affecting single person — Special procedure for recovery of dues from customers of State Bank — Law providing for recovery in the same manner as revenue — Territorial discrimination due to historical reasons — No contravention of Art. 14 — Patiala Recovery of State Dues Act (4 of 2002, Bk.) — Constitutional validity.

Per Majority.—While Art. 14, prohibits discriminatory legislation directed against one individual or class of individuals, it does not forbid reasonable classification, and for this purpose even one person or group of persons can be a class.

The Patiala State Bank is a class by itself and it will be within the power of the State to enact a law, for example, Patiala Recovery of State Dues Act 4 of 2002 (Bk.) under which dues to the Bank were expressly included in the definition of 'State dues' with respect to it. The differentia between the Patiala State Bank and the other Banks has a rational bearing on the object of the legislation. If the funds of the Patiala State Bank are State Funds, a law which assimilates the procedure for the determination and recovery of amounts due to the Bank from its customers to that prescribed for the determination and recovery of arrears of revenue must be held to have a just and reasonable relation to the purpose of the legislation. A law which provides for State funds being advanced to customers through State Bank can also provide for its being recovered in the same manner as revenue.

In setting up separate authorities for determination of the disputes the Patiala Recovery of State Dues Act does not infringe Art. 14 of the Constitution. Nor can the impugned Act and Rules made thereunder be attacked as offending Art. 14 after the merger of the Pepsu Union in the State of Punjab under the States Reorganization Act, 1956, on the ground that they continue to be in force in the territories of the erstwhile Pepsu Union, but have no operation in the other parts of the State of Punjab. Prior to the integration there could be no question of discrimination under Art. 14 because that can arise only with reference to a law passed by the same authority. And if after reorganisation of States and integration of the Pepsu Union in the State of Punjab, different laws apply to different parts of the State, that has always been recognised as a proper basis of classification under Art. 14. AIR 1959 Punj 440; Affirmed.

Per Subba Rao, J., Contra.—The provisions of the Patiala Recovery of State Dues Act are constitutionally void as they infringe Art. 14 of the Constitution.

It must be remembered that a citizen is entitled to a fundamental right of equality before the law and that the doctrine of classification is only a subsidiary rule evolved by Courts to give a practical content to the said doctrine.

The guarantee of equal protection applies against substantive as well as procedural laws. It is clear that under our Constitution every person is entitled to equal treatment under similar circumstances in the matter of his access to courts.

If there is a reasonable basis for the classification, special tribunals may be created for the trial of cases of a special nature; but even so, it is not permissible to make differentiation between cases belonging to the same class or nature.

The historical origin of the bank, in the circumstances, has no relevance, for the Court is judging the constitutional validity of the provisions of the Act in respect of debts advanced after the advent of the Constitution. The complaint is that the Act, in effect and substance, empowers their creditor to determine the extent of their liability and to decide on their objections to the creditor's claims, and that the said procedure is against all principles of natural justice. It is no answer to that argument that the creditor, being a department of the Government, can be relied upon to decide the case fairly, after following the principles of judicial procedure. The amendment of S. 7-C (b) by the Punjab Act (VIII of 1957) is of general application, the age being raised to sixty-seven with reference to all persons holding the office under that section. The occasion which inspired the enactment of the statute might be the impending retirement of a particular individual. ——Art. 14 — Legislation affecting single person — Corporation created by Rehabilitation Finance Administration Act (1948) is creditor of public character and class by itself — Additional summary procedure to recover loans given to such a creditor under S. 15 of the Rehabilitation Finance Administration Act, 1948 is discretionary with Administration — Art. 14 of the Constitution is not violated.

The Rehabilitation Finance Administration, a Corporation created by the Rehabilitation Finance Administration Act, 1948, is a class by itself. It is not like an ordinary creditor. It will be seen from the analysis of the statute that it deals with public funds and it gives facilities to a specified class of borrowers and not all borrowers. All the features of provisions of the Act go to show that the Rehabilitation Finance Administration is a creditor of a public character and is a class by itself and can be rationally separated from the other class of creditors. That also is reasonable classification with intelligible and rational differentia. In such a context, that additional remedy as given to such a creditor to recover money from such a special class of borrowers, is not at all discriminatory so as to violate Art. 14 of the Constitution.

An Administration like the Rehabilition Finance Administration under the Rehabilitation Finance Administration Act, 1948 is not the State or the Government itself, but that does not make the multiple remedies and their choice constitutionally bad. A summary procedure to recover the loan as arrears of land revenue in the context of the Rehabilitation Finance Administration Act is not discriminatory at all. Section 15 of the Act says that this is without prejudice to any other remedy provided by law. The discretion is certainly and rightly left with the Administration as creditor. It may in certain cases be quite justified in exercising its discretion to proceed against a borrower by way of a suit or by other remedies provided by law. That does not make S. 15 of the Act itself unconstitutional or violate Art. 14 of the Constitution. ——Art. 14 — Classification allowed under the Article — Nature of — Fixing of grades by Life Insurance Corporation — Held on facts that there was no discrimination.

Article 14 of the Constitution permits a classification which is reasonable and even a single individual can be treated as a class by himself, if there are special circumstances or reasons applicable to him alone and not applicable to others and that the difference which will warrant a different classification need not be great. 9. 'The State' — Meaning of.

● ——Arts. 14 12 and 13 — Applicability — Notification by Government — Constitutionality of — If can be questioned.

Article 14 protects all person from discrimination by the legislative as well as by the executive organ of the State. "State" is defined in Art. 12 as including the Government and 'law' is defined in Art. 13 as including any notification or order. Hence it is open to a person aggrieved to question the constitutionality of a notification. Ram Krishna Dalmia v. Justice S. R. ——Arts. 14, 12 — Discrimination by executive in administrating.

Equality before the law and equal protection of the laws include the conception that the law being what it is, its application should be universal in every case. The term 'the State' as defined in Art. 12 includes the executive authority. Hence deliberate systematic discrimination practised by an executive or administrative body or officer in carrying out the provisions of an Act which are themselves fair would be a violation of the injunction under Art. 14 as much as a legislative enactment which discriminates between different classes in an unconstitutional manner. 1956 All WR (HC) 207: 1956 All LJ 276: 1956 Cr LJ 1031: AIR 1956 All 520 (522) (Pt B) (Pr 6).

——Art. 14 — Scope.

Art. 14 gives protection against non-observance of equality before the law, only against the State.

——Art. 14 — 'State' — Meaning of.

The word 'the State' is used in Art. 14 in the special sense understood in Art. 12, which takes it out of the category of the word "person". It is only when the State engages in any activity which is outside the scope of its ordinary functions of Government that the question of its being categorised as a 'person' for purposes of Art. 14 can arise. AIR 1951 All 257 (FB), Rel. on.

Further, the State is not subject to Art. 14 solely because it enters into a contract. In respect of contracts also, the test is that they would be excluded from the operation of Art. 14 if they are incidental to the ordinary functions of Government. AIR 1955 Nag 177 (178, 179) (Pt C) (Prs 8, 10) (DB).

——Art. 14 — Reasonable classification — Entry 16, Sch. I, Bombay Court-Fees Act (36 of 1959) — Validtiy.

The litigant tax-payer has to pay court-fee when he prefers an application under S. 66 (2) of the Income-tax Act to the High Court under entry 16 of Sch. I of the Court-fees Act of 1959 and the Commissioner of Income-tax is not required to pay any court-fee when he goes to the High Court with an application under that provision. Government is however a distinct class and also a taxing authority. State itself imposes court-fees and there can be nothing objectionable in enacting that the Commissioner of Income-tax should not be under an obligation to pay court-fees under entry 16 in Schedule I of the Court-fees Act of 1959 when he prefers an application under S. 66 (2) to the High Court. The object of the levy of court-fees is administration of justice and there is nexus between the basis of classification and the object of the provision in question. Hence in the provision of entry 16 of Sch. I to the Court-fees Act of 1959 there is no unreasonable classification and there is nothing which can be said to be palpably unreasonable and arbitrary. C. The State as representing the society is not included in the word 'person' in Art. 14 of the Constitution. Merely because the State has been given the right of appeal against an appellate order of acquittal which right has not been given to a private individual, there is no discrimination under Art. 14 of the Constitution. Hence, S. 417 (1), Cr. P. Code, is not ultra vires of the Constitution. ——Art. 14 — West Bengal Land Development and Planning Act (21 of 1948) — Validity.

The Act cannot be held to offend Article 14 of the Constitution on the ground that it discriminates between the citizens and non-citizens. It may be that the Act deprives a citizen of his property with a view to provide accommodation for refugee but that does not offend Art. 14. The refugees form a class by themselves. They do not stand on the same footing as a citizen. Their status and position are different. They are differently circumstanced. Moreover the Act does not expressly purport to be dealing with aliens. All immigrants need not necessarily be aliens or foreigners. Besides, the West Bengal Act was enacted for various other purposes which are mentioned in S. 2 (d) of the Act. Further merely because the application of a particular statute may in some cases actually result in discrimination, it does not make the whole Act void as offending Art. 14 of the Constitution. ——Art. 14 — Discrimination between citizens in a State and those outside it.

In order to determine whether a particular order is discriminatory it is immaterial that the Act produces inequality between the citizens of the State affected by the State action and those outside the State not so affected. The crucial test is that the ambit of the powers possessed by the State Legislature depends upon the proper construction of the statute conferring those powers. Once that test is satisfied it matters not that inequalities of any kind, as a result of comparison of interest of the citizens of the State and of those outside the State, are created. AIR 1953 Him Pra 41 (46) (Pt D) (Pr 23).

——Art. 14 — Applicability — 'Any person' — Meaning of — If includes States or Government.

The natural and obvious meaning of the expression 'person' is a living human being. In law the word includes natural persons and artificial persons like corporations and joint stock companies, but it does not include a State or Government. Though in common parlance 'Government' is synonymous with 'State', in actual fact the State is a country or assemblage of people while the Government is the political agency through which it acts. It is true that the State is capable of suing and being sued but that is so not because the State is a person, but because Art. 300 of the Constitution has made an express provision in that behalf. Thus neither a State nor a Government can fall within the ambit of the expression 'person' appearing in Art. 14 of the Constitution. 59 Pun LR 35: ILR (1957) Punj 310: AIR 1957 Punj 150 (151) (Pt A) (Pr 4) (DB).

The Orissa Motor Vehicles (Regulation of Stage Carriage and Public Carrier's Service) Act (36 of 1947) and the Orissa Motor Vehicles (Amendment) Act (1 of 1949) cannot be said to offend Art. 14 of the Constitution on the ground of zonal or territorial discrimination in the application of these Articles. The zonal or territorial or geographical division of several districts of the State of Orissa for implementation of the scheme of National State Transport by either the formation of a Joint-Stock Company or the running of the State Transport Service was based on the availability of the transport services acquired by the State Government from the various merging States. If such a division was made having regard to the situation as it thus obtained, no challenge could be made against it on the ground of discrimination or the denial of equal protection of laws. What was essential was that, as between the owners of stage carriage services operating on a particular route or in a particular area, no discrimination should be made and all should be treated alike. If each one of such owners had the same Act applied to them they could not be heard to complain about any discrimination. Ramchandra v. ●——Art. 14—Marwar Land Revenue Act (40 of 1949), Ss. 81 to 86 — Classification on territorial basis — Ss. 81 to 86 do not infringe Art. 14.

What Art. 14 prohibits is the unequal treatment of persons similarly situated. Hence, when the contention is that Ss. 81 to 86, Marwar Land Revenue Act are void as being repugnant to Art. 14 of the Constitution, then before the petitioners can claim the protection of Art. 14, it is incumbent on them to establish that the conditions which prevail in other areas in the State of Rajasthan are similar to those which obtain in Marwar.

A classification may properly be made on territorial basis if that is germane to the purposes of the enactment. Having regard to the fact that the conditions of tenants vary from locality to locality, a tenancy legislation, such as Ss. 81 to 86 of the said Act, restricted to a portion of a State cannot be held on this ground alone to contravene Art. 14 of the Constitution. Article 14 of the Constitution does not inhibit territorial classification. All that is required is that the classification should be based on an intelligible differentia and a nexus between the classification and the object of the enactment of a rule should exist.

Thus the allocation of 30 per cent. of the seats to the students of Secunderabad and Hyderabad as against 70 per cent. of seats reserved for the rest of the Telangana area does not infringe Art. 14 of the Constitution as, in that case, such a nexus subsists as the idea is to get the best

In the Presidency Town of Calcutta there is special law not only in respect of investigation but in respect of many other matters, for example, the administration of civil law by the Original Side of the High Court and the administration of criminal law by the Presidency Magistrates and so on. Accordingly it cannot be said that special provisions for investigation applicable to the Presidency Town of Calcutta barring the application of Ss. 162 and 172, Cri. P. When several States merge to form a new State, the diverse laws of the component States can be allowed to be continued without being hit by Art. 14 of the Constitution provided there is some justification for the diversity in the laws and if such continuance is necessary for the welfare of all classes within a particular territory. A classification can be made on territorial basis but it must be germane to the purposes of the enactment. The justification for the continuance of diverse laws in such circumstances cannot be rested solely on the ground of convenience or on the fact that as a merger had taken place the laws of the component States had to be continued. ——Art. 14 — Territorial discrimination — Madras City Police Act (3 of 1888), S. 65 — Validity of Act.

Neither the Madras City Police Act, 1888, in general nor S. 65 in particular offends Art. 14 of the Constitution of India. Section 65 of the Act is not, therefore, invalid on that ground.

The provisions of the Madras City Police Act, 1888, came into existence as a result of the factual background and the Legislature had to make a distinction between the Police Act intended purely for an urban area like the city of Madras which was the only big town then and the mofussil. Provisions like S. 65 had to be inserted in the City Police Act on account of the circumstances incidental to a growing town like Madras arising out of chaotic surroundings. The town while growing on the commercial side, was, on account of its attracting adventures and a large floating population, developing fast in the criminal side also. The facilities for detection in small places where everyone is known to the other could not exist in a cosmopolitan place. That is why the select committee has described the section as a useful provision. Section 65 only lays down a presumption and nothing more and in laying down the presumption the Legislature has not yet gone beyond the limits set out by the standard text writers which would make a presumption of this nature repugnant to the "due process of law" provision of the Constitution. In fact it does not even proceed beyond the usual presumption under S. 114, illustration (a) of the Evidence Act. The usefulness of the provision has not diminished with the passage of time and has not in any way become objectionable or discriminating. An Act or enactment would not be invalid merely because it is not put into force in the entire State and is given effect to only in selected places. What is to be seen in such cases is whether the classification is arbitrary and if it is based on a principle which has no relation to the object which the Legislature seeks to attain by enforcing an enactment. The classification made in the Mysore Prohibition Act is not, as its Preamble shows, arbitrary and it has a reasonable relation to the object which the Legislature seeks to attain. The Act is, therefore, valid and does not offend Art. 14. AIR 1953 SC 404, Foll. 1955 Cri LJ 1272: AIR 1955 Mys 116 (118) (Pt C) (Prs 10, 11, 12).

It is not necessary for a law to be valid that it must operate in the entire territory of the State. ——Art. 14 — Bihar Koshi Area (Restoration of Lands to Raiyats) Act (30 of 1951), S. 1 (2) — Act does not contravene Art. 14.

The preamble refers to the floods of the Kosi river and to lands of raiyats which were sold for arrears of rent or which were treated as abandoned in the absence of the raiyats from the village affected by the Kosi floods. The preamble also indicates that the districts of Bhagalpur, Monghyr, Purnea and Darbhanga were chosen because those districts are affected by floods in the Kosi river. The geographical classification is a good classification because there is a nexus or connection between the classification and the object of the statute. Hence it cannot be said that Bihar Act, 30 of 1951, contravenes Art. 14 of the Constitution, on the ground that the Act singled out certain areas, namely, the districts of Bhagalpur, Monghyr. 1956 BLJR 760: 1956 Pat LR 540: ILR 35 Pat 847: AIR 1957 Pat 44 (50, 51) (Pt D) (Pr 18) (DB).

On merger the laws which prevailed in the territories of erstwhile Pepsu State have been preserved with regard to the aforesaid territories until the legislature of the present State of Punjab makes a different provision, and it cannot be said that there is no reasonable basis for classification in view of the aforesaid reasons. There is obviously discrimination in the matter and in these circumstances the Courts have to see whether this discrimination can be justified. Held, that the Jaipur Hitkarni Committee Rules did not provide a better procedure as compared to the fixation of maintenance allowance by Courts. ● ——Art. 14 — Taxation laws — Tests to determine whether a law offends equality clause — Duty of Court.

Though a law ex facie appears to treat all that fall within a class alike, if in effect it operates unevenly on persons or property similarly situated, it may be said that the law offends the equality clause. It will then be the duty of the Court to scrutinise the effect of the law carefully to ascertain its real impact on the persons or property similarly situated. Conversely, a law may treat persons who appear to be similarly situated differently; but on investigation they may be found not to be similarly situated. If there is equality and uniformity within each group the law will not be condemned as discriminative, though due to some fortuitous circumstances arising out of a peculiar situation some included in a class get an advantage over others, so long as they are not singled out for special treatment. Taxation law is not an exception to this doctrine. But in the application of the principles the Courts permit a larger discretion to the Legislature in the matter of classification, so long it adheres to the fundamental principles underlying the said doctrine. The power of the Legislature to classify is of wide range and flexibility so that it can adjust its system of taxation in all proper and reasonable ways.

The validity of a classification does not wholly depend upon the source of law. What is important is to ascertain the existing circumstances in the two parts merged into one by historical events in order to determine whether the differences between the two have a reasonable nexus to the object of the said law.

It is true taxation law cannot claim immunity from the equality clause of the Constitution. The taxation statute shall not also be arbitrary and oppressive but at the same time the Court cannot, for obvious reasons meticulously scrutinize the impact of its burden on different persons or interests. ——Art. 14 — Scope — Equal protection of laws — Taxation law whether offends Art. 14 — Principles to be applied.

The phrase "equal protection of laws" in the sphere of taxation, which power the State has, does not mean that the tax burden should be imposed equally on each individual, object of the tax, but what it does mean is that the persons under same circumstances or similarly situated and are owning property of same character or value should be taxed by the same standard, so that if there is no reasonable basis behind the classification made in a taxing statute, that provision will be struck down as violative of Art. 14. In all such matters what has to be determined is whether there is a reasonable basis for classification in the impugned statute. It has been recognised that courts permit a greater latitude in the exercise of discretion by Legislature in regard to classification for taxing purposes. It is equally well established by the pronouncements of the Supreme Court that legislation which does not contain provisions directly discriminatory, may yet offend against the guarantee of equal protection where it confers upon the executive an unguided and uncontrolled discretionary power in the application of the law, such as in the case where the executive is authorised to select the persons or objects to which it would be applicable or to grant exemption to certain persons without providing for any guide or standard for such discrimination. ——Art. 14 — Taxation laws — Sales-tax — Validity of.

The requirements as to equal protection of laws do not forbid legislative classifications, provided such classifications rest on some difference germane to the purpose of the statute. With reference to taxing statutes, the Legislature has considerable latitude in making classifications. The State has power to adjust its taxing system with a fair and reasonable degree of equality. But this latitude in manner of classification does not enable a State to classify so arbitrarily as to subvert the fundamental doctrine of equal protection of the laws. There is a strong presumption in favour of the validity of legislative classification and it is for the person who seeks to question it, to allege and prove that the classification is obnoxious to the constitutional prohibition. ——Arts. 14 and 265 — Cess and tax — Cess levied for particular purpose but not earmarked for that purpose.

Classification in taxation is permissible but as the essence of a tax is the absence of quid pro quo the classification cannot obviously be based on the element of quid pro quo.

Thus where the receipts of the cess were credited in the general revenues and not earmarked for promoting the object with which it was levied, it cannot be said that the cess was imposed for conferring some special benefit; it becomes virtually a tax and the quid pro quo element on which reasonable classification can be based ceases to exist. Section 3, Income-tax Act (1922).

——Art. 14 — Income-tax Act (11 of 1922), as amended in 1937, Ss. 3, 4, 16 (3) (a) (ii) and 40 — Validity — If discriminatory.

It cannot be said that within the class that falls within the purview of S. 16 (3) (a) (ii) of the Income-tax Act, there is no equality in the operation of the taxing provision. Mere differentiation or inequality of treatment does not per se amount to discrimination within the inhibition of the equal protection clause. The classification being reasonable, there is no denial of the equal protection of the laws within the meaning of Art. 14 of the Constitution.

Under S. 16 (3) (a) (ii) of the Act, the income of the minor is liable for inclusion in the total income of the father. Section 40 of the Act provides for assessment on the guardian or trustee of a minor. This section does not affect the incidence of tax under Ss. 3 and 4 which are the charging sections. Where the income is received by the guardian on behalf of a beneficiary, the guardian is made liable. Section 40 and the impugned provision are different in scope and content. As such there is no conflict between the two provisions. (1960) 2 Andh WR 20: (1960) 39 ITR 629: ILR (1960) 2 Andh Pra 441: AIR 1960 Andh Pra 614 (616) (Pt B) (Pr 13) (DB).

——Art. 14 — Income-tax Act (1922), S. 3 — Association of persons — Levy of tax on — Discretion vested in I. T. Officer to tax association or its members — Section 3 is not discriminatory — It does not offend Art. 14.

That part of S. 3 of the Income-tax Act (1922), which enables the imposition of tax on the 'association of persons or the members of the association individually' does not violate the equality clause contained in Art. 14 of the Constitution even though the taxing authorities are vested with the power to tax on association of persons or the members of the association individually according to their discretion. The mere fact that the Income-tax Department can treat the 'principal officer' as the representative of the association does not amount to any discrimination. Reading the relevant provisions of the Act, it is apparent that the Act does not vest any uncontrolled power or discretion on the part of the authorities to tax an association or its members without any standard or criterion whatsoever. If the authorities find an association of persons and a return is made of its income by the principal officer or any member, it is bound to assess the entity as such. The alternative of assessing the individual member would come in only in a case where the association itself cannot be taxed as such for reasons which cannot be exhaustively listed. The fact that there is some discretion left in the assessing officer cannot be a ground to condemn the provision. It is well known that Statutes do vest the authorities with discretion in the matter of administering the law, and it is equally well known that discretion means judicial discretion. Properly understood, the charging section does not confer any despotic power on the department to treat associations differently and tax with unequal hands or to adopt one mode or the other governed only by its will. There is sufficient indication in the scheme, design and policy of the Act to fetter free and unbridled taxing power. Section 5, Income-tax Act (1922).

● —— Arts. 14, 19 (1) (g), 32 and 226 — Income-tax Act (1922), Ss. 5 (7-A) and 64 — Validity Whether discriminatory — Whether unreasonable restriction on fundamental right to carry on trade — Abuse of power — Remedy of aggrieved party.

Section 5 (7-A) of the Income-tax Act is not violative of Art. 14 of the Constitution and also does not impose any unreasonable restriction on the fundamental right to carry on trade or business enshrined in Art. 19 (1) (g) of the Constitution. If there is any abuse of power, it can be remedied by appropriate action either under Art. 226 or under Art. 32 of the Constitution and what can be struck down is not the provision contained in S. 5 (7-A) of the Act but the order passed thereunder which may be mala fide or violative of these fundamental rights.

The infringement of a right under S. 64 (1) and (2) by the order of transfer under S. 5 (7-A) of the Act is not a material infringement. It does not involve a denial of equal rights for the simple reason that even after such transfer the case is dealt with under the normal procedure which is prescribed in the Act. There is thus no differential treatment and no scope for the argument that the particular assessee is discriminated against with reference to others similarly situated. Even if there is a possibility of discriminatory treatment of persons falling within the same group or category, such possibility cannot necessarily invalidate the piece of legislation.

Abuse of power cannot be easily assumed where the discretion is vested in high officials. There is moreover, a presumption that public officials will discharge their duties honestly and in accordance with the rules of law. AIR 1956 SC 44; (1905) 199 US 552, Rel. on. This presumption, however, cannot be stretched too far and cannot be carried to the extent of always holding that there must be some undisclosed and unknown reason for subjecting certain individuals or corporations to hostile and discriminatory treatment. (1897) 165 US 150, Rel. on.

If, in a particular case, the assessee seeks to impeach the order of transfer as an abuse of power pointing out circumstances which prima facie would make out the exercise of the power discriminatory qua him, it will be incumbent on the authority to explain the circumstances under which the order has been made. The Court will, in that event, scrutinize these circumstances having particular regard to the object sought to be achieved by the enactment of S. 5 (7-A) of the Act, and come to its own conclusion as to the bona fides of the order and if it is not satisfied that the order was made by the authorities in bona fide exercise of the power vested in them under S. 5 (7-A) of the Act, it will certainly quash the same.

The power which is vested in the Commissioner of Income-tax or the Central Board of Revenue, as the case may be, under S. 5 (7-A) of the Act is not a naked and arbitrary power, unfettered, unguided or uncontrolled so as to enable the authority to pick and choose one assessee out of those similarly circumstanced thus subjecting him to discriminatory treatment as compared with others who fall within the same category. The power is guided and controlled by the purpose which is to be achieved by the Act itself, viz., the charge of income-tax, the assessment and collection thereof, and is to be exercised for the more convenient and efficient collection of the tax. ——Art. 14 — Equal protection of law — Income-tax Act (1922), S. 5, sub-sections (7-A) and (7-B) — If contravene Art. 14.

In order that a statute is unconstitutional and contravenes the equal protection clause it must be shown that (1) as a result of that statute the person affected by it will be subjected to a different treatment in the matter of procedure and remedies available. (2) It must be shown that the law is administered to the disadvantage of the complainant. (3) The good faith of the officials acting within the ambit of the statute is to be presumed and mere suspicion is not enough. (4) The mere fact that under a particular statute one particular person is proceeded against and another is not, is not destructive of the equal protection clause.

Sub-sections (7-A) and (7-B) of S. 5, Income-tax Act by themselves do not contain any element of discrimination and affect neither the procedure nor the remedies, nor do they increase the punitory burden on an assessee. Hence the constitutionality of sub-sections (7-A) and (7-B) of S. 5, Income-tax Act, cannot be challenged on the ground that they contravene the equal protection of the law clause in Art. 14 of the Constitution. (1956) 29 ITR 330: ILR (1957) Punj 57: AIR 1956 Punj 148 (153) (Pr 29) (DB).

The true scope and effect of S. 12, Finance Act, 1950, seems to be that it is for the Central Government to determine if any difficulty of the nature indicated in the section has arisen and then to make such order, or give such direction, as appears to it to be necessary to remove the difficulty. Parliament has left the matter to the executive. Hence, Notification adding an Explanation to Para. 2 of Taxation Laws (Part B States) (Removal of Difficulties) Order, 1950, is validly made under S. 12 and is not ultra vires the powers conferred on the Central Government by that section. And further, the said notification creates no unequal treatment of persons in a like situation; it applies to all who are in a like situation, namely, all those to whom para. 2 of the said Removal of Difficulties Order, 1950, applies. Hence, the challenge to the notification based on Art. 14 is wholly unsubstantial. Commr. of I.-T., Hyderabad v. ——Art. 14 — Reasonable classification — Income-tax Act (1922), S. 10 (2) (6) (b) Proviso — Validity of.

Article 14 interdicts only class legislation but not legislation based upon reasonable classification. The permissible classification should be conditioned by its being based upon an intelligible differentia which distinguishes persons or things that are grouped together from others left out of the group and this differentia must have a rational relation to the object sought to be achieved by the enactment. The very idea underlying proviso to S. 10 (2) (6) (b), I.-T. Act (1922) is to afford an incentive for industrial development. The Parliament thought that such a rebate would enable the industrialists to invest money in the purchase of new machinery which would be conducive to the growth of industry and to effectuate that intention enacted clause (6). At the same time, the Parliament did not want that this concession should be abused. So, conditions were imposed to discourage the sale of machinery or plant in regard to which rebate was obtained. The reason of permitting sale in favour of Government is that the assessee will not get any advantage out of the sale to Government because he will be forced to sell it at the written down value. It is open to the Parliament to give certain concessions to an assessee subject to certain conditions. The effect of the impugned provision is only to grant a concession subject to the conditions contemplated by the proviso. This provision does not discriminate between one set of assessees and another. All the assesees claiming development rebate are placed on an equal footing. No one is prevented from making a sale of the plant or machinery to Government. The assessees similarly situated are similarly treated by this clause. Moreover, it is open to the legislature to put the Government and the ordinary assessees in two different groups and that would be a reasonable classification. The nexus between the two is the desire of the Parliament to prevent the abuse of this concession. Hence, the impugned proviso is valid. 44 ITR 708 (SC), Rel. on; AIR 1963 SC 1356 and AIR 1954 SC 545, Not applied. (1964) 1 ITJ 33: (1964) 1 Andh WR 42: (1965) 55 ITR 159: ILR (1965) Andh Pra 325: AIR 1965 Andh Pra 196 (199, 200) (Pt A) (Prs 19, 20, 21) (DB).

Section 16, Income-tax Act (1922).

● ——Art. 14 — Permissible classification under — Test of — S. 16 (3) (a) (i) and (ii) do not contravene Art. 14 — Income-tax Act (1922), S. 16 (3) (a) (i), (ii).

What Art. 14 prohibits is class legislation and not reasonable classification for the purpose of legislation. Two conditions are laid down for passing the test of permissible classification, namely, (i) the classification must be founded on an intelligible differentia which distinguishes persons or things that are grouped together from others left out of the group, and (ii) that the differentia must have rational relation to the object sought to be achieved by the statute in question.

Under S. 16 (3) (a) (i) and (ii), Income-tax Act, an individual is taxed on the income of his wife or his minor children, if he carries on business in partnership with his wife or if he admits his minor sons to the benefits of the partnership. An individual, if he carries on business in partnership with a third party, will be liable only to pay tax on his share of the partnership income. It cannot be said that there is no differentia between the two groups; the said differentia has also rational relation with the object of the statute as S. 16 (3) (a) (i) and (ii) was enacted with the object of preventing evasion of tax. The Legislature, therefore, selected for the purpose of classification only that group of persons who in fact are used as a cloak to perpetrate fraud on taxation. AIR 1954 Mad 1120, Approved. ——Art. 14 — Remedies under S. 28 (4) and Ss. 51 and 52, Income-tax Act, if mutually exclusive — Article 14 invalidates S. 28 (4).

The two provisions contained in Ss. 51 and 52 on the one hand, and S. 28 on the other are not in their nature mutually exclusive, being directed to secure very different objectives. Undoubtedly there may be overlapping in some concrete instances but every case that falls within S. 52 need not necessarily also be within the scope of S. 28 (1) (c). The function and purpose of S. 28 (4) is to make provision for a statutory concession to the assessee in the overlapping cases. The two remedies or proceedings can be taken at the same time. But a concession has been granted to the defaulting or evading assessee by S. 28 (4), the concession being that if a penalty had been levied from an assessee a prosecution on the same facts is not to be launched. If in their nature the two remedies are not mutually exclusive and are concurrent, the grant of a concession to the assessee in the form of a provision in S. 28 (4) does not alter the situation and make the two provisions mutually exclusive for the purpose of attracting the vice of unequal protection of the laws forbidden by Art. 14. Article 14 is therefore not attracted to invalidate S. 28 (4). (1955) 28 ITR 601: 68 Mad LW 812: (1955) 2 Mad LJ 477: AIR 1956 Mad 1 (4, 5) (Pt B) (Prs 12, 13) (DB).

Proceedings under the Income-tax Act, 1922, were started against B on the basis of his successful claim in a suit brought against him by A that he was a partner and not a munim of A. In these income-tax proceedings against B to which A was not a party an order was made on 18-2-1957 that a notice be issued against A in respect of his assessment years 1944 to 1947.

Held Per Das and Kapur, JJ.: As the time limit fixed by S. 34 (1) had expired long before the second proviso to sub-section (3) came into force, the Income-tax Officer had no jurisdiction to issue the notice in respect of the assessment years, 1944 to 1947 and the proviso did not in express terms or by necessary implication revive a remedy which had been lost before 1-4-1952.

Per Sarkar, J.: That A was not a party to the proceedings started against B, and that the proviso to S. 34 (3) of the Income-tax Act, 1922, as amended in 1953, was invalid as offending Art. 14 of the Constitution. Section 31 of the amending Act, 1953, did not, therefore save the proceedings against A. AIR 1963 SC 1394, Foll.

Per Hidayatullah and Raghubar Dayal, JJ.: The assessment in this case was the result of a direction and the second proviso to S. 34 (3) as amended in 1953 governed this case. Per Sarkar, J.: Proviso 2 to S. 34 (3) offends Art. 14 of the Constitution and is therefore invalid. In so far as it affects persons other than assessee it is void.

Per Hidayatullah and Raghubar Dayal, JJ.: Those whose tax liability has not been discharged for one reason or another form a distinct class of persons. Some escape payment of tax not because they have omitted or failed to make a true disclosure but because in spite of their full and true disclosure some portion of the income escapes assessment. For such persons there is a smaller period of limitation. But those who are guilty of an omission or failure or who give incorrect particulars or conceal the particulars of their income must stand exposed to action for a longer time. The difference between these two cases is understandable. The section also draws a distinction between two more classes — One above Rs. 1 lakh and the other below it. These two distinctions have never been challenged as discriminatory. Per majority of the Full Bench; Upadhya, J. contra: — S. 34 (1) (a) contains a fiction of law which has been introduced for the purpose of making the procedure laid down in S. 23 of the Act applicable to the proceedings for assessment, reassessment or recomputation taken by the Income-tax Officer in pursuance of a notice issued under S. 34 (1) (a). The fiction of law is introduced by using the words "as if the notice were a notice issued under that sub-section." The introduction of this fiction of law was necessary in order that a proceeding for re-assessment under S. 34 (1) (a) of the Act may be governed by the procedure laid down in S. 23 of the Act. Having laid down the procedure for assessment or re-assessment in Ss. 23 and 34 (1) of the Act, those provisions were made applicable to proceedings under S. 34 (1-A) of the Act. There is thus no difference in the matter of procedure or the rights of an assessee who may be proceeded against either under S. 34 (1) (a) or under S. 34 (1-A) of the Act. It cannot therefore, be contended that S. 34 (1-A) is ultra vires, Art. 14 of the Constitution on the ground that it was discriminatory. AIR 1954 SC 545 Distinguished. Jai Kishan Srivastava v. I.-T. ● ——Arts. 14 and 226 — Proceedings under S. 34 (1-A), Income-tax Act are judicial or quasi-judicial — Principles of natural justice cannot be invoked for holding section void.

The proceedings taken by an Income-tax Officer under S. 34 (1-A) are judicial or quasi-judicial: AIR 1954 SC 545, followed.

The essential feature of the principles of natural justice is that no person should be deprived of any right by a judicial or quasi-judicial order unless he has had a hearing before an independent authority. Under the Income-tax Act, this principal is complied with permitting appeals before the Appellate Assistant Commissioner and the Income-tax Appellate Tribunal.

Under the Indian Constitution, except as provided in Art. 14 of the Constitution, there is no general limitation on the power of the Legislature that it will not enact a law contrary to the principles of natural justice. If a certain procedure is prescribed by law, then, unless it contravenes the provisions of Art. 14, it cannot be challenged as invalid upon any supposed principles of natural justice. AIR 1957 All 297, Approved.

The proceedings under S. 34 (1-A), Income-tax Act cannot be challenged on the ground that proceedings taken by the Income-tax Officer were of a judicial or quasi-judicial nature and the Income-tax Officer was a person who had a bias because he or the Central Board of Revenue, under whom he was employed, was interested as a party in the proceedings. ● ——Arts. 14 and 19 — Income-tax Act, S. 34 (1-A) — Proceedings under — Subjective satisfaction of authority concerned necessary for purpose of initiating proceedings — Articles cannot apply at initial stage.

The subjective satisfaction of the Central Board of Revenue or the Income-tax Officer is only for the purpose of initiating proceedings under S. 34 (1-A) of the Income-tax Act and all that can be done as a result of that subjective satisfaction is to take proceedings for assessment or re-assessment when the assessee is given all the rights which he can claim as a party to a judicial or quasi-judicial proceeding. It is not possible to accept that the provisions of Art. 14 or 19 of the Constitution can apply at the initial stage when proceedings have to be started on the subjective satisfaction of the authority empowered to initiate the proceedings. ——Art. 14 — Levy of tax on classification of assessee on resident and non-resident basis — Classification held not violative of Art. 14.

A rate of tax dependent upon the classification of the assessee on resident or non-resident basis has a reasonable relation to the object of the Legislation. There is no constitutional disability in this regard and Art. 14 is not in any way violated.

In so far as a non-resident as a person who earns income within the taxable territories is concerned, undoubtedly a sufficient territorial connection is established between the person sought to be taxed and the country seeking to tax him. That would be sufficient to validate the levy. In so far as income derived from the taxable territory is concerned, it is competent to the Indian Legislature to fix the rate of tax upon such income on the basis of any reasonable classification. If the classification as a resident and non-resident would be a proper classification for the purpose of levy of tax, it should equally be open to the Legislature to vary the incidence of tax in so far as the classes are concerned. (1963) 1 Mad LJ 434: ILR (1963) Mad 559: (1963) 1 ITJ 584: (1964) 52 ITR 890.

Section 37, Income-tax Act (1922).

●——Art. 14—Income-tax Act (1922), S. 37 (2) — Validity — Section contravenes Art. 14 and is ultra vires (Majority view).

Article 14 must be deemed to recognise the need and justification for applying separate sets of laws to individuals or groups of individuals not similarly placed and not belonging to the same group. and therefore, the set of laws applicable to one individual or group of individuals may not always be made applicable to any other individual or group, not similarly placed. What is contemplated by the Article, therefore, is the application of different laws in the same group of persons similarly placed. The question whether this Article had been violated by any particular law would only arise when different sets of laws are applied to the individuals in the same group or who are similarly placed, or to the persons in different groups, which groups are in all respects similarly placed with each other.

Where there are two sets of laws or two different provisions of law, in respect of the same matter, which could be applied to the same group or groups of persons, are referable and applicable to the same field or territory in the legislative domain, and one of these is more drastic than the other, the more drastic of the laws must be struck down as discriminatory and offending Art. 14 of the Constitution. AIR 1954 SC 545 and AIR 1955 SC 13 and AIR 1956 SC 269, Rel. on.

Where two different sets of laws are sought to be applied to persons or groups of persons similarly placed, the course adopted by the Legislature is obviously discriminatory but may be supported provided the following conditions are fulfilled: (i) That there is a reasonable nexus between the basis of the classification made, and the object sought to be achieved by the Legislature in making the classification, the classification itself being based on an intelligible differentia between the classified categories. Otherwise the statute must be struck down as violative of Art. 14. (ii) Where the statute makes no such classification but merely provides for two sets of laws, and apparently, leaves it to the executive authority to apply the same to different sets of persons similarly placed, the conditions laid down in (i) must be fulfilled, by the executive, and, in addition, the statute itself must lay down the policy and the principles which would guide the executive in the application of those different laws to the different persons or sets of persons. Where, therefore, the nexus between the basis of possible classification and the object of the Act is not established, and where no intelligible differentia is indicated in the statute and where the policy or principle is not laid down clearly in the statute itself, the statute, obviously, has to be struck down along with the executive action taken on the basis thereof. (iii) Where the conditions in (ii) are fulfilled by statute, but the executive does not act in conformity with the policy and principles laid down in the statute, the executive action has to be struck down as violative of Art. 14, while the statute itself may be saved from the bar.

(Majority view — Mehrotra, C. J., Contra):

Sections 37 (1) and 37 (2) of Income-tax Act, 1922 deal with the production of the documents, account books etc., required in connection with any proceeding under the Act, for the purposes of the Act, namely, the proper assessment of the income-tax leviable on and payable by any person liable for such levy and payment. Both the provisions cover the same subject and answer the same purpose and are capable of being employed against probable income-tax assessees fulfilling the policy of the Act namely to secure correct assessment of the income-tax payable and to prevent the evasion of income-tax. The power under S. 37 (1) is judicial whereas that under S. 37 (2) is administrative or executive power.

Section 37 (1) involves the obligation on the part of the authority concerned to be guided by the provisions of C. P. Code for the exercise of the power. There are no such guiding factors or controlling provisions of law subject to which the executive power is to be exercised under S. 37 (2). The powers under S. 37 (1) and the powers under S. 37 (2) are two distinct powers, independent of each other, and at the same time operate on the same field or strip of territory or jurisdiction, and are calculated to achieve the same object and purpose, namely, the securing of documents etc., from an assessee, to enable correct assessment of income-tax being made. Obviously, the power under S. 37 (2), is much more drastic and onerous than the power under S. 37 (1), and hence, to permit action being taken under S. 37 (2), instead of under S. 37 (1), which is a less drastic and less prejudicial, provision, would involve a clear discrimination prohibited by Art. 14 of the Constitution.

Therefore, S. 37 (2) of Income-tax Act, 1922, must be struck down as being violative of the fundamental right enshrined in Art. 14 of the Constitution. Section 37 (2) contravenes Art. 14 and is ultra vires of the Constitution. AIR 1961 Cal 578, Diss.

Per Mehrotra, C. J., Contra. — Sections 37 (1) and 37 (2) confer two distinct and separate powers on the Income-tax Officer for the better and more effective way of achieving the objectives of the Act. There is thus no question of any discrimination by exercising one power or the other. The two sub-sections do not provide two separate procedures for dealing with persons, who belong to the same class. The Income-tax authorities have been left with discretion to exercise any of the two powers having regard to the necessity and the circumstances of the case and having regard to the object of the Act. If the power has been exercised not in conformity with the policy of the Act, that Act can be struck down, but it cannot be said that the section itself is discriminatory. Section 42, Income-tax Act (1922).

——Art. 14 — Income-tax Act (1922), S. 42 (1) — Validity.

It is true that S. 42 (1) of the Income-tax Act itself does not in express terms lay down under what circumstances the Income-tax Officer could elect to order an assessment in the name of the agents of a non-resident principal. Where the non-resident principal submits himself for assessment in his own name through his resident agent or otherwise, no further question may arise.

It was only when the non-resident principal could not be reached by the assessing authority, the Income-tax Officer, that he has to exercise his option either to order the assessment in the name of the non-resident principal or in that of the agent. In whosoever name the assessment is completed, the principal is not exonerated at all of his ultimate liability. It is still the principal's liability that is enforced in the hands of the agent. A capricious exercise of power would really be outside the scope of the statutory power vested in the Income-tax Officer and beyond the jurisdiction vested in him by S. 42 (1) of the Act. The remote possibility of such abuse of power does not make the legislative sanction for the power unconstitutional. Nor can it be said to offend Art. 14 of the Constitution. Section 42 (1) does not violate the fundamental right guaranteed by Art. 14, in so far as it imposes a liability on the agent to be assessed to tax in his name on the income, profits, or gains of the non-resident principal, which accrued or arose through or from any business connection in the taxable territory. 70 Mad LW 755: (1957) 2 Mad LJ 421: ILR (1957) Mad 1186: AIR 1958 Mad 1 (5, 6) (Pt C) (Prs 23, 24, 26) (DB).

Section 46, Income-tax Act (1922).

——Art. 14 — Discrimination — Classification — S. 46 (5-A) of Income-tax Act — Validity.

Chapter 6 of the Act laying down summary method of realisation of the tax dues, is not hit by Art. 14 of the Constitution. Art. 14 does not absolutely prevent the State from discriminating. The State has the power of what is known as 'classification' on the basis of a rational distinction relevant to the particular subject dealt with.

That in some cases it may result in hardship to the assessee, is no ground for holding the law as substantially discriminatory. The coercive processes should be resorted to when all other means have been exhausted. But it cannot be said that the law on that account results in substantial discrimination. The discretion given under S. 46 (5-A) does not impinge upon the fundamental right guaranteed by the Constitution. (1961) 41 ITR 80: AIR 1960 Assam 76 (86, 87, 89) (Pt F) (Prs 25, 26, 28, 34) (DB).

——Art. 14 — Income-tax Act (1922), S. 46 (2) — Validity of — Applicability of S. 46 (2) — Requirements of Art. 14 — Held S. 46 (2) does not offend Art. 14 — AIR 1954 Mad 1091, Diss.

The assessee A failed to pay the amount of income-tax. A certificate issued under S. 46 (2) of Income-tax Act was sent to Collector who sent notice of demand. In recovery proceedings the tenancy rights and the good will in A's firm were sold after attachment. The sale did not realise the full amount which A was liable to pay. After being not satisfied with cause shown by A, Collector issued warrant of arrest and A was arrested. In writ by B, son of A, constitutionality of S. 46 (2) was at issue.

Held that S. 46 (2) is a procedural section and it lays down the procedure for recovering amounts of arrears due from an assessee. It does not impose any liability upon the assessee, nor does it determine any liability. The liability to pay tax has been otherwise determined by the machinery provided in the Indian Income-tax Act. Section 46 (2) only comes into operation after the liability has been finally determined and the assessee has no answer to the payment of arrears of income-tax, and the machinery which is provided is that these arrears may be recovered by the Collector from the assessee as if they were arrears of land revenue.

Held further that Art. 14 does not require that all laws should be similar or that all laws should have universal application. What Art. 14 requires is that if you make any discrimination in the application of the law as between a citizen and a citizen, there must be some reasonable basis available to you for justifying such a discrimination. It is not that Art. 14 prevents classification. Far from preventing classification it permits classification, provided the classification is based on some reasonable principle. There is a valid machinery existing in the different States for collecting land revenue and this is the machinery that has been resorted to under S. 46 (2) for the purpose of enforcing the liability of a defaulter. Classification based on this principle is reasonable classification. Hence S. 46 (2) does not offend Art. 14 of Constitution. It is perfectly open to the Legislature to provide alternative courses to be followed by executive authorities to be invoked at their discretion, provided of course the alternatives are intra vires of the Constitution. The question whether the proviso to S. 46 (2) of the Income-tax Act providing for alternative powers similar to that of a Civil Court under the Code of Civil Procedure to the Collector for recovery of the tax was ultra vires in any respect was left open. ILR (1955) Mad 999: 1954 Cri LJ 1775: (1954) 2 Mad LJ 683: (1954) 26 ITR 509: AIR 1954 Mad 1091 (1096) (Pt C) (Pr 13) (DB).

Per Majority, Jagannadhadas, J.: Contra — After the 8th September, 1948, even in the case of substantial evaders of income-tax who were a distinct class by themselves intended to be treated by the drastic and summary procedure laid down by Act (30 of 1947), some cases that were already referred by the Central Government for investigation by the Commission could be dealt with under the Act and other cases, though falling within the same class or category, could be dealt with under the procedure prescribed in the amended S. 34 (1) of the Income-tax. These provisions, though discriminatory, could not have been challenged before the advent of the Constitution. When however, the Constitution came into force on the 26th January, 1950, it was open to the persons alleged to belong to the class of substantial evaders thereafter to ask as to why some of them were subjected to the summary and drastic procedure prescribed in Act (30 of 1947) and others were subjected to the normal procedure prescribed in S. 34 and the cognate sections of the Income-tax Act, the procedure prescribed in Act 30 of 1947) being obviously discriminatory and, therefore, violative of the fundamental right guaranteed under Art. 14 of the Constitution. The result, is that barring the cases of persons which were already concluded by reports made by the Commission and the directions given by the Central Government under S. 8 (2) of Act (30 of 1947), those cases which were pending on the 26th January, 1950 for investigation before the Commission as also the assessment or re-assessment proceedings which were pending on the 26th January, 1950, would be hit by Art. 14 of the Constitution and would be invalidated. ●——Art. 14 — Travancore Taxation on Income (Investigation Commission) Act (14 of 1124, M.E.), S. 5 (1) — S. 5 (1) is not discriminatory and violative of the fundamental right guaranteed under Art. 14 — (Taxation on Income (Investigation Commission) Act (1947), S. 5 (1)).

The possibility of the Government discriminating between persons and persons falling within the group or category of substantial evaders-of income-tax would not render S. 5 (1) of the Act discriminatory and void. It is to be presumed, unless the contrary were shown, that the administration of a particular law would be done "not with an evil eye and unequal hand" and the selection made by the Government of the cases of persons to be referred for investigation by the Commission would not be discriminatory. The object sought to be achieved by the Travancore Taxation on Income (Investigation Commission) Act is to catch substantial evaders of income-tax. Being a class by themselves, the procedure to which they are subjected during the course of investigation of their cases by the Commission is not at all discriminatory because such drastic procedure has reasonable nexus with the object sought to be achieved by the Act and therefore such a classification is within the constitutional limitations. The selection of the cases of persons falling within that category by the Government cannot be challenged as discriminatory for the simple reason that it is not left to the unguided or the uncontrolled discretion of the Government. The selection is guided by the very objective which is set out in the terms of S. 5 (1) itself and the attainment of that object controls the discretion which is vested in the Government and guides the Government in making the necessary selection of cases of persons to be referred for investigation by the Commission. It cannot, therefore, be disputed that there is a valid basis of classification to be found in S. 5 (1) of the Act.

Action under S. 5 (1) read with S. 8 (2) of the Travancore Act (14 of 1124) is definitely limited to the evasion of payment of taxation on income made during the war period. It cannot, therefore, be urged that S. 5 (1) of the Travancore Act (14 of 1124) was discriminatory in comparison with S. 47 (1) of the Travancore Act (23 of 1121), for the persons who came under S. 5 (1) were not similarly situated as persons who came under S. 47 (1). Hence S. 5 (1) of the Travancore Taxation on Income (Investigation Commission) Act (14 of 1124) which has to be read for this purpose in juxtaposition with S. 47 of the Travancore Act (23 of 1121), cannot be held to be discriminatory and violative of the fundamental right guaranteed by Art. 14 of the Constitution. ●——Art. 14 — Taxation on Income (Investigation Commission) Act (30 of 1947), S. 5 (1) — Drastic procedure — No special or rational nexus — Section is discriminatory and invalid.

The class of persons alleged to have been dealt with by S. 5 (1) of the Taxation on Income (Investigation Commission) Act was comprised of those unsocial elements in society who during recent years prior to the passing of the Act had made substantial profits and had evaded payment of tax on those profits and whose cases were referred to the Investigation Commission before 1st September, 1948. Assuming that evasion of tax to a substantial amount could form a basis of classification at all for imposing a drastic procedure on that class, the inclusion of only such of them whose cases had been referred before 1st September, 1948, into a class for being dealt with by the drastic procedure, leaving other tax evaders to be dealt with under the ordinary law will be a clear discrimination for the reference of the case within a particular time has no special or rational nexus with the necessity for drastic procedure.

Assuming the provisions of S. 5 (1) of Act (30 of 1947) can be saved from the mischief of Art. 14 of the Constitution on the basis of a valid classification, that defence is no longer available in support of it after the introduction of the new sub-S. (1-A) in S. 34 of the Income-tax Act, which sub-section is intended to deal with the same class of persons dealt with by S. 5 (1) of Act 30 of 1947 — Hence the proceedings before the Investigation Commission can no longer be continued under the procedure prescribed by Act 30 of 1947. ——Art. 14—Validity of Taxation on Income (Investigation Commission) Act (1947), S. 5 (4) —[Income-tax Act (1922), S. 34].

Sub-s. (4) of S. 5 of the Taxation on Income (Investigation Commission) Act (30 of 1947) offends against the guarantee of equal protection of the laws given in Article 14 of the Constitution. Both S. 34 of the Indian Income-tax Act and S. 5 (4) of Act (30 of 1947) deal with all persons who have similar characteristics and similar properties, the common characeristics being that they are persons who have not truly disclosed their income and have evaded payment of taxation on income. There are substantial differences between the procedures under S. 34 of the Income-tax Act and S. 5 (4) of Act (30 of 1947) and the different procedure under the latter operates to the detriment of the persons dealt with. Accordingly S. 5 (4) and the procedure prescribed by Act (30 of 1947) in so far as it affects the persons proceeded against under that sub-section being a piece of discriminatory legislation offends against the provisions of Art. 14 of the Constitution and is thus void and unenforceable. Madras Revenue Recovery Act.

●——Art. 14 — Taxation Law — Madras Revenue Recovery Act, S. 48 — Arrest and imprisonment of defaulter — Nature of — If contravention of Arts. 14, 19, 21 and 22 of the Constitution — Validity of S. 46 (2), Income-tax Act and S. 48 of the Madras Act. See Income-tax Act (1922), S. 46 (2). AIR 1957 SC 688.

——Art. 14 — Madras Revenue Recovery Act, S. 48 and Income-tax Act, S. 46 (2) — Validity.

For the purpose of S. 46 (2), Income-tax Act, it was perfectly legal for the then Central, and now Union Government, to utilise the existing machinery for the collection of land revenue arrears in the different States for the purposes of collecting the Central or Union Taxes. So far as this machinery is generally speaking uniform and otherwise intra vires of the Constitution Art. 14 of the Constitution is not offended. The various States are perfectly entitled to legislate for their own territorial areas in their spheres of legislation and to define the manner in which their own arrears of taxes are to be realised, keeping their machinery of course within constitutional bounds. There is, however, in so far as the Union Government is concerned one wide class of income-tax defaulters who wilfully default to pay income-tax or by some fraudulent method evade payment. It offends the equality before the law contemplated by Art. 14, if the assessees in different parts of India are to be exposed to so widely differing sentences which can be imposed by Collectors on different grounds in different States. Section 48 Madras Revenue Recovery Act, is ultra vires as it clearly offends Art. 22 (1) and (2) of the Constitution and S. 46 (2) of the Income-tax Act is also ultra vires in so far as it empowers a collector to proceed under S. 48 of the Revenue Recovery Act.

(Per Krishnaswani Nayudu, J.) :— The procedure for arrest under the Revenue Recovery Act is fundamentally different from that prescribed in the Civil P. C. None of the safeguards provided in the Civil P. C., against improper arrest and detention are found in the Revenue Recovery Act. Section 46 (2) of the Income-tax Act, clothes the Collector, a single individual and an executive authority, with power to apply either of the two modes one under Revenue Recovery Act and the other under the Code of Civil Procedure provided for arrest of defaulter, who are placed in similar circumstances. The power that is conferred on the executive authority is unfettered and the exercise of his discretion is not subject to any limitations imposed upon him by the enactment. It is open to him to treat two defaulters placed in similar circumstances differently and there is nothing in the concerned enactments to guide him as to which of the procedure he should adopt. In such circumstances, there is always the scope for discrimination between two defaulters who are placed in the same position to the advantage of one and to the prejudice of another. Such a power is manifestly unreasonable and nakedly arbitrary and is opposed to the doctrine of equality before the law under the Constitution. There is obvious inconsistency between S. 48 of the Revenue Recovery Act and the provisions of Art. 22 (1) and (2) of the Constitution, and to that extent that section must be held to be void. It is not that S. 46 (2) of the Income-tax Act could as a whole be considered to be offended by the said Article but it is affected to the extent that it empowers the Collector to act under S. 48 of the Revenue Recovery Act. 1954 Cri LJ 1775: ILR (1955) Mad 999: (1954) 2 Mad LJ 683: (1954) 26 ITR 509: AIR 1954 Mad 1091 (1095, 1096) (Pt D) (Prs 10, 11, 13) (DB).

Nabha, one of the States integrated in the Patiala and East Punjab States Union had no Income-tax Act prior to the integration while Kapurthala another State had its own Income-tax Act. After the integration, the residents of the Nabha State were assessed to income-tax under the law of the Pepsu Union, in respect of the year 2005 while the income of the residents of Kapurthala State were assessed under the Kapurthala State law, the rates under which were lower than those fixed in the law of the Pepsu State as the proceedings against them were pending on 20th August, 1948 and as the pending proceedings have according to S. 3 (1) of the Patiala and East Punjab States Union General Provisions (Administration) Ordinance, 2006, to be disposed of in accordance with the laws governing such proceedings in force in any such integrating State immediately before 20th August, 1948.

On a contention that such discrimination offends against the provisions of Art. 14 of the Constitution.

Held: The discrimination, if any, was not brought about by the Ordinance, but by the circumstance that there was no Income-tax Act in Nabha State and consequently there was no case of assessment pending against any Nabha assessee. In any case, the provision that pending proceedings should be concluded according to the law applicable at the time when the rights or liabilities accrued and the proceedings commenced is a reasonable law founded upon a reasonable classification of the assessees which is permissible under the equal protection clause and to which no exception can be taken. There is no infringement of fundamental right under Art. 14 in such a case.

Cl. (1) of Art. 31 must be regarded as concerned with deprivation of property otherwise than by the imposition or collection of tax, for otherwise Art. 265 becomes wholly redundant. The Constitution has treated taxation as distinct from compulsory acquisition of property and has made independent provision giving protection against taxation save by authority of law. The protection against imposition and collection of taxes save by authority of law directly comes from Art. 265 and is not secured by Cl. 1 of Art. 31. Art. 265 not being in Chap. III of the Constitution, its protection is not a fundamental right which can be enforced by an application to the Supreme Court under Art. 32. Ramjilal v. ——Arts. 14, 271 — Finance Act (1963) — Validity — Act does not contravene Art. 14 on the ground that salaried class has been excluded from levy of surcharge.

In the Finance Act of 1963 the salaried class of persons has been excluded from the application of the provisions for the levy of Surcharge. The salaried class of employees undoubtedly, is a well defined class and has been so treated for decades by the various Finance Acts. The Finance Act of 1963 deals equally with all persons within the salaried class. The classification is also reasonable as it is based upon a real and substantial distinction between salaried employees and others. Salaried employees have always at least since the Income-tax Act of 1922, been taxed on the basis of the Finance Act current during the year when the salary is received and not on the basis of the Finance Act enacted after the year has come to a close. The charge of discrimination therefore, cannot legitimately be levied against the Finance Act of 1963 in the matter of 'additional surcharge' as the classification is neither arbitrary nor capricious; it is a perfectly understandable, intelligible and reasonable classification. AIR 1951 SC 318, Rel. on. (1965) 1 ITJ 63: (1965) 57 ITR 749: AIR 1965 All 37 (42) (Pr 7).

The tax payable by the assessee was determined as Rs. 608.64 and under the Finance Act of 1963 a further levy of Rs. 264.32 as Additional surcharge, Rs. 30.77 as Surcharge, and Rs. 2.13 as Special Surcharge was made. In a petition under Art. 226 of the Constitution directed against the levy of additional surcharge as offending Arts. 14, 19 (1) (g) and 271 of the Constitution, Held, Article 271 empowers Parliament to levy additional tax by way of a surcharge. The levy of additional surcharge or Special surcharge in addition is within the competence of Parliament. The salaried class of employees is a well defined class and has been so treated for decades by the various Finance Acts. This class of employees, since the Income-tax Act of 1922, has been taxed on the basis of the Finance Act current during the year when the salary is received and not on the basis of the Finance Act enacted after the year has come to a close. Income chargeable under the head 'Salaries' by implication is not subjected to the additional Surcharge which came to be levied under the Finance Act of 1963 for the first time. The Finance Act of 1963 deals equally with all persons within the salaried class. The classification is also reasonable as it is based upon a real and substantial distinction between salaried employees and others. No charge of discrimination can be levelled against the Finance Act of 1963 in the matter of additional surcharge. The Compulsory Deposit Scheme applies to a well defined class and the Finance Act of 1963 cannot be said to place any restriction on the free exercise of any profession, trade or occupation. ——Art. 14 — Reasonable classification — Finance Act, 1951 — If ultra vires — (Finance Act (1951), S. 2).

The Finance Act of 1951 is not ultra vires the Constitution of India. It does not contravene Art. 14 of the Constitution in so far as it provides for a graduated scale of income-tax, the rate of tax rising with the rise in income. From whatever point of view the statute is examined, it appears clear that there is a rational connection between the differentia on the basis of which the classification has been attempted in the Act and the objects sought to be achieved in the Act. This is, therefore, not class legislation but reasonable classification as permitted by the Constitution. 1960 Cal LJ 148: ILR (1960) 1 Cal 506: (1959) 37 ITR 101: AIR 1959 Cal 444 (446) (Pr 8) (DB).

——Art. 14 — Taxation Law — Reasonable classification — Graduated rates of Income-tax — Whether arbitrary — Constitutionality of Finance Acts, 1951 and 1954 — (Finance Act (1954), S. 2) — (Income-tax Act (1922), S. 3).

Article 14 of the Indian Constitution does not insist that every piece of legislation must have universal application and it does not take away from the State the power to classify persons for the purposes of legislation, but the classification must be rational, and, in order to satisfy this test, (i) the classification must be founded on an intelligible differentia which distinguishes those that are grouped together from others, and (ii) that differentia must have a rational relation to the object sought to be achieved by the Act. The differentia which is the basis of the classification and the object of the Act are distinct things and what is necessary is that there must be a nexus between them.

Applying these tests, the progressive graduation of income-tax with different rates applying to different income groups or to different slabs of income, far from being discriminatory, is a just, practical and reasonable system of classification.

The Finance Act, 1951, as applicable to the Finance Act, 1954 under S. 2 of the Finance Act, 1954, is not ultra vires the Constitution and does not infringe the right of equality before the law or the equal protection of the laws. Further the Finance Act is not ultra vires the Constitution and the rates imposed thereunder are neither discriminatory nor arbitrary. 62 Cal WN 309: (1958) 34 ITR 82: AIR 1958 Cal 669 (671) (Prs 13, 14, 16, 17).

Evidently the intention of the rule making authority is to compel the partnership firms to seek official recognition as early as possible. Whether this is a wise move or not is not a question for the Courts to decide. But it cannot be denied that the classification made in R. 2 between registered firms registered under Partnership or Registration Act and those not so registered is a rational classification having regard to the object sought to be achieved and hence the rule is not hit by Art. 14 of the Constitution. 1963 Karnt LJ 133 (DB).

——Art. 14 — Retrospective effect — Cochin Income-tax Act (6 of 1117), S. 44 — Liability to capital gains tax arising prior to Constitution — Assessment proceedings subsequent to Constitution — No question of discrimination can arise.

The Constitution is not retrospective in operation. There was no such thing as fundamental rights prior to the Constitution, and any question of inconsistency of existing laws with fundamental rights can only arise on and from the date those rights came into being and the preservation of past inchoate rights or liabilities and pending proceedings to enforce the same is not foreign or abhorrent to the Constitution of India. AIR 1951 SC 128, Foll.

Where the liability of the assessee to tax in respect of capital gains arose prior to the Constitution but the order of assessment in respect of that tax was made after the Constitution no question of discrimination between two parts of the same State in Travancore-Cochin can possibly arise. The liability of the assessee arose in the year 1122 in which the income was earned and the fact that the assessee successfully avoided the liability until proceedings under S. 44, Cochin Income-tax Act, were started cannot postpone the accrual of that liability. There is nothing in the Constitution which affects the right to collect income-tax in respect of capital gains which arose prior to the Constitution under S. 44, Cochin Income-tax Act (6 of 1117). 1954 Ker LT 585: AIR 1955 Trav-Co 19 (20) (Prs 3, 4, 5, 6).

14 (b). Agricultural income-tax.

● ——Art. 14 — Differential treatment — Bhopal State Agricultural Income-tax Act (9 of 1953) — Tax imposed on persons carrying on agricultural operations in Bhopal region — No such tax imposed on persons carrying agricultural operations in other regions of M. P. State — This by itself does not render Act invalid.

Prima facie, a differential treatment is accorded by the State of Madhya Pradesh to persons carrying on agricultural operations in the Bhopal region, because the State subjects them to pay by reason of the provisions contained in the Bhopal State Agricultural Income-tax Act, IX of 1953, tax on agricultural income, which is not imposed upon agricultural income earned in the rest of the State. But that by itself cannot be a ground for declaring the Bhopal Act ultra vires. Differential treatment becomes unlawful only when it is arbitrary or not supported by a rational relation with the object of the statute. Where application of unequal laws is reasonably justified for historical reasons, a geographical classification founded on those historical reasons would be upheld. AIR 1962 SC 981 and AIR 1963 SC 853, Rel. on; Observations in (1962) 2 SCR 619, held obiter. It is not correct to say that the Bhopal Act is unlawful because the State had since the enactment of the States Reorganisation Act, 1956, sufficient time and opportunity to decide whether the continuance of the Bhopal State Agricultural Income-tax Act, in the Bhopal region would be consistent with Art. 14 of the Constitution. It would be impossible to lay down any definite time-limit within which the State had to make necessary adjustments so as to effectuate the equality clause of the Constitution. It cannot be said that because a certain number of years have elapsed or that the State has made other laws uniform, the State has acted improperly in continuing an impost which operates upon a class of citizens more harshly than upon others. In the reorganisation of the State the district of Malabar was transferred from the State of Madras and added to the new State of Kerala. The former Malabar Area, while it was part of the Madras State was, like the rest of that State area, not subject to any general law relating to Agricultural Income-tax. Following its disintegration from the Madras State, and simultaneously with the extension to it of the agricultural income-tax, the Malabar Area was relieved of this tax burden. On the extension of the Travancore-Cochin Agricultural Income-tax Act (22 of 1950) (as amended by Act 8 of 1957) to which was added Malabar District the Authorities proceeded to levy tax on the agricultural income received by the petitioners during the financial year 1957-58. The petitioners questioned the validity of this levy of tax under Art. 14 of the Constitution.

Held, that the anomaly herein was inevitable during the early stage after the integration, but it had been obviated by the early steps taken by the State to introduce the system of basic tax as well to the area and that the chance incidence of the prior taxation under the Madras State Law that brought about the inequality here if at all and to the extent that that situation was uniform throughout the Malabar area, there could be nothing for the petitioners to complain. The contention on ground of Art. 14 of the Constitution accordingly failed. (1880) 101 US 22 and AIR 1951 SC 97, Rel. on. Ananthanarayana Iyer v. The law is ex facie discriminatory and there are no materials to show that the conditions which prevailed in other areas of Madhya Pradesh are so different and varied from those which obtain in the territory of the former Bhopal State as to afford a sufficient justification for the continuance of the impugned Act in Bhopal region. 1961 MPLJ 652: 1961 Jab LJ 690: 1961 MPC 356: AIR 1961 Madh Pra 282 (284, 285, 288, 289) (Pt A) (Prs 5, 15, 16) (DB).

●——Art. 14 — Bihar Agriculturists Levy Order (1950) — Validity.

The guarantee of equal protection under Art. 14 is not absolute. It cannot also be the purpose of Article 14 to take away from the legislature the right or the power to classify the subjects of legislation. It is true that classification must be reasonable but a legislature has a wide discretion and an Act will not be held invalid unless the classification is clearly unreasonable and arbitrary. What classification is reasonable rests in the discretion of the legislative body in the first instance. The question is not whether the Court considers the classification reasonable to its satisfaction or whether in its opinion the Government could have devised a more equitable scheme. The question must be posed on the other hand—is the statute so clearly arbitrary that legislators acting reasonably could not have believed it to be necessary in the public interest? To put it in other words, the question is whether there was any rational basis for legislative action. The Bihar Agriculturists Levy Order, 1950, may divide large producers into a number of artificial sub-classes. But it cannot fairly, or indeed at all, be said that the object of the Ministry in making this order was to benefit one sub-class of producers at the expense of any other sub-class. There is clearly, nothing objectionable in the levy being a progressive one, that is in any comparatively large producer being required to deliver to the State a proportionately greater quantity of his grain than a smaller producer. The Bihar Agriculturists Levy Order considered as a whole and notwithstanding certain anomalies, does not violate the guarantee under Article 14 of the Constitution. Mohammad Anzar v. The Central Provinces and Berar Sales Tax Act, 1947 as extended to Vindhya Pradesh cannot be said to violate the equal protection clause in Art. 14 of the Constitution after the reorganisation of States when Vindhya Pradesh became part of the present Madhya Pradesh State. The sales tax law in Vindhya Pradesh was validly enacted, and it brought its validity with it under S. 119 of the States Reorganisation Act, when it became a part of the State of Madhya Pradesh. Thereafter, the different laws in different parts of Madhya Pradesh can be sustained on the ground that the differentiation arises from historical reasons and a geographical classification based on historical reasons can be upheld as not being contrary to the equal protection clause in Art. 14. 1960 SC (Notes) 225 and (1962) 2 SCR 619, Rel. on. The scheme of taxation in all countries shows that only certain commodities are selected for the imposition of sales tax. Such taxing measures imposing sales tax on selected commodities and not on others cannot be regarded as discrimination between one dealer and another.

Thus when Item No. 6 of second Schedule to the C. P. and Berar Sales Tax Act (1947) (as amended by Act 16 of 1949) exempts vegetables from Sales Tax but imposes sales tax on betel leaves, it cannot be said that there is any discrimination. 1955 Nag LJ 780: (1956) 7 STC 99: ILR (1956) Nag 290: AIR 1956 Nag 54 (56) (Pt D) (Pr 12) (DB).

It is only when within the range of its selection, the law operates unequally, and that cannot be justified on the basis of any valid classification, that it would be violative of Art. 14. ——Art. 14 — Discrimination — Reasonable classification — Presumption — Madras General Sales Tax Act, S. 3 (1) (b), Proviso — If offends Art. 14.

Section 3 (1), Madras General Sales Tax Act puts different dealers in distinct categories on the basis of the nature of the articles sold, the place wherein the business is conducted and the extent of the turnover of the business. The object, which is to provide for the levy of a general tax and to apportion the burden equitably between different categories of persons has a reasonable nexus with the classification adopted by the Legislature. From the standpoint of the State, the classification can be justified on the ground of equitable apportionment of the burden and easy realisation of the tax. From the standpoint of the dealer also, there is justification for the varied rates. The articles sold, the place where the business is carried on and the expectation of large profits are the characteristics of dealers who are distinct from dealers not covered by the proviso. The characteristics of the dealer covered by the proviso should be cumulatively considered and if so looked at, the said characteristics will afford a reasonable basis of classification which has a rational nexus with the object sought to be achieved. Proviso to S. 3 (1) (b) does not therefore offend Art. 14 of the Constitution. Co-operative societies, clubs, firms and associations form a distinct and intelligible class from those specified in the main part of S. 2 (g) of the Madras General Sales Tax Act. In the case of the former, in spite of the fact that there have been systematic sales by the club to its members, they will not be dealers within the meaning of the Act, as the transactions are not of a commercial nature. They are therefore different from persons referred to (including companies) who will come under S. 2 (g). The classification is undoubtedly intelligible and even reasonable. The Explanation to S. 2 (g) cannot therefore be struck down as contravening Art. 14. The terms of the Explanation, on their true interpretation, do not make either casual or non-repetitive or isolated acts of sale by the persons mentioned in the Explanation as sales within the meaning of S. 2 (n). The Explanations to S. 2 (g) and 2 (n) contemplate an organised activity on the part of the club in the purveying of articles to its members and the activity of persons or institutions referred to therein is more comparable to that of traders than otherwise. There is no difference in treatment between the category of persons coming under the main part of S. 2 (g) and the Explanation thereto. There is nothing in the first proviso to S. 3 (2) of the Madras General Sales Tax Act discriminating residents in the State as against non-residents. The non-resident is prima facie a person who is outside the Act except in cases provided for under S. 14-A of the Act, and no discrimination can arise on the ground that the residents in the State carrying on business of buying and selling in the State become subject to taxation at a particular rate.

First Proviso to S. 3 (2) is not discriminatory in its terms and even if it were so, the fixing of taxing points and taxable events at the discretion of the legislature amounts to a reasonable classification, not falling within the mischief of Art. 14 of the Constitution. 75 Mad LW 125: (1962) 13 STC 220: ILR (1962) Mad 573.

——Art. 14 — Taxation Laws — Madras General Sales Tax (Turnover and Assessment) Rules (1939), R. 16 — Madras General Sales Tax Rules (1939), R. 5 — Validity.

The essence of the freedom guaranteed by Art. 14 and the evil which the Article seeks to guard against is the avoidance of designed and intentional hostile treatment or discrimination on the part of the law-making authorities or of those entrusted with administering them. If a taxing enactment is on the face of it not open to the objection of discrimination, but evasions occur which go unpunished, the enactment itself cannot be impugned as violating the equal protection clause. No objection could be taken to the rules as framed under the Madras General Sales Tax Act drawing a distinction between licensed and unlicensed dealers as violative of Art. 14.

The taxation of licensed dealers under R. 16, Madras General Sales Tax (Turnover and Assessment) Rules, is not obnoxious to the freedom against discrimination guaranteed by Art. 14. It cannot be said that the amendments introduced into the Madras General Sales Tax Act by S. 2 of the Amending Act 13 of 1955 offends Art. 14 of the Constitution by introducing an unreasonable discrimination between a manufacturer who purchases his requirements of tobacco from a dealer and has not to pay any tax on his purchase, and a manufacturer who purchases from the grower but has to pay the purchase-tax though he was entitled to a rebate of the identical amount of tax paid when the sales tax payable by him on his sales of tobacco products come to be assessed. A manufacturer who buys tobacco required by him from a dealer does not pay any tax because the tax levied is a single point tax and unless it is to be held that tax levied at a single point is obnoxious to Art. 14 of the Constitution—a contention which has to be rejected — there is no basis for an allegation of discrimination between several classes of manufacturers under the impugned enactment. (1957) 8 STC 127: (1957) 1 Mad LJ 321: ILR (1957) Mad 493: 70 Mad LW 100: AIR 1957 Mad 325 (329) (Pt B) (Pr 20) (DB).

——Art. 14 — Madras General Sales Tax Act (9 of 1939), S. 3 (1) (b), Proviso — Validity — Reasonable classification — Test — Discrimination held not reasonable.

One of the tests of reasonable classification is that it must be based upon some real and substantial distinction bearing a reasonable and just relation to the object sought to be attained by the enactment; it cannot be made arbitrarily and without any substantial basis. The object of the Madras Sales Tax Act as set out in the preamble is to provide for the levy of a general tax on the sale of goods in the State of Madras. Though the apparent incidence of the tax is on the dealer and on his annual turnover, the ultimate economic incidence is on the consumer. The distinction between two classes of dealers in articles of food and drink with an annual turnover of Rs. 25,000 and more, i.e., (i) dealers in such articles of food and drink sold in hotels, boarding houses and restaurants and (ii) dealers in such articles of food and drink sold elsewhere, has no reasonable or just relation to the object of the Act, which is to tax the turnover of the sales of a dealer. The apparent discrimination, which results in one class of such dealers being singled out for levy of tax at a higher rate, has not been explained by any classification with a reasonable basis, having a just and reasonable relation to the object of the Act. Hence, the proviso to S. 3 (1) (b), Madras General Sales Tax Act offends Art. 14 of the Constitution and is, therefore, void and unenforceable. 1956 Mad WN 556: (1956) 7 STC 346: 69 Mad LW 427: (1956) 2 MLJ 179: ILR (1956) Mad 1368: AIR 1956 Mad 480 (482, 483) (Pt B) (Prs 9, 14, 20) (DB).

——Arts. 14 and 265 and Sch. 7, List 2, Entry 54 — Power of Legislature to decide basis of taxation.

Assuming that the Sales Tax Act were to be repealed by the Legislature, the assessments made under the Act before the repeal could not become illegal, and the plea of discrimination and denial of equal protection of laws would not be available. So long as the taxing power is there, it is open to the Legislature to decide the basis of taxation and to alter that from time to time. Such alterations will not fall within the mischief of Art. 14 of the Constitution. 1956 Mad WN 180: 69 Mad LW 75: (1956) 7 STC 105: ILR (1956) Mad 1123: (1956) 1 MLJ 339: AIR 1956 Mad 298 (301) (Pt E) (Pr 17) (DB).

● ——Art. 14 — Madras General Sales Tax Act (9 of 1939), S. 8 — Classification of merchants into licence-holders and non-licence-holders — No discrimination.

A classification of merchants into those who take out licences and those who do not is one resting on a rational basis and must be upheld. The scheme of assessment under the Madras General Sales Tax Act certainly makes a difference between a licensed dealer and an unlicensed dealer. But it is not correct to say that while the unlicensed dealer escapes taxation in view of Art. 286, the licensed dealer has to pay the tax. He is not liable to pay any tax in respect of the export sale. It is the prior purchase that is taxable. The mere fact that there may be difficulty in assessment of tax in respect of licensed and unlicensed dealers will not justify the Court in holding that there has been an unwarranted discrimination. ——Art. 14 — Scope — Mysore Sales Tax Act — Works contract — Uniform rate — Validity — (Sales Tax — Mysore Sales Tax Act (46 of 1948), Ss. 2 (1), 2 (k) and R. 1 (2)).

Though the Mysore Sales Tax Act purports to take the value of materials used for fulfilment of a contract, the value is not ascertained from the assessee, even if he is ready and willing to furnish satisfactory proof of it but is determined by means of a rigid formula which may entail an undeserved liability. The principle of equality may be offended on account of dissimilarity of treatment in like instances. The classification and the rule under which it is found, seem to have overlooked these factors in prescribing same percentages for all areas. Skilled labour and goods of special design or manufacture cost more in some places than in others and that in some the two vary inversely. Added to this, is the incongruity between the definition of "works contract" and the Explanation to turnover and the explanation to R. 1. Contracts for execution of works are of varied types and there is no uniformity in the stipulation in all contracts. The presumption generally attaching to validity of laws cannot be extended to justify provisions tending to such anomalies, inequalities and arbitrariness as persons being taxed on notional considerations shutting them out from representing the true nature and value of their transactions. This is repugnant to the principles of natural justice and Art. 14. The levy of a uniform rate for the whole State is arbitrary and leads to unreasonable discrimination. 35 Mys LJ 89: ILR (1956) Mys 286: (1957) 8 STC 329: AIR 1957 Mys 45 (47, 48) (Prs 8, 9, 10) (DB).

It is open to the Government to impose a tax on persons with certain extent of business and exempt other business persons who have not got business to that extent. No doubt that the tax is on sales, but it is not necessary for equal protection before the law that every business man, regardless of the financial extent of his business, must be taxed alike. AIR 1953 SC 252, Rel. on.

The object of R. 65 of the Orissa Sales Tax Rules providing for compounding of tax calculated at the uniform rate of three quarters of an anna in the rupee on a graduated percentage of the dealer's gross turnover on sales which have taken place in Orissa, according to the sliding scale. is to apportion the burden equitably between different categories of hotel-keepers with varying extent of gross annual turnover and has a reasonable nexus with the initial classification adopted by the Legislature in S. 4 (1) of the Orissa Sales Tax Act. There may be small or big dealers. The State can reasonably recover taxes on a higher percentage of gross turnover from prosperous dealers than from impecunious ones. From the standpoint of the dealer, there is justification for the varied percentage according to the sliding scale as provided in R. 65. The old R. 65 (corresponding to the new R. 90) of the Orissa Sales Tax Rules is not discriminatory and therefore does not offend Art. 14 of the Constitution of India. AIR 1957 Andh Pra 261, Rel. on. As the gist of the offence under S. 19 (b) is not the validity of the assessment but only the non-payment of the tax assessed within the time allowed there can be no doubt that there is no violation of Art. 14 of the Constitution or the Criminal P. C. (1898), or Evidence Act (1872).

The prosecution for an offence under Section 19, (Travancore-Cochin) Sales Tax Act is a criminal trial and the provisions of the Code of Criminal Procedure and the Indian Evidence Act will apply to such a trial. The provisions of S. 3-A of the U. P. The agricultural land is a class by itself. If the Legislature did not think it proper to tax non-agricultural land but only agricultural land the Act cannot be said to be discriminatory. It is a matter of policy which is not justiciable. Similarly, the mere fact that there is a graded scale of tax and the large land holdings are assessed to a larger tax does not make the provisions of the Act discriminatory. There is a clear classification and that is based on a reasonable basis. Though the agricultural land is made the object of taxation, other property, as for example buildings, etc., have not been so made liable. But there is a clear classification and there is a rational basis for it. ILR (1960) 1 All 487: 1959 All LJ 754: 1959 All WR (HC) 544 (2): AIR 1960 All 136 (151, 152) (Pt I) (Pr 47).

Item 49, List II, Seventh Sch. to the Constitution of India, assigns the subject of 'Taxes on Lands and Buildings' to the State Legislature. Therefore, it is prima facie within the competence of the State Legislature to make all laws on the topic relating to taxes on buildings. The Andhra Pradesh Urban Areas Surcharge on Property Tax Act, 1958, was made with a view to provide for levy of surcharge on property tax on certain buildings in the major municipalities in the State of Andhra Pradesh. The Act only permits an increase in the property tax at the rate specified against each class in column 2 of the table. The subject-matter of the tax remains the building itself. It cannot be regarded as a tax on the tax. Art. 271 of the Constitution clearly establishes that 'surcharge' is only an increase in the duties or taxes leviable under a particular enactment, i.e., it is an extra charge or tax. Therefore, the impugned Act relates to the subject of taxes on buildings within the contemplation of Entry 49 of List II.

Section 4 (2) (a) of the Act confers only a general power upon the executive authority and does not exclude any particular owner or class of owners. Therefore, it may be difficult to predicate that the clause by itself suffers from the vice of hostile discrimination, attracting Art. 14 of the Constitution. But the particular act performed by the executive authority may be open to question as being tainted with hostile discrimination and that act could be attacked as repugnant to Art. 14.

Section 78 (3) of the Madras District Municipalities Act is inapplicable to the instant case because this is not a case where the municipality has determined to levy a tax in which case alone the rate has to be specified. Even otherwise, if the executive authority makes the levy without following the procedure indicated in the District Municipalities Act, (according to the provisions of S. 5 of the Act) it is capable of being rectified in appeal. (1963) 1 An WR 267: AIR 1963 Andh Pra 379 (380) (Pt B) (Pr 5).

Interpretation of statutes — Unconstitutionality of Legislation — Severability, question relating to — If Rules framed alone can be struck down.

The provisions of Sections 5, 6 and 7 of the Kerala Land Tax Act (XIII of 1961) which are the material provisions of the Act, are ultra vires and unconstitutional, Section 5 as being violative of Articles 19 (1) (f) and 19 (5) of the Constitution and Sections 6 and 7 as being violative of Articles 14 and 19 (1) (f) of the Constitution. As Sections 5, 6 and 7 are invalid inasmuch as they offend the fundamental rights guaranteed by Arts. 14 and 19 of the Constitution, the imposition of tax levied thereunder cannot also be said to meet the requirements of Art. 31 (1).

S. 7 is so closely knit with Sections 5 and 6 that it is not possible to isolate the same. Even otherwise, as S. 7 is violative of Articles 14 and 19 (1) (f) no question of severability of that provision arises at all. Without the Act, the rules framed under the Act cannot stand and the Kerala Land Tax Rules, 1961, have also to be struck down. AIR 1961 SC 552 and AIR 1962 SC 1563, Applied.

Sections 9, 10 and 11 are absolutely illusory and they have to be struck down. In view of the fact that the main sections are struck down and also the other sections mentioned above have to be struck down, it follows that the entire Act and the Rules framed thereunder will have both to be declared unconstitutional.

——Arts. 14, 19 (1) (f), Seventh Sch. List II, Entry 49 — Madras District Boards (Amendment) Act, 1957 (Kerala Act 4 of 1958) — Validity — Act infringes Arts. 14 and 19 (1) (f) and is ultra vires.

There is no material difference in the application of the principles to a tax on land and a land revenue and both of them must have reference to the actual or potential productivity of the land, and the particular levy must have also a reference to the income that is actually made. Under Section 78 of the Madras District Boards Act (XIV of 1920) as it now stands as substituted by S. 3 of the Kerala Act IV of 1958, the land cess is to be levied on all lands in the District. The tax is to be at a uniform rate of one naya paisa per annum for every five cents of land or part thereof. But the levy is by way of "a tax". Under the new S. 78, as incorporated by S. 3 of the Amending Act, the land cess is to be levied on all lands irrespective of the fact whether they are occupied or unoccupied. There is also power given, under S. 78, as it now stands to the State Government to exempt any land or class of lands from the operation of the levy. There are no principles laid down by the statute which should govern the exercise of the power to grant exemption. The provisions contained in Ss. 79 to 86 of the original Act related to the question as to how exactly the annual rent value was to be calculated. By virtue of S. 4 of the Amendment Act, the entire body of Ss. 79 to 86 of the original Act has been completely taken away from the Statute. Inequality is thus writ large on the Act and there is no attempt at classification either. Therefore, Kerala Act IV of 1958 is hit by the prohibition to deny equality before the law contained in Art. 14 of the Constitution.

Section 4 of 1958 deleted old Ss. 79 to 86 and the levy treated as of a purely administrative character. There has thus been a very serious infringement of the fundamental right to hold and enjoy property guaranteed under Art. 19 (1) (f) of the Constitution and the Kerala Act IV of 1958 has to be struck down on that ground also.

Therefore, the levy of land cess that is made on the basis of Kerala Act IV of 1958, namely, the Madras District Boards (Amendment) Act, 1957, will have to be held invalid. The Act itself, namely, Kerala Act IV of 1958, has to be struck down as unconstitutional and void as being violative of Arts. 14 and 19 (1) (f). No doubt, there are two sections in the amending Act, Ss. 5 and 6, but they are also really enacted in consequence of the main provisions made in the earlier sections of the amending Act. Sections 5 and 6 are closely allied to and dependent on the other sections 2, 3 and 4. If those sections are struck down, Ss. 5 and 6 also will have to go. Therefore, the entire Act (viz., the Madras District Boards (Amendment) Act, 1957), being Kerala Act IV of 1958, will have to be struck down as unconstitutional and void. AIR 1961 SC 552, Rel. on. ——Arts. 14 and 19 — Mysore Buildings Tax Act (4 of 1963), S. 4 — Classification based on floorage of building, not rational — Classification lies no just relationship with object of Act — Act violates fundamental rights under Arts. 14 and 19 of Constitution.

Per Hegde, J.: The floorage basis is not only unscientific, it is something arbitrary and mechanical. It does not conform to any of the known principles of taxation. In the very nature of things, under that basis the incidence of tax must fall unevenly on things similar. The classification adopted appears to be a mere mechanical formality devised in a haphazard manner as cover for raising money. It does not disclose differentiation pertinent to the burden being heavy in some cases and light in others. The mere fact of classification is not sufficient to relieve a statute from the reach of the equality clause. In such matters there should be not only a classification but the same should be based upon reasonable ground of some difference which bears a just and proper relation to the attempted classification and is not a mere arbitrary selection. The object of the "Act" is not to limit the floorage of the buildings in towns but to raise public revenue. Therefore, the classification on the basis of floorage has no just relationship with the object of the "Act". Hence the "Act" suffers from lack of rational classification. The "Act" is void as it does not conform to the Constitutional requirements embodied in Art. 14.

S. 4, the charging section, is violative of Art. 14, of the Constitution and as the other sections are merely machinery provisions which cannot exist without the charging section, the entire "Act" must be held to be void and inoperative.

Per G. Bhat J.: The levy of property tax requires the legislation to fix a reasonable co-relation to the value of the property to the assessee; any other basis would constitute mal-apportionment and result in arbitrariness and inequality.

The only factor taken into consideration by the impugned Act for the purpose of apportionment is the size of the building in disregard as to its age, location; rental value or capital value. What is material to the assessee, who is the owner of the property, is the present value of the property at the time of the assessment. That is a cardinal principle in the matter of valuation of premises for rateable purposes and as they exist at the date of the valuation. The basis of the tax under the impugned Act has no reasonable co-relation to the value of the building of the assessee, and therefore, the impugned Act violates the fundamental rights guaranteed to the citizens of India, under Arts. 14 and 19 of the Constitution of India, and being inconsistent with the provisions of Part III of the Constitution, the impugned Act is void. AIR 1965 Mys 170 (185, 208, 209) (Pt G) (Prs 41, 121, 125) (DB).

The Proclamation by its preamble as also by the 4th section envisages a scheme for levying basic tax on all lands in the State to which the Proclamation will apply. Only the lands comprised in the four sub-clauses of the first clause of S. 6 are excluded from its operation and no other lands. ——Arts. 14, 301 and 304 (b) — Equality before Law — Discrimination — Madras Motor Vehicles (Taxation of Passengers and Goods) Andhra Pradesh Amendment Act (XXI of 1959) passed without sanction of President — Validity — Scope.

Part XIII of the Constitution is comprehensive enough to take in taxing laws. The scope and amplitude of Art. 301 has to be judged with reference to factors qualifying that freedom. A combined reading of Arts. 301 and 304 (b) gives this effect to Part XIII. The Proviso to Art. 304 (b) of the Constitution makes it obligatory on the State Legislature to obtain the previous sanction of the President. Thus, while there is no lack of initial legislative competence to pass a law for levying tax on passengers or goods, it is subject to the limitation laid down by the Proviso to Cl. (b) of Art. 304. If that Proviso is not complied with, the law enacting restrictions on freedom of trade is invalid.

Since the Madras Motor Vehicles (Taxation of Passengers and Goods) Andhra Pradesh Amendment Act, places a restriction on the motor transport trade, the Act attracts the applicability of Art. 304 (b), Proviso and the omission in this behalf is fatal to the Act. The impugned legislation is therefore void. The complaint that the operators belonging to Madras State, who ply their vehicles on routes lying in Andhra State under a primary permit granted by Madras State pay lower rate of tax than the petitioners, is not traceable to any law passed by the Andhra Pradesh Legislature. It is the consequence of two different legislations of two different States. Equality before the law can be claimed only when persons are subject to the same law of one State, and not when different persons are subject to the laws of different States. Therefore, there is no question of unconstitutional arbitrary discrimination. (1961) 1 An WR 351: 1961 Andh LT 333: ILR (1962) Andhra Pra 377: AIR 1962 Andh Pra 103 (105, 106).

For the purpose of a valid classification, two ingredients are essential: (i) there must be an intelligible basis for differentiation and (ii) the said differentiation must have a rational relation to the object of the legislation.

The Courts have to permit wider classification under the power of taxation if possible, than merely in the exercise of the police powers. The reason for it undoubtedly is the urgent need for revenue by the various governmental agencies.

As there may be a rational basis for not levying any tax on tea and jute carried otherwise than in chests and bales respectively, it cannot be contended that the Assam Act is discriminatory in its character and therefore violates Art. 14. ——Art. 14 — Mysore Motor Vehicles (Taxation on Passengers and Goods) Act (10 of 1961) — Validity — Act not to be held invalid on ground of its being discriminatory.

The Legislature has been given the power to make a law imposing a tax on passengers and goods carried by road and it need not and is not bound to impose a tax on all passengers and goods carried by road, by whatever method of transport they might have been carried. It is open to the Legislature to select passengers carried by a particular kind of transport, provided the selection rests upon a reasonable classification. The object of the impugned Act was to levy a tax on passengers and goods carried by stage carriage and public carrier vehicles. The passengers carried by stage carriages are plainly those falling within a category by themselves, the classification made by the Legislature being one which cannot but be regarded as reasonable. Likewise, goods carried by public carrier vehicles also fall within a similar classification. The impugned Act cannot be attacked as being discriminatory in respect of a passenger carried by a taxi. Likewise the Act cannot be held to be discriminatory on the ground that the goods carried by a stage carriage are charged under the impugned Act at a higher rate than those carried by a public carrier vehicle. The two kinds of goods are clearly goods falling into different classifications for the purpose of the Act and they cannot be regarded as similar goods even though the commodity carried may be the same. AIR 1963 Mys 49 (58, 59) (Pt C) (Prs 61, 63, 64, 65, 66) (DB).

The Hindu undivided families of wealth have been singled out by the Act from other similar joint families in the country and the State has thereby denied equal protection of the law to the former. The provisions in the Act relating to Hindu undivided families are severable and to that extent the Act has to be struck down. ——Art. 14 — Wealth Tax Act (1957) — Discrimination — Validity — Act does not contravene Art. 14.

The provisions of the Wealth Tax Act dealing with a Hindu undivided family cannot be struck down on the ground that the Act discriminated in favour of other (non-Hindu) undivided families. It cannot also be held that the rates of tax as given in the schedule providing for different rates for individuals and Hindu undivided families amount to unfair discrimination. It is open to Parliament to say that the number of undivided families of non-Hindus who may be assessable to wealth tax is so negligible that it is not necessary to treat them as a separate entity. Again, it is open to the Legislature to classify a Hindu undivided family as a distinct unit apart from an individual, for the purpose of levying a separate rate of tax. It cannot be urged that if for the purpose of construing Entry 86 in List I of the 7th Schedule the expression 'individual' occurring therein is held to include an undivided Hindu family also, on the ground that a Hindu undivided family is only a group of individuals, the levy of a separate rate of wealth tax on Hindu undivided families as provided in the schedule to the Wealth Tax Act, must be held to be unconstitutional. Once it is held that the power to tax is conferred by the Entry, the classification of the assessees for the purpose of levying different rates of taxation, must be left to the wisdom of the Legislature, and it need not necessarily follow the same rule of construction applied in interpreting an Entry in the Legislative List. Considerations of equity, reason of justice, have no place in a taxing statute, which must be construed only on the basis of the language used therein. 1921 (1) KB 64 and (1834) (2) Dowl. 497, Rel. on. AIR 1962 Kerala 110, Diss. from. ILR (1964) Cut 1: 30 Cut LT 299: (1965) 56 ITR 298: 1963 ITJ (Sup) 146: AIR 1964 Orissa 128 (133, 134) (Pt F) (Prs 17, 18) (DB).

14 (h). Gift tax.

——Art. 14 — Gift tax — Marwar Patta Act (1921), Ss. 6 (2), 8, 17 (2); 21 (1) (2); 24 — Validity.

Such a tax which is imposed by S. 17 (2), or S. 21 (1), or S. 24 of Marwar Patta Act in the case of gifts cannot now be upheld when we know that there is no similar provision in other parts of Rajasthan. Art. 14 hits these provisions relating to taxation in cases of pattas of this kind of transfer by sale or gift, for such tax only exists in that part of the State of Rajasthan, which was covered by the former State of Marwar and that too only in Khalsa villages. In other parts of Rajasthan, the person who obtains a sale deed after paying the requisite stamp duty and registration fees becomes the owner of the property, and there are no restrictions on his right of ownership of any kind.

Therefore, Ss. 6 (2), 8, 17 (2), 21 (1) and 24, so far as they relate to taking of Pattas on the occasion of transfer by sale or gift, are now invalidated under Art. 13 of the Constitution read with Art. 14. S. 21 (2) forbids the Courts from selling non-Pattashud land in execution of a decree. There is no similar law in other parts of the State of Rajasthan, which prohibits the Courts from selling what is called non-Pattashud land. When these six main provisions have fallen, any consequential or procedural provisions relating to such sale or gift also fall. 1957 Raj LW 1: ILR (1956) 6 Raj 1037: AIR 1957 Raj 84 (86, 87) (Prs 15, 16, 17) (DB).

14 (i). Entertainment tax.

——Art. 14 — Tax laws — Classification for purposes of — Validity of S. 4-A of Madras Entertainments Tax Act (10 of 1939).

Article 14 does not preclude a legislature from making a classification for purposes of tax laws. The classification could be based on objects or occupations or the like. To sustain a classification under the Article it should be based on the real differences as distinguished from irrelevant and artificial ones. But the classification should be founded on a differentia having reasonable relation to the object of the impugned law. It is not possible to maintain that the statute, namely S. 4-A of the Madras Entertainments Tax Act, infringes the principles enshrined in Art. 14 by making a discrimination between exhibitors of cinematographs shows and persons giving other entertainments. ILR (1959) Andh Pra 34: (1959) 1 Andh WR 347: 1959 Andh LT 419: AIR 1959 Andh Pra 461 (467, 468) (Pt D) (Pr 33) (DB).

14 (j). Sugarcane cess.

——Art. 14 — U. P. Sugarcane Cess Act (22 of 1956), S. 3 (1) — Constitutional validity.

The expression 'premises of a factory' in S. 3 (1) of the U. P. Act (XXII of 1956), means 'factory premises', and the power conferred on the State Government is to impose a cess on the entry of cane into factory premises. The State Government has no power to pick and choose, but has power only to impose or not to impose a cess on cane entering factory premises, that is to say, the premises of all factories as defined in the Act. The Court will incline towards the constitutionality of an enactment. AIR 1957 All 159 (162) (Pt A) (Pr 12) (DB).

——Arts. 14, 245 — U. P. Sugarcane Cess Act (22 of 1956), S. 3 (1) — Constitutional validity.

The vesting of a discretion in the State Government to impose a cess of lesser amount, the exercise of which can only be to the advantage of the person on whom the cess is imposed, cannot be held to be unconstitutional. It cannot also be said that the conferment on the State Government of the power to determine the amount of the cess exceeds the permissible limits of delegated legislation. The purpose of the Act being the augmention of the State revenue, the legislature intended that the rate should be fixed as would best serve that purpose. It was intended that the State Government should, in exercising the powers conferred on it, take into account such factors as are relevant for this purpose, the most important of which are presumably the needs of the State and the economic condition of the vacuum pan sugar factory. S. 3 (1) neither permits discrimination nor exceeds the permitted limits of delegated legislation. AIR 1957 All 159 (162, 163) (Pt B) (Prs 13, 14) (DB).

——Art. 14 — U. P. Sugarcane Cess Act (22 of 1956), S. 3 (1) — Validity — Right to chailenge — When arises.

If an enactment passed by a legislature is inconsistent with Art. 14 of the Constitution, and in the exercise of a power conferred by such an enactment a Government or a public officer issues a notification demanding payment of money from a citizen or directing him to deal with his property in a certain manner, the citizen can come to a Court and is entitled to say that action is being taken against him under a law which is void, being inconsistent with the Constitution. It is not necessary that apart from the Act the action of the executive authority must also be discriminatory before a citizen can come to a Court to have the validity of the law determined. It cannot therefore be said that the petitioners can have no legitimate grievance till the State Government has issued some notification actually exercising improper discrimination between owners of different factories. AIR 1957 All 159 (170) (Pt O) (Pr 62) (DB).

——Art. 14 — Classification and discrimination— Punjab Tobacco Vend Fees Act (12 of 1954), S. 4 and Tobacco Vend Fees Rules (1955), R. 4 — Validity.

The essence of the constitutional right of equal protection of the laws is that every one is entitled to stand before the law on equal terms with, to enjoy the same rights and privileges as are enjoyed by others in a like situation. It does not forbid discrimination with respect to things that are different or deprive the State of power to resort to classification or subjects for legislative action or prohibit legislation which is limited to the territory within which it is to operate.

The imposition under the Punjab Tobacco Vend Fees Act is not discriminatory and violative of the provisions of Art. 14 on the ground that it applies only to dealers in tobacco who carry on business within the limits of municipalities, notified areas, etc., and not manufacturers and dealers who carry on their business in other parts of the State. Nor is the imposition invalid on the ground that the State has discriminated between dealer and dealer by imposing different fees on different classes of dealers in tobacco. This classification is neither arbitrary nor unreasonable for substantial differences in the size and importance of the establishment in which the business is conducted may be made the basis of classification. 58 Punj LR 480: ILR (1957) Punj 184: AIR 1957 Punj 45 (49) (Pt D) (Prs 13, 14) (DB).

VII, List I, Item 91 of the Constitution, the rates of stamp duty prevailing in different parts of the State at the time of the enactment of the Rajasthan Stamp Law (Adaptation) Act, 1952, were left intact by the proviso. ● ——Art. 14 — Imposition of tax on land used as market, challenged as discriminatory— Nature of proof required — Vague allegations — No material to show discrimination — Attack on ground of discrimination must fail — Assam Local Self-Government Act (25 of 1953), S. 62.

Where the appellant challenges on the ground of discrimination, the imposition under S. 62, Assam Local Self-Government Act, of tax on land used as market he has to produce facts and figures from which it can be inferred that the tax imposed in the case is hit by Art. 14 of the Constitution. Where all that the appellant has stated in his writ petition is that the Local Board fixed a high rate arbitrarily and thus discriminated against the appellant's market as against the other neighbouring markets where the tax had been fixed at a much lower rate, and that this was hit by Art. 14, the allegation by the appellant that Art. 14 had been infringed is vague and gives no facts and figures for holding that the tax imposed on the appellant's market was discriminatory.

Where the rule [R. 300 (2) framed in accordance with S. 63 (3)] provides the maximum of Rs. 1,000 that can be imposed as tax and that the Board has to graduate the tax according to the size and importance of the market, if the appellant has to succeed on his plea of Art. 14 on the ground that the tax fixed on his market was discriminatory he has to adduce facts and figures, firstly, as to the size of the five markets on which the tax was levied in the relevant years and secondly, as to the relative importance of these markets. But where no such facts and figures have been adduced on behalf of the appellant and there is no material by which to judge the relative size and importance of the five markets, it is not possible to hold that there was discrimination in taxing the appellant's market at Rs. 600 per year as compared to taxing the three other markets at less than Rs. 600. Per Fazl Ali, Das and Mukherjea JJ.—No one except those whose rights are directly affected by a law can raise the question of the constitutionality of that law.

The company and the share-holders are in law separate entities, and if the allegation is made that any property belonging to the Company has been taken possession of without compensation or the right enjoyed by the Company under Art. 19 (1) (f) has been infringed, it would be for the Company to come forward to assert or vindicate its own rights and not for any individual share-holder to do so.

S. 35 (1), Madras Aliyasanthana Act singles out the kavaru as a unit which might effect a division of the kutumba properties, though individual members who are co-proprietors of the family properties are not given any such right. Section 10 of the Madras Aliyasanthana Act is not discriminatory in character and is not hit by Art. 14 of the Constitution. Its validity cannot be challenged by contending that it is not in accordance with the specific provisions governing divorces under the Hindu Marriage Act since in this country, the law relating to divorce is not uniform. In this regard the Muslims have their own law. The Christians are governed by the Indian Divorce Act. Even amongst the Hindus the divorce laws are not uniform. Art. 14 does not prohibit diversity in Laws. It only prohibits discrimination. That article provides equal treatment under similar circumstances. Different legislations based on different customs cannot be assailed on the basis of Art. 14 of the Constitution. They are clearly saved by the rule of classification. AIR 1963 Mys 245 (247) (Pt A) (Prs 12, 13).

The classification of the Lingayats amongst Sudras, does not contravene the provisions of Arts. 14, 15 and 17 of the Constitution of India, for a particular reason that there is no deprivation of the rights of Lingayats. On the other hand, there is an enlarged right given to the Lingayats to adopt even wife's sister's son. The general law classifies Hindus into four classes. Therefore, it cannot be said that because a particular community of the Hindus comes within the four corners of one class or the other, there is discrimination so far as that community is concerned. 38 Mys L J 497 : I L R (1959) Mys 577 : A I R 1960 Mys 147 (154) (Pt B) (Pr 13) (DB).

Article 15 of the Constitution gives the power to Parliament to make such a law. Moreover, women as a class are different from men as a class, and the legislation has merely removed their disability. Clause (3) of the Constitution (Scheduled Castes) Order (1950) cannot be held to be discriminatory on the ground that by the amendment of that clause by Act LXIII of 1956, the generality of the expression 'Hindu' used in the old clause (3) was taken away by a specific mention of the Sikh religion separately and that as the intention is to confine scheduled castes to those professing Hinduism or Sikhism it excludes persons of scheduled castes belonging to Jain or Buddhist religion. Explanation II to Art. 25 of the Constitution of India lays down that the reference to 'Hindus' shall be construed as including a reference to persons professing the Sikh, Jain or Buddhist religion only in sub-clause (b) of clause (2) of that article. In general the term 'Hindu' does not include those professing the Buddhist religion. Jains and Sikhs are governed by Hindu law and they are included in the term 'Hindu'. The Jaipur Prevention of Unequal Marriages Act, 1948 which applies to persons living within the geographical limits of the old Jaipur State as it was before its integration with the State of Rajasthan and to what S. 6 calls the 'domiciled residents' of that State, as now applicable to a part of residents of a State of Rajasthan cannot be upheld as founded on the doctrine of reasonable and permissible classification and is unconstitutional as violative of Art. 14 of the Constitution inasmuch as it subjects the residents of the State of Rajasthan living in the area of former Jaipur State to a discriminatory treatment as respects the law relating to marriages as contra-distinguished from the residents of the State of Rajasthan living in other parts thereof. ILR (1960) 10 Raj 12 : 1960 Raj L W 477 : A I R 1960 Raj 118 (119, 120) (Prs 8, 9) (DB).

● ——Art. 14—Rule of damdupat is hit by Art. 14—(Hindu Law—Rule of Damdupat).

The rule of Damdupat is in force only in certain areas of the State of Rajasthan and not over the entire State. The rule of Damdupat deals with the matter of interest. This is a question of general civil law, and there is nothing in it which is in the nature of personal law of the Hindus. It cannot, therefore, be enforced as a custom relating to personal law of the Hindus in this area.

In the second place, there are Hindus in other areas of Rajasthan also, and there is no reason why there should be discrimination even between Hindus and Hindus in different areas of the same State. There is no reason why the Hindus in the areas where the rule prevails should be treated differently from the Hindus in the area where the rule does not prevail. There can, therefore, be no justification for the prevalence of this rule now in some areas only of the State on the ground that this is a customary personal law of the Hindus in that area.

The rule is, therefore, hit in the circumstances by Art. 14 of the Constitution, as by enforcing it the State would be denying equality before law to the citizens of this area. Sheokaran Singh v. Daulatram, A I R 1955 Raj 201 (203) (Pt F) (Pr 18) (FB).

● ——Art. 14—Classification — Bihar Hindu Religious Trusts Act, Ss. 2, 5, 6, 7 and 8 — Validity — If contravene Art. 14.

There are some differences between Hindus, Sikhs and Jains in some of the essential details of the faith which they profess and the religious practices they observe. In view of these differences it cannot be said that in the matter of religious trusts in the State of Bihar, Sikhs, Hindus and Jains are situated alike or that the needs of the Jains and Hindus are the same in the matter of the administration of their respective religious trusts; therefore, according to the well-established principles laid down by the Supreme Court with regard to Legislative classification, it was open to the Bihar Legislature to exclude Sikhs who might have been in no need of protection and to distinguish between Hindus and Jains. Sections 2, 5, 6, and 7 and 8 of the Bihar Hindu Religious Trusts Act do not, therefore, contravene Art. 14 of the Constitution. Moti Das v. S. P. ——Art. 14—Bihar Hindu Religious Trusts Act (1 of 1951)—Validity.

The guarantee of equal protection under Art. 14 is not absolute. The article does not prohibit legislative classification nor does it prevent the legislature from enacting special laws to combat special evils. The Court ought to make every possible presumption in favour of the constitutionality of an enactment. The onus is therefore on the petitioners to establish that the classification adopted by the Legislature is arbitrary and unreasonable. Sikhs, Jains and Hindus differ in the matter of numerical strength. It is also conceivable that there is difference as regards the number of religious institutions, the amount of the properties held, the measures and extent of mismanagement and the consequent need for control. The onus is on the petitioners to show that the Hindus, Jains and Sikhs, were similarly situated in respect of these matters and that the classification adopted in the Bihar Hindu Religious Trusts Act is unreasonable.

Held, that the petitioners had not established their claim that the classification under the Act was unreasonable or that the guarantee of equal protection of laws under Art. 14 was violated. The Hyderabad Endowments Regulations (1940) and the Rules framed thereunder cannot be attacked as violative of Art. 14, because of the two different laws in force with respect to religious endowments in the two areas of the State of Andhra Pradesh, one of which came to that State from the State of Madras in 1953 and the other from the former State of Hyderabad in 1956. Different though parallel laws in different areas of Andhra Pradesh can be sustained on the ground that the differentiation arises from historical reasons, and a geographical classification based on historical reasons can be upheld as being not contrary to the equal protection clause in Art. 14. ——Art. 14—Equal protection —Scope of doctrine—Madras Hindu Religious and Charitable Endowments Act (19 of 1951), S. 3 — Validity—If violates Art. 14.

The doctrine of the equal protection of the laws forbids all invidious discrimination, but does not require identical treatment for all persons irrespective of their differences. It does not forbid reasonable legislative classification. If the legislature lays down a standard expressly or by necessary implication for the exercise of the discretion by the executive authority, it will not offend the equal protection clause. Though a provision may not be struck down as unconstitutional a particular act of an authority will be struck down if that act is done arbitrarily in violation of the standard laid down.

The object of the Madras Hindu Religious and Charitable Endowments Act is to prevent mismanagement of the charitable institution, the object to be achieved the authority indicated and the procedure prescribed. Section 3 of the Act has not violated the equality doctrine enshrined in Art. 14 of the Constitution. 1956 Andh L T 940.

——Art. 14—Scope—S. 3 of Madras Hindu Religious and Charitable Endowments Act—Validity.

It cannot be said that every enabling power is necessarily violative of Art. 14 and that to satisfy the requirement of the Article there must be a compellable duty enjoined upon the authority. 'Mismanagement' in S. 3 of the Madras Hindu Religious and Charitable Endowments Act, indicates improper management or management in a manner not in conformity with the law, in accordance with the intentions of the founder or in the interests of the institution. Of course Government had to be satisfied that there was 'mismanagement before they could take action under S. 3 but this surely cannot render the law permitting such action arbitrary within Art. 14. Under the terms of S. 3 it is only if the Government were satisfied that an endowment was mismanaged and that in its interest the provisions of the Act should be made applicable that they are directed to issue the notification. None is precluded from bringing to the notice of the Government the mismanagement of any institution and it is only if they are satisfied that they are enabled to do so. 1956 Mad W N 177 (2) : 71 Mad L W 222 : (1958) 1 Mad L J 248 : AIR 1958 Mad 532 (533, 534) (Pt C) (Pr 7).

● ——Art. 14 — Reasonable classification — T. C. Hindu Religious Institutions Act (15 of 1950), S. 1—Act does not offend Art. 14 of Constitution.

The classification of institutions and endowments based on religion, Hindu, Muhammadan or Christian, cannot be said to be either arbitrary or unreasonable having regard to the object sought to be attained, namely the better administration and management of such institutions. It is not a classification or division made for the first time by the State Legislature. Article 14 does not prevent the Legislature from taking up one set of institutions for legislative consideration at one time and enacting laws in respect of them reserving the other types of institutions for consideration to a future date. Hence, the Travancore-Cochin Hindu Religious Institutions Act, 1950, does not offend Art. 14 of the Constitution. A I R 1952 Mad 613, Foll. P. M. Bramadathan Nambooripad v. The restrictions imposed by Ss. 63 and 64 of the Travancore-Cochin Hindu Religious Institutions Act, 1950, in the choice of the members of the Cochin Devaswom Board do not violate the provisions of any of the Arts. 14, 15 (1), 19 (1) (f) and (g) and 26. The conferring of a power to give an effective decision on an administrative body in the first instance subject to its being modified or set aside by the ordinary courts on the motion of the person aggrieved —which is all that is done by S. 114—is not a violation either of the right to equality guaranteed by Art. 14 or the freedoms given by Art. 19 of the Constitution. ● ——Art. 14 — Travancore-Cochin Hindu Religious Institutions Act (15 of 1950), S. 87 (3)—Validity.

Section 87 (3) embodies a discrimination as far as the trustees of Devaswoms in the Cochin portion of the State are concerned as no similar provision obtains in Part I of the Travancore-Cochin Hindu Religious Institutions Act, 1950, which deals with the Travancore portion of the State. There is no distinction between the trustees of the temples in the Travancore and Cochin areas of the State or any reasonable basis for classifying them into two separate groups. Cases under U. P. Muslim Waqfs Act.

——Art. 14—Reasonable classification and discrimination — U. P. Muslim Waqfs Act (16 of 1960) — Validity.

Guiding principles are laid down in S. 55 of the U. P. Muslim Waqfs Act (1960), itself. It is now well established that classification is permissible under Art. 14 of the Constitution. The cases in which a mutwalli can be removed under S. 55, are a permissible classification and no discrimination is involved. The Board has no power to remove a mutwalli arbitrarily. The classes mentioned in S. 55 have a reasonable relation to the object of the Legislature in enacting the Act. The preamble of the Act shows that it was enacted for better governance, administration and supervision of certain classes of waqfs in Uttar Pradesh. The object of the Act can therefore, be achieved, undoubtedly, by removing mutwallis mentioned in S. 55. Under S. 55 an opportunity is given to any person aggrieved by an order of removal to refer the matter to the Tribunal. S. 72 of the Act deals with the procedure before Tribunals and prescribes that a Tribunal shall follow the same procedure as is provided under the Code of Civil Procedure as regards suits. S. 74 deals with the powers of the Tribunal and says that a Tribunal shall be deemed to be a Civil Court and shall have the same powers as are vested in such a Court under the Code of Civil Procedure. It follows, therefore, that the Tribunal has complete powers to grant stay orders. Sub-s. (2) of S. 72 of the Act applies the provisions of the Indian Evidence Act to the adjudication of disputes by a Tribunal. Although no appeal has been provided, a revision can be filed in High Court against an order of the Tribunal. The proviso to S. 76 shows that the powers of the High Court are very wide in revisions filed against an order of the Tribunal and therefore, no prejudice is caused if no appeal has been provided against an order of the Board. AIR 1952 S C 75, Disting.

The Act has been enacted by the State Legislature under the concurrent list of the Constitution and therefore, the State Legislature was quite competent to enact such an Act and it is not hit by Art. 14 of the Constitution even if the Act has not given the powers that have been given to a mutwalli under the Central Waqf Act (19 of 1954); AIR 1954 S C 493, Foll. ——Art. 14—Discrimination — U. P. Muslim Waqfs Act (16 of 1960), S. 33 — Validity — Section is not discriminatory and is not hit by Art. 14.

The provisions of S. 33 are not arbitrary. Under sub-s. (2) of S. 33 of the Act any person aggrieved by the decision of the Board, may, by application, within 90 days from the date of such decision refer the dispute to the Tribunal which acts like a Civil Court. The rules of evidence and the Code of Civil Procedure have been made applicable to the adjudication of disputes by a Tribunal under S. 72 of the Act. Section 33 of the Act is, therefore, not discriminatory and is not hit by Article 14 of the Constitution. AIR 1965 All 333 (343, 344) (Pt H) (Pr 49).

This differentiation resulting from the Hindu Married Women's Right to Separate Residence and Maintenance Act (1946) cannot be said to be discriminatory or repugnant to Art. 14 of the Constitution of India as the classification is a reasonable one. 1956 Cri L J 1395 : AIR 1956 Bhopal 71 (72) (Pt C) (Pr 6).

——Arts. 14 and 16—Classification on religious basis —Validity.

Article 14 of the Constitution briefly speaking puts all citizens in the State on a footing of equality without distinction of colour, creed or caste. If there is any law which is discriminatory in character between one citizen and another, the law or the interpretation thereof being discriminatory will be ultra vires of the Constitution as being hit by Art 14. That principle has been amongst other Articles, clearly recognised in Art. 16 which prohibits discrimination in respect of employment or office on the ground of religion, race or caste, etc. The Constitution has given power to a State by Cl. (4) of Art. 16 to make provision for the reservation of appointment or posts in favour of any backward class or citizens which in the opinion of the State is not adequately represented in the services under the State. But that power is exercisable only on the ground of any class being backward. Therefore, the Cabinet Order sanctioning the reorganisation of Audit and Accounts department with a view to removing the Communal disparity irrespective of the fact of backwardness must be declared to be repugnant to the provisions of Arts. 14 and 16 of the Constitution and therefore void, illegal and ineffective. ——Art. 14—Rule of equal access—Limitations.

The rule of equal access laid down by Art. 14 is subject to the following limitation : (1) It does not prevent adjudication of special class of cases or disputes by special tribunals, for example, agricultural debts. Hence, if there is a reasonable basis for classification, special tribunals may be created for the trial of cases of special nature provided no differentiation is made between cases belonging to the same class or nature; and (2) when a right is created by a statute, the statute may provide for special remedy and special forum for the determination of such a right in each case. 1960 All W R (H C) 77 : 1960 All L J 52.

● —Art. 14 — Provision for Special Magistrates — Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 14 (as amended by Bombay Act, 23 of 1951)—S. 14 not ultra vires Art. 14 of the Constitution—Notification by Maharashtra Government under S. 14 appointing Special Magistrate having jurisdiction over Greater Bombay and Ratnagiri District — Notification conferring upon him all powers of Presidency Magistrate in respect of trial in a case involving seizure of foreign gold—Whether ultra vires Art. 14.

A law vesting discretion in an authority to appoint a Special Magistrate under S. 14 of the Code of Criminal Procedure to try cases entirely under the normal procedure cannot be regarded as discriminatory and is not hit by Art. 14 of the Constitution. There is substantially no difference between the powers conferable by S. 14 of the Code as originally enacted and S. 14 as amended by Bombay Act, 23 of 1951. Apart from certain procedural matters such as consultation with the High Court before entrustment of the said powers, the only difference made by the Bombay Act is that a Special Magistrate may be appointed even in respect of a Presidency town. Section 14 contemplates that a Special Magistrate may be entrusted with powers which are conferable by or under the Code on a Judicial Magistrate. A Presidency Magistrate being a Judicial Magistrate under S 6-A as added by the Bombay Legislature, powers conferable on a Presidency Magistrate may lawfully be conferred upon a Special Judicial Magistrate who has been appointed for the Presidency town with or without any additional locality. There is nothing in S. 20 which provides for the local limits of jurisdiction of a Presidency Magistrate, which detracts from the authority which may be exercised by the State Government under S. 14 to appoint a Special Judicial Magistrate in respect of a Presidency Town nor is there any prohibition against the investiture of powers of a Presidency Magistrate upon such Magistrate in respect of a locality outside the Presidency town so long as he has jurisdiction also over a Presidency Town. Section 14 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, as amended, cannot thus be regarded as infringing Art. 14 of the Constitution. AIR 1954 S C 362, Foll.

Held, on facts that there was no discrimination practised by the Notification constituting a Special Magistrate for the trial of the case against the petitioners. The words used in S. 14 must mean a case which is either pending or which may be instituted after the date of the constitution of the Special Magistrate. 1956 S C J 492 : (S) AIR 1956 S C 479, Disting. By the Notification the Special Judicial Magistrate has been invested with the powers over Greater Bombay and Ratnagiri District. The Special Judicial Magistrate therefore has the power to sit at any place within his local area as defined by the terms of his appointment. By designating a Special Magistrate who would have jurisdiction both over the place where the offenders are alleged to have conspired and the place where offences were actually committed, the State has taken care to see that the trial of the case is held by a Magistrate who has territorial jurisdiction in both areas. It is because powers exercisable by a Presidency Magistrate are conferred upon the Special Magistrate, as they may lawfully be conferred, that the incidental right of appeal which is prescribed by the statute is exercisable in the High Court, and not in the Court of Sessions. There is thus no discrimination practised by the Notification constituting a Special Magistrate for the trial of the case against the petitioners. Jagannath Sonu Parkar v. State of Maharashtra, 1963 (1) Cri L J 639 : AIR 1963 S C 728 (731, 732, 733, 734) (Prs 4, 5, 6, 7).

The Bengal Public Demands Recovery Act, 1880, is not a summary procedure, for it gives opportunities almost at every stage to the borrower. Hence though the right of suit under the Act is much narrower than that under S. 4 of Revenue Recovery Act, the Act is not onerous. The comparison between different methods of recovery provided by different statutes cannot be made and cannot be weighed in a fine scale of balance point for point and provision for provision to discover breach of Art. 14 of the Constitution. Hair-splitting distinction between the relative advantages and disadvantages of methods of recovery under (1) Revenue Recovery Act, (2) Public Demands Recovery Act and (3) ordinary mortgage suit or other procedures in this connection does not seem to be proper or appropriate, for expounding the great constitutional doctrine of equality of law or equal protection of laws. ——Arts. 14 and 31 (1)—"Equality before law" and "equal protection of law"— Meaning of — Vindhya Pradesh Ordinance 57 of 1949, Ss. 3 and 5— If void.

Equality before law, or equal protection of law, does not at all imply absolute equality and does not exclude classification on the basis of difference in status. Corporations, such as banks, can be treated separately from individuals; special privileges may be given to particular enterprises or employments in the interests of economic stability and general welfare. Hence Ss. 3 and 5 of the Vindhya Pradesh Ordinance No. LVII of 1949, cannot be said to offend against Art. 14 of the Constitution and therefore to be void on that account. Nor does the Ordinance offend against Art. 31 of the Constitution, the procedure enacted is in accordance with law. It cannot also be said that the taking away of the jurisdiction of other Courts under S. 5 of the Ordinance is a violation of any fundamental right guaranteed by the Constitution. ——Art. 14—Rule of procedure comes within purview of Art. 14.

A rule of procedure comes as much within the purview of Art. 14 as any rule of substantive law and it is necessary that the litigants, who are similarly situated, are able to avail themselves of the same procedural rights for relief and for defence with like protection and without discrimination. 1960 All W R (H C) 77 : 1960 All L J 52.

● ——Art. 14—Equality before the law and equal protection of the laws—What is.

The guarantee of equality before the law or the equal protection of the laws in Art. 14 means substantial equality of treatment under the laws. Equal treatment is not necessarily identical treatment. Identical treatment, in unequal circumstances may amount to inequality. Thus in different circumstances, variation in legal procedure is not only permissible but necessary. In the interests of justice itself, it is sometimes necessary to abridge the ordinary procedure; but no abridgement of legal procedure which curtails the essential safeguards is permitted. The detailed procedure in normal times in ordinary cases may become harmful in abnormal times and in extraordinary and special cases. Abdur Rahim v. J. A. ● ——Arts. 14, 362—S. 87-B, C. P. Code— Validity— Section does not offend Art. 14.

The ex-Rulers form a class and the special legislation in S. 87-B, C. P. Code is based upon historical considerations applicable to them as a class. The Constitution itself declared in Art. 362 that the rights, etc., would receive recognition. A law made as a result of these considerations must be treated as based on a proper classification of such Rulers. Though Art. 362 speaks of privileges but not of immunities immunity from civil action may be described also as a privilege, because the word 'privilege' is sufficiently wide to include an immunity. The words 'personal rights and privileges' in Art. 362 are sufficiently comprehensive to embrace an immunity of this character. S. 87-B Civil P. C., cannot be challenged as discriminatory, because it arises from a classification based on historical facts. Mohanlal Jain v. His Highness Maharaja Shri Swami Man Singhji, Ex-Ruler of Jaipur (1962) 1 S C J 104 : (1962) 1 S C A 641 : (1962) 1 S C R 702 : AIR 1962 S C 73 (75, 76) (Pt A) (Prs 10, 11).

It is permissible notwithstanding Art. 14 to enact a piece of legislation based on reasonable classification to achieve a particular object. Section 80, Civil P. C. is based upon a reasonable classification for the protection of the interests of the Government and its officers to enable them to have sufficient time to take legal advice and to adjust the matter if possible without the necessity of a suit. It does not violate the protection afforded by Art. 14 of the Constitution. 1958 Andh L T 106 : 1956 Andh W R 54 : I L R (1956) Andh 114 : A I R 1957 Andh Pra 675 (679) (Pt B) (Pr 17) (DB).

——Art. 14 — Civil P. C. (1908), O. 21, R. 22 — If contravenes Art. 14.

It is clear having regard to the scheme embodied in O. 21, Civil P. C., of which R. 22 is only an integral part, that notice is not insisted in the case of decree-holders, who are diligent in executing their decrees, for the judgment-debtors could not possibly have any objection to the execution of the decrees against them.

In O. 21, R. 22, there is no discrimination between the different classes of creditors or debtors. The provisions apply to decree-holders and judgment-debtors alike though apparently a different treatment is meted out during the progress of the same execution. The judgment debtors are not classified at all. But the same rule applies to all the judgment-debtors the variation in the mode of execution only depending on the different stages in execution. In this view no question of discrimination or classification arises and, therefore, O. 21, R. 22 does not contravene Art. 14 of the Constitution of India. 1956 Andh L T 264 : 1956 Andh W R 322 : AIR 1957 Andh Pra 136 (142) (Pt C) (Prs 27, 28) (DB).

——Art. 14—S. 87-B, Civil P. C. —Reasonable classification made under S. 87-B.

Article 14 does not rule out the creation of a class or classes by the Legislature to which a particular law may not apply. But when such a classification is made, the classification must be on a reasonable basis. The classification will be inherently bad if some members of the class are omitted or excluded from the classification.

The view that the classification is bad because all the Rulers of the former Indian States are not exempted under S. 87 B, Civil P. C., from being sued in a Civil Court without the consent of the Central Government is not correct. All the Rulers have not signed an agreement referred to in Art 291 (1), nor has a privy purse been given to every Ruler nor has a privy purse been guaranteed under Art. 291. Therefore there is a special class of Rulers recognised by the Constitution who have signed an agreement under Art. 291 (1) to whom the privy purse has been guaranteed and who have been recognised by the President. It is to this narrow and special class of rulers that the exemption under S. 87-B applies; and it is only to this special class that by the merger agreements their personal privileges have been guaranteed. Therefore, taking into consideration the past history. the antecedents of these Rulers, the merger agreement, and the directions to the Legislature contained in Art. 362, it is impossible to say that there is no reasonable basis for the classification made under S. 87-B, Civil P. C. ILR (1955) Bom 62 : 57 Bom LR 60 : AIR 1955 Bom 195 (197, 198) (Pt B) (Pr 6) (DB).

● ——Art. 14 – 'Reasonable classification'—Criminal trial — Proceedings provided in Ss. 207 and 207-A, Cr. P. Code (as amended by Act 26 of 1955) — Validity.

In the provisions of Ss. 207 and 207-A, as substituted by Act 26 of 1955, the Legislature has provided for a clear classification between two kinds of proceedings at the commitment based upon a very relevant consideration, namely, whether or not there has been a previous inquiry by a responsible public servant whose duty it is to discover crime and to bring criminals to speedy justice. This basis of classification is clearly connected with the underlying principle of administration of justice that an alleged criminal should be placed on his trial as soon after the commission of the crime as circumstances of the case would permit. This classification cannot be said to be unreasonable and not to have any relation to the object of the legislation, namely, a more speedy trial of offences without any avoidable delay. Hence, it must be held that there is no discrimination and that the provisions of Art. 14 of the Constitution, have not been contravened. AIR 1955 S C 191, Foll. Macherla Hanumantha Rao v. ● — Art. 14 — Cr. P. Code (1898), S. 197 — Who can raise objection as to unconstitutionality of S. 197.

There is no question of any discrimination between one person and another in the matter of taking proceedings against a public servant for an act done or purporting to be done by the public servant in the discharge of his official duties No one can take such proceedings without such sanction. If the Government gives sanction against one public servant but declines to do so against another, then the Government servant against whom sanction is given may possibly complain of discrimination. But the complainant cannot be heard to say so, for there is no discrimination as against any complainant. Matajog Dobey v. H. C. ● — Art. 14 — Criminal P. C (1898), S 30—Validity—Section not inconsistent with Art. 14

Section 30, Criminal P. Code does not violate the inhibition of Art. 14 of the Constitution of India. AIR 1954 Pat 218, Affirmed.

There is an obvious classification on which this section is based, namely, that such power may be conferred on specified Magistrates in certain localities only and in respect of some offences only, namely, all offences other than those punishable with death. The Legislature understands and correctly appreciates the needs of its own people which may vary from place to place. A classification may be based on geographical or territorial considerations.

The section only authorises the State Government to invest certain Magistrates with power to try all offences not punishable with death and this authority the State can exercise only in the specified places. If the State invests any Magistrate with powers under S. 30 anybody who commits any offence not punishable with death and triable by a Court of Session under S. 28 read with the second schedule is also liable to be tried by the S. 30 Magistrate. The risk of such liability falls alike upon all persons committing such an offence. Therefore, there is no discrimination in the section itself.

The contention that although the section itself may not be discriminatory it may lend itself to abuse bringing about a discrimination between persons accused of offences of the same kind, for the police may send up a person accused of an offence under S. 366, Penal Code to a S. 30 Magistrate and the police may send another person accused of an offence under the same section to a Magistrate who can commit the accused to the Court of Session cannot be accepted as sound The reason is that the ultimate decision as to whether a person charged under s. 366 should be tried by the Court of Session or by S. 30 Magistrate does not depend merely on the whim or idiosyncracies of the police or the executive Government but depends ultimately on the proper exercise of judicial discretion by the Magistrate concerned.

The Constitution does not assure uniformity of decisions or immunity from merely erroneous action, whether by the Courts or the executive agencies of a State The judicial decision must of necessity depend on the facts and circumstances of each particular case and what may superficially appear to be an unequal application of the law may not necessarily amount to a denial of equal protection of law unless there is shown to be present in it an element of intentional and purposeful discrimination. Further, the discretion of judicial officers is not arbitrary and the law provides for revision by superior Courts of orders passed by the Subordidate Courts. In such circumstances, there is hardly any ground for apprehending any capricious discrimination by judicial tribunals. (1943) 321 U S 1, Ref. to. Buchan Choudhry v. In warrant-cases instituted on police reports there is a preliminary investigation by a responsible police officer and the material furnished by him would provide a prima facie sound basis for the framing of a charge. In warrant-cases, instituted on complaints there is no such previous investigation. The evidence of prosecution witnesses should be recorded before the charge could be framed. In cases instituted on police reports, the Magistrate is authorised to act on the documents furnished by the investigating police, and the examination of witnesses at that stage is done away with. The classification satisfies the test of reasonableness whether or not there has been a previous investigation by a responsible public servant. There is thus a nexus between the basis of classification and the object sought to be achieved by the statutory provision in question. It follows that the impugned section does not offend Art. 14 of the Constitution and is constitutionally valid. 1958 Cri L J 603 : 1958 Andh L T 325 : ILR (1958) Andh Pra 143 : (1958) 1 Andh W R 175 : 1958 Mad L J (Cr) 192 : A I R 1958 Andh Pra 301 (303, 304) (Prs 12, 13, 16, 20, 21) (DB).

——Art. 14—Scope — Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 207A—Validity—(Criminal P. C. (1898), Ss. 162 (1), 476)—Effect of.

The clear object of the Legislature in enacting S. 207A, Criminal P. C. is that in cases which have to be tried by a Court of Session and which have been instituted on police reports, the accused should be placed on trial if the Magistrate concurs with the police officer. The procedure prescribed by S. 207A, Criminal P. C. is not based on unreasonable classification and does not offend Art. 14 of the Constitution. The condition of intelligible differentia is satisfied in the classification of cases into those instituted on police reports and those instituted otherwise. The classification under S. 207A, Criminal P. C., is not with reference to cases which have different characteristics. A I R 1952 S C 75; A I R 1954 S C 545 and A I R 1955 S C 13, Disting. The differentiation is based on the fact that the police report is made after investigation and collection of evidence. Courts acting under S. 476, Criminal P. C., are themselves empowered to complete the enquiry and commit the accused for trial. Merely because the Magistrate is authorised under S. 207A (16) to remand the accused to custody after commitment, it cannot be said that the Legislature has to prescribe the same procedure in all cases involving commitment. In so far as S. 207A authorises the Magistrate to consider and use for the purpose of commitment the statements of witnesses made to police officers in the course of their investigation, it does not offend the principle of S. 162 (1), Criminal P. C. ——Art 14—S. 207-A, Criminal P. C. — Validity—(Criminal P. C. (1898), Ss. 207-A, 540).

When the accused say that they have been deprived of their right of defence and of leading evidence under S. 207-A, Criminal P. C., in one sense it is not a justifiable complaint because whatever evidence they have to lead, they can lead before the Court of Session. Again the law is well settled that it is not open to the prosecution or to the police investigating an offence only to place before the Court, witnesses who support the prosecution story. If there are other material witnesses who support the defence of the accused, it is equally the duty of the prosecution to call them. Therefore, the situation would rarely arise where a material witness who would support the defence would not be called by the prosecution under the provisions of S. 207-A itself. Further with regard to the right of the accused to call evidence, it is obligatory upon the Court to summon a person if his evidence is necessary for the just decision of the case. If a witness to be called for at the instance of the accused is a material witness and it would help the Magistrate to come to a just decision then undoubtedly under S. 540 not only the Magistrate would have the discretion to call him, but there would be a duty upon him to summon that witness and examine him. 58 Bom L R 628 : ILR (1956) Bom 930 : 1956 Cr L J 1297 : AIR 1956 Bom 695 (697, 698) (Pt B) (Pr 4) (DB).

The result of enacting S. 207-A, Criminal P. C., is that an order of commitment passed under this section does not fall under S. 215. Now, if S. 215 is a limitation upon the power of the High Court then that limitation only applies to orders made under S. 213. They do not apply to an order made under S. 207-A. Therefore, the ordinary power of the High Court to revise any order passed by a criminal Court subordinate to it or the power of the High Court under S. 561-A remains unaffected as far as the orders of commitment made under S. 207-A are concerned. Apart from these two sections the accused has always the right to approach the High Court under Art. 227 of the Constitution. 58 Bom L R 628 : ILR (1956) Bom 930 : 1956 Cr L J 1297 : AIR 1956 Bom 695 (698) (Pt C) (Pr 5) (DB).

——Art. 14—Criminal P. C. (1898), S 207-A—Classification with respect to inquiry in certain offences —If ultra vires.

Equal protection of law does not mean that there can be no classification for the purpose of application of different laws; if there is classification and the index of classification has a reasonable nexus with the purpose for different classes, would not offend Art. 14 of the Constitution.

The special procedure as provided in S. 207-A, Criminal P. C., applies to proceedings instituted on a police report while the other procedure as embodied in S. 208 and subsequent sections of Chap. 18 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, applies to proceedings instituted otherwise than on a police report. There has always been some distinction between proceedings instituted on police report and proceedings instituted otherwise than on a police report. Under the present Code of Criminal Procedure this distinction has been widened. Thus the classification is based on clear and marked indices having close and rational connection with the purpose of the legislation and S. 207-A is not 'ultra vires' Art. 14 of the Constitution. 60 Cal W N 913 : 1956 All W R (Sup) 107 : 1956 Cr L J 1315 : AIR 1956 Cal 602 (604) (Pt D) (Pr 6) (DB).

——Art. 14 — Discrimination — S. 198-B, Criminal P. C., whether offends article.

A man cannot complain of discrimination unless the different treatment meted out to him is to his disadvantage. Section 198-B, Criminal P. C., cannot be struck down as offending Art. 14 of the Constitution as it cannot be said that the section is discriminatory as placing a person accused of the offence of libel against the persons mentioned therein in a different position from a person accused of the same offence against an ordinary person. The difference, namely the absence of any public interest in the one case and its undoubted presence in the other is sufficient to justify a special provision like S. 198-B. 1958 Ker L T 1158 : 1959 All W R (Sup) 29 : 1958 Ker L J 1262 : 1959 All Cr R 158 : ILR (1959) Ker 195 : 1959 Cr L J 464 : AIR 1959 Ker 100 (104) (Pt F) (Prs 17, 18) (DB).

It cannot be said that the provisions contained in Ss. 523 and 524 of the Criminal P. Section 488 of the Criminal P. C, cannot be said to contravene Art. 14 of the Constitution. It cannot be said that the classification in favour of women, more particularly wives and that too deserted by their husbands, is arbitrary and that it does not bear a reasonable and just relation to the things in respect to which the classification is made. S. 488 is intended to prevent starvation of wives deserted by their husbands. It applies to all women in similar circumstances. Legislation therefore in favour of this class of people cannot be said to be arbitrary. 65 L W 439 : 1952 Cr L J 1143 : (1952) 1 M L J 68 : AIR 1952 Mad 529 (530) (Pr 3).

——Art. 14—Validity of S. 197, Criminal P. C. — (Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 197.)

If S. 197 makes discrimination unreasonably or arbitrarily between one class of Government servants and another, then the only effect thereof would be that it will be rendered void. If it is rendered void, then there will be no need for any sanction at all, whether the person concerned falls in the category specified in S. 197 or outside that category. ——Art. 14—Validity of S. 197, Criminal P. C. — (Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 197.)

What the equality clause in Art. 14 aims at is to strike down hostile discrimination or oppression of inequality and that since the guarantee applies to all persons similarly situated, it is open to the Legislature to classify persons and things to achieve particular legislative objects but that such selection or differentiation must not be arbitrary and should rest upon a rational basis, having regard to the object which the Legislature has in view. The object of S. 197 of the Criminal P. C., is to afford protection to public servants from harassment resulting from vexatious prosecutions to the extent it is necessary in the public interest and that object can be achieved by putting in one class those public servants who discharge responsible duties and perform important functions and by putting in another class those whose duties and functions are less important. Such a classification can in no sense be regarded as arbitrary or unreasonable. AIR 1953 S C 215 Foll. ——Art. 14 — Reasonable classification — Ss. 260, 263, 264, Criminal P. C.—Validity.

The State has a wide discretion in classifying persons, objects and the like for the purposes of legislation. What is necessary is that the classification must be reasonable and the basis of the classification must have a rational connection with the object of the enactment. When such a classification has been made and a group formed, one or more of that group cannot be treated on a basis different from the others of the same group or, in other words they cannot be discriminated against.

It is manifest from Ss. 262 to 264, Criminal P. C., that the only departure from ordinary trials in the case of a summary trial is that in non-appealable cases, no charge need be framed and no evidence need be recorded while, in appealable cases, a substance of the evidence has to be recorded. It is not an essential ingredient of fair trial that the entire evidence or the entire cross-examination of all witnesses must be recorded in extenso. There is no denial of fair trial to an accused who is tried summarily. The discretion of judicial officers is not arbitrary and the law provides for revision by superior Courts of orders passed by subordinate Courts. There is no ground for apprehension of capricious discrimination by judicial tribunals. There is a well-defined classification. There is a nexus between the object and the basis of the classification. Hence Ss. 260, 263 and 264 do not infringe the equal protection clause of Art. 14. ——Art. 14 — Ss. 30 and 34, Criminal P. C. — Validity (Criminal P. C. (1898), Ss. 30, 34.)

In the areas to which S. 30, Criminal P. C., applies there is no difference between one person and another charged with offences under the same section as regards their liability to be tried by a Magistrate under S. 30. The prescription of two alternative modes of procedure in the areas affected for the trial of offences not punishable with death is founded on the backwardness of those areas as compared with other parts of India. The provisions contained in S. 30 are, on the face of them fair and reasonable. There is no reason to regard them as hostile and discriminatory. On the contrary they appear to be designed with the needs of the areas affected in view. That the impugned provisions do not provide any criterion for the guidance of the Magistrates in deciding whether or not the case should be tried by the Magistrate or the Court of Session does not necessarily offend against the Constitution. Therefore an exercise of judicial discretion which results in a person charged with an offence under S. 366, Penal Code being tried by a Magistrate whereas other persons similarly charged are tried by the Court of Session cannot be said to be hit by the equality clause. Hence Ss. 30 and 34 do not offend against Art. 14 and are not invalid Case law discussed. 32 Pat 728 : 1954 Cri L J 565 : A I R 1954 Pat 218 (220, 221, 222, 223, 225) (Pt B) (Prs 6, 8, 10, 11, 12, 13, 19) (DB).

——Art. 14—Reasonable classification—S. 421, Criminal P. C., if discriminatory and void.

There is no doubt that a distinction has been made in S 421 between appellants in jail and those outside it, and again as between appellants in jail represented by pleaders and those in jail not so represented. It is however, obvious that except in rare cases the appellant himself would be quite unable to say anything further than what may have been urged by him in his grounds of appeal, and what may be apparent from a perusal of the judgment. The section does not fetter the discretion of the Court to send for the appellant and hear him in support of the appeal, in case there appears to be some point in his favour. The discretion to dismiss the appeal, summarily is, therefore, vested in the Court, and it is a judicial discretion to be exercised. The section, however, does not make it incumbent upon the Court to dismiss the appeal without hearing the appellant, and therein lies the key to the validity of the section. The dismissal, if made, would only be done in exercise of the judicial discretion and would not be one which may be hit by Art. 14 of the Constitution. Consequently the distinction made in S. 421 between appellants from jail and those outside it is not discriminatory but a reasonable classification. AIR 1955 S C 191 Applied; AIR 1938 Bom 279, Rel on. I L R (1955) 5 Raj 687 : 1956 Raj L W 529 : 1957 Cri L J 797 : A I R 1957 Raj 204 (205) (Pt A) (Prs 4, 6, 7) (DB).

——Art. 14—Scope—Criminal P. C., S. 421—If void—Discrimination between appellants who are in jail and those who are not in jail—If unreasonable.

Mere differentiation or inequality of treatment does not per se amount to discrimination. It is necessary to show that the selection or differentiation is unreasonable or arbitrary and that it does not rest on any rational basis having regard to the object which the Legislature has in view in order to invalidate an enactment under Art. 14. The differentiation made under S. 421, Criminal P. C., is not unreasonable and therefore the section is not invalid under Art. 14. Miscellaneous.

——Art. 14 –Applicability — Discrimination offending against fundamental right — What amounts to—Transfer of case under S 495, Hyderabad Criminal P. C., resulting in the accused having only one appeal instead of two – If ground for issue of writ.

A right of appeal, which is not an inherent right, is not a fundamental right. A right of appeal does not lie in the nature of things, but must be given by express enactment, being a creature of statute. The right of appeal is subject to the power of transfer given by law to any authority. A potential power is vested in the Government under Section 495, Hyderabad Criminal P. C., to transfer a case from one Court to another. Similar power has been vested in the High Court under S. 494 of the Code. Where the Executive, in exercise of the power conferred upon it to transfer a case from one Court to another for purposes of expediency, transfer of case from one Court to another, and by reason of such transfer, the party is given only one right of appeal instead of two appeals which otherwise he would have, but for such transfer, it does not necessarily follow that the transfer amounts to a discrimination offending the principle of "equality before the law," so as to attract the provisions of Art. 14 of the Constitution; no writ of certiorari can issue in such a case.

In order to make out a case of discrimination, it would be essential to show that a party had been singled out in the exercise of the power vested in the Government under S. 495, Hyderabad Criminal P. C. 39 I A 197; A I R 1927 P C 242: A I R 1950 S C 27; A I R 1951 S C 41; A I R 1951 Hyd L R 1 (FB). ——Art. 14 — Equality before law — Different sentences for same offence in different case – If discrimination — Punishment — Award of — Principles — Factor to be taken into account.

Equality intended under Art. 14 of the Constitution is not to be judged by equality of sentence on conviction for an offence. Punishments graded according to age, gravity of the offence in the context of facts and attending circumstances that lend colour to the perversity involved in the crime and other circumstances do not offend the rule of equality that law assures to members of the society. The object of punishment is to reform society by holding out deterrents as precedents and it must be such as would be felt as punishment by the offender and it must be commensurate with the degree of shock that it causes to the conscience of the society. This is a rule of natural justice on which all laws are based. The difference of sentences for the same offence in different cases depends upon the various other considerations which are special to each particular case.

Where a Marwari merchant convicted of attempting to bribe a public servant was sentenced by the trial Court to imprisonment of six months, and the appellate Court altered it into one of fine of Rs. 200, the High Court in revision, set aside the sentence of fine and restored the sentence of imprisonment awarded by the trial Court, holding that the sentence of fine of Rs. 200 would be no punishment at all to the accused who was a substantial man. It was contended that this was a departure from the rules of natural justice and amounted to discrimination on the ground of the accused being a Marwari or a merchant.

Held, that the contention was not maintainable and did not detract from maintaining equality between man and man in the administration of law. ——Art. 14—Section 27, Evidence Act — Validity—Section does not contravene Art. 14.

Assuming that the language of S. 27 of the Evidence Act requires that the person giving information must be an accused and that he must be in the custody of a police officer, the section does not create an unjustifiable discrimination between accused persons in custody and accused persons out of custody and in that way does not offend Art. 14. There is no element of purposeful or intentional discrimination between accused in custody and accused not in custody. The section is not found to display a spirit of prejudice and favouritism as between the accused in custody and the accused not in custody. There is no abuse of the power of classification which undoubtedly vests in it. There is no apparent denial of equality before the law in the provisions of the section. The section has been enacted to advance the cause of justice and therefore it cannot be struck down on the mere ground that accused persons who are not in custody would be more advantageously placed. ——Art. 14 — Scope of — Calcutta City Civil Court Act (21 of 1953)—Validity.

Act 21 of 1953 is not discriminatory on the ground that it takes away beneficial advantages conferred on litigants of obtaining summary relief under O. 37 of the Civil P. C., and therefore offends against Art. 14 of the Constitution. Under S. 19 of the Act rules will be made to carry out the object of the Act. The rules that will then prevail in the City Civil Court would not be identical with those prevailing in the Original Side of the High Court, but that cannot detract from the legality of such rules. All persons have equality before the law, but the law applicable to all persons need not be the same. The principle, that the same rules must exist for all in similar circumstances, does not mean that every law must have universal application for all persons who are not in the same division. Litigants with cases within the lower pecuniary limits, who are to file their suits in the City Civil Court can be taken to constitute a class. All persons in that class, namely, the litigants who will pursue their remedies in the City Civil Court, are treated alike. It is open to the State Government to make O. 37, Civil P. C. applicable to the City Civil Court. But quite apart from this, one cannot say that the procedure followed in the City Civil Court is more onerous or less onerous than that prevailing in the High Court. Law's delay is not an advantage for whose deprivation or diminution a litigant can seek redress but is rather a grievance from which he has to be given relief and the aim of adjective law and its reform is and should be directed to minimising, if not altogether eliminating it. Not infrequently justice delayed would be justice denied. Expeditious disposal of causes without encroaching upon or endangering efficiency should be the principle guiding judicial administration.

The contention that because of the Paliam Proclamation the tenants had to pay up the dues earlier than they would have to do if the procedure in the civil Court was pursued, is not therefore, a point of discrimination. ILR (1952) Trav-Co 463 : 1952 Ker L T 555 : AIR 1954 Trav Co 193 (195) (Pt B) (Pr 9) (DB).

——Art. 14—Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 269—Trial by jury or with aid of assessors — No discrimination.

The Government has under S. 269 to provide by notification that the trial of all offences or a particular class of offence in any district shall be by jury. Therefore there is no discrimination; according as the class of offences is or not included in the Government notification relating to trial by jury, such accused will be tried by jury or with the aid of assessors.

It is obvious that there is a reasonable basis for the classification. Hence the trial with the aid of assessors in some districts and a trial by a jury in other districts does not contravene Art. 14 of the Constitution of India. ——Art. 14—Scope—Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 269 (4) —Validity.

It cannot reasonably be urged that sub-s. (4) of S. 269, Criminal P. It cannot also be said there is no substantial distinction between cases which are likely to last for over two weeks and others which are likely to be over in a few days. Accused whose cases are likely to last beyond two weeks can be taken to constitute a class. Such a classification cannot be declared to be void on the ground that it has no relation to the object to be attained and is not substantial. The right to be tried with the aid of a jury is not a fundamental right. It is a right that is created by a Statute. The Statute that creates such a right can impose restrictions or conditions relating to the exercise of such a right. The Statute can also take away such a right. 1958 Mad L J (Cr) 341 : ILR (1957) Mys 177 : 1958 Cr L J 1489 : AIR 1958 Mys 150 (161, 162, 163) (Pt B) (Prs 8, 9) (DB).

22. Denial of right of suit or of other legal remedy.

——Art. 14 — Special legislation for validating orders passed by Executive Authorities during period of unusual significance—Denial of right to establish claim in Civil Court — No contravention of Art. 14 — Hyderabad Atiyat Enquiries Act (10 of 1952), S. 13 (2) — Constitutionally valid.

The result of S. 13 (2) Hyderabad Atiyat Enquiries Act (10 of 1952), is to validate the orders of the authorities therein specified which have been passed between September 18, 1948, and March 14, 1952. The first date refers to the commencement of the Police action and the latter to the commencement of the operation of the Act. The object of the Legislature clearly is to validate orders passed between the said two dates, so that the questions determined by the relevant orders should not be reopened for enquiry either before the Atiyat Courts or before the Civil Courts. Therefore, that cannot be said to contravene Art. 14 of the Constitution. AIR 1953 S C 91, Disting.

After the Rule of the Nizam came to an end, the only change that occurred was that on the death of the Jagirdar, the property vested in the State and could be re-granted to a successor in the discretion of the State. Therefore, by denying the petitioners the right to establish a claim in the Civil Court, the impugned provision of S. 13 (2) cannot be said to offend against Art. 14 of the Constitution. ——Arts. 14, 13 (1), 226 — Scope of — Bihar Act (34 of 1950) is invalid — (Bihar Sathi Lands (Restoration) Act (34 of 1950), S. 1). A I R 1952 Pat 194, Reversed.

What the equality clause aims at is to strike down hostile discrimination or oppression of inequality. As the guarantee applies to all persons similarly situated, it is certainly open to the legislature to classify persons and things to achieve particular legislative objects; but such selection or differentiation must not be arbitrary and should rest upon a rational basis, having regard to the object which the legislature has in view.

The Bihar Act (34 of 1950) has singled out two individuals and one solitary transaction entered into between them and another private party, namely, the Bettiah Wards Estate and has declared the transaction to be a nullity on the ground that it is contrary to the provisions of law, although there has been no adjudication on this point by any judicial tribunal. By so enacting what the legislature has done is to single out two individuals out of many lessees and deny them the right which every Indian citizen possesses to have his rights adjudicated upon by a judicial tribunal in accordance with the law which applies to his case. The meanest of citizens has a right of access to a Court of law for the redress of his just grievances and it is from this right that the lessees have been deprived, by this Act.

It is impossible to conceive of a worse form of discrimination than the one which differentiates a particular individual from all his fellow subjects and visits him with a disability which is not imposed upon anybody else and against which even the right of complaint is taken away.

The Act, therefore, comes within the mischief of Art. 14 and is declared invalid. (Writ of mandamus was issued directing the State Government not to take any steps in pursuance of the Act or to interfere with the appellant's possession). A I R 1953 S C 91, Rel. on.; AIR 1952 Pat 194, Reversed.

This is purely a dispute between private parties and a matter for determination by duly constituted Courts to which is entrusted, in every free and civilised society, the important function of adjudicating on disputed legal rights, after observing the well-established procedural safeguards which include the right to be heard, the right to produce witnesses and so forth. This is the protection which the law guarantees equally to all persons, and the Constitution prohibits by Art. 14 every State from denying such protection to anyone. The appellants have been denied this protection. A political organisation of the party in power decides after making such enquiry as it thought fit that the settlement in question was "contrary to the provisions of law and public policy", and the State Legislature, basing itself on such decision, purports to declare the settlement "null and void" and directs the eviction of the appellants and the restoration of the lands to the other party. Legislation such as this is calculated to drain the vitality from the Rule of Law which the Constitution so unmistakably proclaims, and it is to be hoped that the democratic process in this country will not function along these lines. ——Arts. 14, 19 (f) and 31 (1) and Part III—Scope and effect of—Hyderabad Wali-ud-daula Succession Act (14 of 1950) — If ultra vires and void — 'Property' — Right to infringement and deprivation.

The right to institute a suit in a Court of law regarding one's claim is a civil right, and the claim of parties as being lawful wives and children of a deceased person is "property". Such persons have a right to seek the assistance of the Courts for the protection of such property of theirs. If a person is to be deprived of his right to claim property under his personal law by his claim being dismissed by an enactment of the Legislature it is denial of the equal protection of the Laws under Art. 14 of the Constitution unless such a thing is allowed by Part III of the Constitution. When this principle of the equality of the application of the law, i. e., the right of a litigant, to get his claim regarding succession to property decided by a Court of law, is denied, it is a discrimination, and offends against the Constitution which guarantees fundamental rights. When a person is deprived of his right under a decree passed in his favour by an enactment, such enactment offends against and violates the right guaranteed by Art. 31 (1) of the Constitution.

The Hyderabad Wali-ud-Daula Succession (Decision of Disputes) Act, 1950, infringes Art. 14 in that it dismisses the claims of certain persons to property which they got under a decree of Court of law. The Act is also ultra vires in that it takes away the property of those persons, e. g., decrees, in contravention of Art. 31; and it is also invalid as it infringes the rights of those parties accruing to them under the decree as per Art. 19 (f) of the Constitution. Section 2 (1) of the Act contravenes, Part III of the Constitution and is void. Section 3 of the Act is also void so far as it relates to S. 2 (1). 5 I A 178 (P C); A I R 1933 P C 16; A I R 1935 P C 158; A I R 1942 P C 44; A I R 1950 S C 27; I L R (1940) All 455 (P C); (1942) Kar (P C) 71; A I R 1941 Lah 182; AIR 1949 Pat 1, Ref. ——Art. 14 — Validity of Bihar Sathi Lands Regulation Act (34 of 1950).

Article 14 does not prohibit Legislative classification. Nor does it prohibit the legislature from enacting Special Laws to combat special evils. A classification that takes account of the different degrees in which an evil is present must be upheld as reasonable and valid. Even legistation relating to one individual would not violate the equal protection clause, if there is no discrimination. The Sathi Lands Restoration Act (34 of 1950), cannot be held to be invalid on the ground of its violating Art 14. (1918) 249 U S 152, Rel. on. A I R 1952 Pat 194 (198) (Pt C) (Pr 19) (DB).

23. Procedure of administrative tribunals.

● ——Art. 14—Disciplinary proceedings—Administrative Tribunal Rules (1951) - Validity Rules are not discriminatory when compared to Classification Rules—Rules do not contravene Art. 14. A I R 1960 Orissa 68, Reversed.

Whereas detailed provisions are made in the Tribunal Rules as to the grounds on which an enquiry may be directed against a public servant for misconduct in the discharge of official duties failure to discharge duties properly, general inefficiency or personal immorality, under the Classification Rules for good and sufficient reasons, penalties may be imposed. The expression used in the Classification Rules is somewhat vague, but whatever other ground it may include it does include charges described in R. 4 of the Tribunal Rules. The procedure to be followed in the enquiry under the Tribunal Rules is not described in any detail. But it is clearly indicated, that the public servant must be given a summary of the charges against him and he must be given an opportunity to submit his explanation orally or in writing in respect of the charges and that the Tribunal must in holding the enquiry be guided by rules of natural justice and equity, in the matter of procedure and evidence. The procedure prescribed by R. 55 of the Civil Services (Classification, Control and Appeal) Rules which is assimilated by virtue of the note under R. 2 into the Classification Rules, is set out in greater detail, but is in substance not different from the procedure under R. 7 of the Tribunal Rules. It is true that the Tribunal Rules do not set out the punishments which may be imposed, whereas the Classification Rules set out the various punishments such as censure, withholding of increments or promotion, including stoppage at efficiency bar, reduction to lower post or time-scale or to a lower stage in a time scale, recovery from pay of the whole or part of any pecuniary loss caused to Government by negligence or breach of order, fine, suspension, removal from the Civil Service, which does not disqualify from future employment and dismissal from the Civil Services which ordinarily disqualifies from future employment. But failure to enumerate the penalties which may be imposed also does not indicate any variation between the Tribunal Rules and the Classification Rules. Rule 2 of the Classification Rules merely enumerates the diverse punishments which may be imposed. This list is exhaustive; and no penalties other than those enumerated are ever imposed upon delinquent public servants. Under the Tribunal Rules there is no enumeration of penalties, but it is left to the Governor in his discretion, after considering the report of the Tribunal to select the appropriate punishment.

Under the Classification Rules there is a right of appeal from an order imposing a penalty passed by a departmental head to the latter's superior whereas there is no such right of appeal against the order passed by the Governor imposing penalty upon a public servant under the Tribunal Rules. But this also cannot be regarded as a ground of sustaining a plea of unlawful discrimination. Thus the Tribunal Rules cannot be held to be ultra vires on the ground of their resulting in discrimination contrary to Art. 14 of the Constitution. ——Art. 14 —Procedure of administrative tribunals—Equal protection of laws.

The equal protection clause in the Constitution does not prohibit a rational classification Equal protection includes no doubt equal access to Courts, but it does not necessarily mean same remedies in all Courts. It means equality of treatment for a set of persons similarly placed. The complexity of modern life, the existence of social, economic and political life and diverse other considerations have necessitated the creation of Tribunals to decide administrative and quasi-judicial issues. A reasonable classification is not only permitted but is necessary if Society should progress.

If a law deals equally with the members of a well-defined class, it is not obnoxious and it is not open to the charge of denial of equal protection. ILR (1953) Hyd 648 : AIR 1954 Hyd 28 (31) (Pt C) (Pr 6) (DB).

'Family' has been given an artificial definition in S. 3 (14). Further S. 5 (1) of Act 58 of 1961, fixes a double standard for the purpose of 'ceiling'. Unlike members of an ordinary Hindu Mitakshtra family, junior members have no interest in an impartible estate except a right to receive maintenance on account of the custom as developed in course of time. There is no question of the Act 26 of 1948, depriving the junior members of any right possessed by them prior to the Act or the Act making a discrimination between one class of persons and another. Even otherwise, a law based on classification which is reasonable having regard to the object to be attained cannot be said to contravene Art. 14 of the Constitution. 1955 Andh W R 590: AIR 1955 Andhra 264 (270, 271) (Pt H) (Prs 27, 28) (DB).

It is no doubt true that a Civil Court has no authority to decide any question as to the rate of land revenue payable to the Government and lay down what the proper rate of assessment is in respect of any particular land. But the validity of an assessment by Government can be questioned under Art. 226 or under Art. 32 of the Constitution on the ground that it is in a particular case discriminatory. Likewise, even where the basis of assessment is opposed to the principle embodied in Art. 14 of the Constitution, appropriate relief can be granted under the above Articles.

It cannot of course be denied that the Government is entitled to make a classification of lands for the purpose of assessment. But it is equally obvious that such a classification must be related to the purpose, namely, the levy of land revenue. Otherwise it would be an arbitrary division and not a proper classification. AIR 1951 S C 318, Rel. on.

Held, that the discrimination made in the instructions issued under S. 67 (1) and (2) of the Madras Act 26 of 1948, on 16-6-1950, for fixation of land revenue for different classes of lands falling under S. 23 (b), including the private lands of landholders between ryoti lands and private lands in the particular case, namely, where the ryoti land to be compared bears a grain rent, could not be justified on any principle of valid classification and that just as in the case of ryoti lands bearing cash rent such rent was taken as that which should be adopted likewise in the case of grain rent land the rent as converted in the manner provided for ryoti land could be well adopted in the case of private lands also.

(The State was directed to refrain from adopting the principle of imposing assessment at the highest ryotwari rate in the district or the taluk on private land in a village in which the ryoti lands of a similar class bear only a grain rent.) ——Art. 14 — Mysore Inams Abolition Act, if void— Minor inamdars do not get more favourite treatment than inamdars — (Mysore (Personal and Miscellaneous) Inams Abolition Act (1 of 1955), Ss. 7, 9 and 26).

Apart from the fact that the minor inamdars can form a class by themselves as distinct from inamdars, the minor inamdars under the Act do not get a more favoured treatment than the inamdar. To all intents and purposes the position of a minor inamdar is the same under Ss. 7 and 9. No discrimination has been made in favour of the minor inamdar by virtue of S. 26 of the Mysore Act 1 of 1955. It cannot, therefore, be held that the Act is void under Art. 14 of the Constitution because minor inamdars get more favourable treatment than the inamdars under the Act. 37 Mys L J 312 : ILR (1958) Mys 531 : AIR 1959 Mys 222 (226) (Pt E) (Pr 12) (DB).

——Art. 14 — Scope — Orissa Estates Abolition Act (1 of 1952) — Validity and effect of — Land Acquisition Act — Distinction.

It is not correct to say that the Land Acquisition Act and the Estates Abolition Act deal with the same subject-matter or with persons similarly situated. The Land Acquisition Act provides for the acquisition of all rights in land if that land is required for public purposes. The Estates Abolition Act, however, does not deal with acquisition of all rights in land, but only with the acquisition of the rights of intermediaries. The rights of the ryots and the tillers of the soil are left untouched. If Government want to acquire only the rights of intermediaries, there is only one law under which they can proceed, namely the Estates Abolition Act. Held on facts, that there was no question of discrimination against the petitioners. Full opportunity was available to the petitioners to raise objections when the schemes were published and the entire procedure prescribed in the relevant Act was duly followed. No inherent defect was found in the schemes themselves, and the validating Act merely removed a technical defect which had been found to invalidate all the schemes that had been prepared : AIR 1953 S C 215, Disting. The Act confers no power on the Government to grant exemption. All the jagirs therefore are liable to be resumed under S. 20, no option being left with the Government in the matter. It was the intention of the Legislature that all jagir lands should be resumed under S. 21. The provision that under S. 21 the State is authorised to resume different classes of jagir lands on different dates, and that must result in the law operating unequally was obviously dictated by practical considerations such as administrative convenience and facilities for payment of compensation and cannot be held to be discriminatory. ● ——Art. 14 — Rajasthan Land Reforms and Resumption of Jagirs Act (6 of 1952)—Validity.

It was contended that jagirs of the petitioner had been taken possession of by the State in 1949 under S. 8-A of the Rajasthan Ordinance No. 27 of 1948 which was held to be void under Art. 14, that the present Act came into force on 8th February, 1952, and that the Government having wrongly taken possession of the jagirs in 1949 under the provisions of the Ordinance, instead of returning them to the petitioners notified them first under S. 21 of the Act and thus managed to continue in possession, and that in the result, these jagirdars had been treated differently from the jagirdars in other States of Rajputana to whom S. 8-A did not apply and Art. 14 had been contravened.

Held, that the Mewar jagirdars having lost possession under a legislation which had been held to be void the rights which they had over the jagirs until the date of the present notifications would remain unaffected, and no unequal treatment could result therefrom. And, moreover, the present Act makes no discrimination in the matter, as it applies to all the jagirs in Rajasthan. Amar Singhji v. ——Art. 14 — U. P. Imposition of Ceiling on Land Holdings Act (1 of 1961)—Validity — Provisions in so far as they do not apply to sugar plantation violate Art. 14 — Provisions can be separated from other portion of Act.

Clause (vi) of S. 6 grants exemption to tea, coffee and rubber plantations. There are no extensive tea, coffee and rubber plantations in Uttar Pradesh. So whether tea, coffee and rubber plantations are brought within the scheme of the Act or are exempted, should make little difference to the general scheme of fixing ceilings on holdings in Uttar Pradesh. Under S. 7 of the Act, Keora, Bela, Chameli and Gulab have been exempted. These are very minor crops. Whether one formally imposes ceiling on holdings of Keora, Bela, Chameli and Gulab or exempts them is a matter of little importance. Even if the Legislature were aware that Cl. (vi) of S. 6 and a part of S. 7 of the Act are invalid, that circumstance would not have influenced the Legislature in passing the Act. These invalid provisions can be easily separated from the rest of the Act. It is not, therefore, necessary to strike down the whole of U. P. Act 1 of 1961. 1963 All L J 793 : 1963 All W R (H C) 669 : I L R (1964) 1 All 211 : A I R 1965 All 175 (182) (Pt J) (Pr 34) (DB).

——Art. 14—Reasonable classification — Validity of U. P. Act (31 of 1952)—Tenancy Laws—U. P. Land Reforms (Supplementary) Act (31 of 1952).

It is always open to the Legislature to lay down a reasonable classification for application of a particular law and if no distinction or discrimination has been made within the members of a particular class the legislation cannot be said to be discriminatory. By U. P. Act (31 of 1952) no discrimination has been made as amongst persons in possession in 1359 Fasli and the same provisions of law have been made applicable to all such persons. They are a class in themselves and the classification is based on good reasons. Thus, the Act not being discriminatory is not invalid under Art. 14 of the Constitution. 1957 All L J 696 : 1957 All W R (HC) 703 : I L R (1957) 2 All 320 : AIR 1957 All 549 (552) (Pt C) (Pr 11) (DB).

No law is rendered unconstitutional simply because it does not purport to be retrospective. The division of acts into past acts and future acts for the purposes of giving effect to a statute is a reasonable classification. If a statute is made applicable only to future acts, the distinction between future acts and past acts is not unreasonable or arbitrary.

The amendment of R. 61 framed under S. 344 of U. P. Act (1 of 1951) does not contravene the guarantee of equality before the law. A I R 1953 S C 394 : 1953 S C J 563, Rel. on. 1956 All L J 244 ; 1956 All W R (H C) 838 : A I R 1956 All 413 (414) (Pt B) (Pr 4).

The U. P Zamindari Abolition and Land Reforms Act was extended to the area which was comprised in the erstwhile Banaras State on 13-6-1953 under Notification No. 1830/IA-1060-53, with certain modifications. The modification of S. 10 when applying it to those areas which were comprised in the erstwhile Banaras State was beyond the scope of the powers of the Government of Uttar Pradesh under S. 2, U. P. Zamindari Abolition and Land Reforms Act and was also void as offending against Art. 14 of the Constitution. Consequently, Notification No. 1830/IA-1060-53, dated 30-6-1953, is quashed to the extent that it applies S. 10 to the territories of the former Banaras State as defined in the Banaras State (Administration) Order, 1949, with the modifications made in that Notification.

The course adopted by the State Government in doing away with the protection granted to persons assessed to local rates to the extent of the amount assessable on land revenue of Rs. 250 or less must be held to be a modification which was not required by the different circumstances. This modification was in no way related to the difference in the manner of assessment of land revenue and local rates in the two areas. Further, the modification made by the Government of Uttar Pradesh when applying S. 10 was in no way required by the difference in the manner of acquiring or holding sir in the two areas.

Section 10 applies to sir alone and not to khudkasht and any modification made in it should be justified by difference in circumstances relating to sir rights paying no regard to khudkasht rights at all.

The result of applying S. 10 with the modification made by the Government of Uttar Pradesh is that intermediaries holding sir land in the erstwhile Banaras State paying the same amount of land revenue or assessed to the same amount of local rate would not acquire bhumidhari rights in their land, whereas their counterparts in the areas comprised in the district of Banaras would acquire such rights. This is clear discrimination between sets of persons similarly situated. 1955 All L J 795 : A I R 1955 All 546 (547, 548, 549) (Prs 1, 3, 5, 6, 7).

● ——Art. 14—Equal protection of laws—Meaning—S. 4 (2), U. P. Act 1 of 1951 if contravenes Art. 14 of Constitution.

"Equality before the law" has not the same meaning as "the equal protection of the laws." The former may be defined as the equal subjection of all persons to the ordinary law of the land and the latter as the protection of equal laws. The protection of equal laws does not mean that all laws must be uniform, but it does require equality of treatment under like circumstances and conditions.

"The equal protection of the laws" does not prohibit legislation which is limited either in the objects to which it is directed or by the territory within which it is to operate.

Section 4 (2), U. P. Abolition of Zamindari and Land Reforms Act, 1950 (1 of 1951) does not offend Art. 14 of the Constitution as it cannot be said that such classification as may result from S. 4 (2) does not rest on a reasonable basis. The phrase 'public purpose' in Art. 31 of the Constitution has to be construed according to the spirit of the times in which a particular legislation is enacted and so construed, acquisition of estates for the purpose of preventing concentration of huge blocks of land in the hands of a few individuals or to do away with intermediaries is for a public purpose. AIR 1952 S C 252, Foll.

The Bombay (Saurashtra Area) Aghat Tenure and Ijaras Abolition Act, 1959, is limited in its operation to the area of Saurashtra in the State of Bombay because Aghat tenure and ijaras in respect of lands existed in that area only. Therefore, there is no question of any discrimination in the sense that the Act applies to one particular area and not to the rest of the State of Bombay. Since all the Aghat tenures and all the ijaras are sought to be abolished and the object of the enactment is to do away with all the intermediaries between the State and the tiller of the soil it is not possible to uphold the contention that there is no public purpose protecting the enactment. ● ——Art. 14 — "Equal protection of the laws" — Class legislation is forbidden but not classification.

Per Reuben and Das, JJ. — The guarantee of the equal protection of the laws means the protection of equal laws. It forbids class legislation, but does not forbid classification which rests upon reasonable grounds of distinction; it merely requires that all persons subjected to such legislation shall be treated alike under like circumstances and conditions both in the privileges conferred and in the liabilities imposed. Mathematical nicety and perfect equality are not required and one who assails classification must carry the burden of showing that it does not rest upon any reasonable basis. AIR 1951 S C 41, Rel. on.

Per Reuben J. — Classification is permissible but it must be on a principle which bears some relation to the object sought to be attained. The object of the Bihar Land Reforms Act, 1950, is the giving of compensation that is, something which will represent the value in money of the property that is being acquired. It is not a reasonable classification which assesses that value at twenty times the net income in the case of the poor man and three times in the case of the rich man. The principle of progressive taxation does not apply to compensation for land acquired. Maharajadhiraj Sir Kameshwar Singh v. ——Art. 14—Delhi Rent Control Act (59 of 1958), S. 6 (1) (B) — Provision does not contravene the Article—Reasonable classification.

Section 6 (1) (B) (2) of the Delhi Rent Control Act does not contravene the provisions of Art. 14 of the Constitution because it provides (1) several methods of arriving at the standard rent of what might be similar premises and it is unfair and arbitrary to make any distinction between buildings first let before the 2nd of June, 1944 and premises let after that date and (2) because of the distinction made by it even in the case of premises first let after the 2nd June, 1944 between those of which the rents had already been fixed under the Acts of 1947 or 1952 and the others. As for the choice of 2nd June, 1944 as the relevant date, it cannot be said that there is an arbitrary selection.

By according recognition to the rents fixed under the different provisions of the earlier enactments by second schedule with certain permissible additions, S. 6 (1) (B) (2) does not provide several different and unequal methods of arriving at the standard rent. Actually the section only provides one method of arriving at a standard rent in respect of premises which have not been let before the 2nd June, 1944 and which have not already had their rents fixed under the earlier enactment on the basis of the cost of construction of the premises. It is a reasonable distinction to accept the rent fixed after litigation under the earlier enactments with certain permissible additions which have evidently been introduced to meet the constant trend towards the inflation. So long as all persons litigating at the same time receive the same treatment at the hands of the law, there is no infringement of Art. 14 where there is a change in the law to the advantage of one party or the other in respect of a particular right.

Control of rents and evictions is made necessary because the demand for accommodation exceeds the supply. It is therefore legitimate for the Act to encourage new construction to meet the needs of the expanding population of Delhi. One of the obvious objects of S. 6 itself is to encourage new construction to meet the needs of the expanding population of Delhi, the shortage of residential and other accommodation being notorious. Such being the case it is not unreasonable to permit a large increase of rents already fixed in respect of such premises or to base the standard rent being fixed under the 1958 Act at a slightly higher percentage of the cost of construction in the case of such buildings. 66 Punj L R 784 : ILR (1964) 2 Punj 111.

● ——Arts. 14 and 226 — Rent Control legislation — Power vested in Government to exempt particular building or buildings from operation of Act — Whether offends Art. 14— Madras Buildings (Lease and Rent Control) Act (25 of 1949), S. 13— Constitutionality —Individual orders of Government passed under S. 13— Whether subject to judicial review, under Art. 226 —Grounds on which exemption cannot be justified.

Any individual order of exemption passed by the Government can be the subject of judicial review by the Courts for finding out whether (a) it was discriminatory so as to offend Art. 14 of the Constitution, (b) the order was made on grounds which were germane or relevant to the policy and purpose of the Act, and (c) it was not otherwise mala fide. A I R 1958 S C 538 and A I R 1957 S C 510, Foll.

Where an individual order of Government exempting certain premises was passed for reasons which did not fall within the purpose for which the power was conferred by S. 13 of the Act, the order itself would be one discriminatory of the tenant occupying the premises as violating his fundamental right to equal protection of the laws. In such an event, Art. 226 would be available to set aside such an order. Even if the order did not violate Art. 14, the High Court does not lack power under Art. 226 to set aside an ultra vires order vitally affecting a person's right to statutory protection against eviction.

Majority view (Sarkar and Dass, JJ., contra) :

Where the exemption granted is not of any class of buildings which would ex facie disclose a classification, but the exemption is of a specified building owned by A or in which B is a tenant, then prima facie it would be discriminatory.

Held, that the reasons given by the Government in the instant case for the order were not germane to the purpose or policy of the Act and, therefore, outside the power conferred on them by S. 13 of the Act. When it is alleged that the power was used for a purpose other than achieving the object for which the power is granted, the initial onus must be on the party which alleges abuse of power and there must be prima facie evidence in support of the allegation. It is only then that the onus may shift.

The purpose of the Act, quite clearly, is to prevent unreasonable eviction and also to control rent. These two purposes are intertwined. Therefore, when there is no risk of an opportunity arising in which a landlord may be able to realise illegal rent or premium, an eviction may not be unreasonable.

The difficulties of a tenant on eviction do not decide what is or is not 'unreasonable eviction'. The word 'unreasonable' necessarily connotes a consideration of all the circumstances including the conduct of parties in order to find out what is unreasonable. Under S. 13 it is the duty of the Government to take into consideration all the relevant circumstances of a particular case or class of cases in order to determine if the protection of the Act given to the tenant or tenants concerned should be withdrawn. The section is applicable not merely to institutions like hospitals or schools, but may be applied to other cases also, where there is no question of any unreasonable eviction of the tenant, or where prevention of eviction itself may be unreasonable.

Held, that the Government's action in exempting the premises in question from the operation of the Act was within the scope of the Act. P. J. Irani v. Mysore House Rent and Accommodation Control Act (30 of 1951), S. 20 is not unconstitutional—Houses and Rents—Mysore House Rent and Accommodation Control Act (30 of 1951), S. 20.

That the legislature has the power to make a law on a particular topic and also the power to except out of the operation of that law a particular class of persons or things is, incontrovertible, provided that class of persons or things excepted out of the operation of that law belonged to a reasonable classification based upon an intelligible differentia having a rational relationship to the object to be achieved by the Act.

The fundamental principle underlying Art. 14 is that no one can insist on absolute equality and that what is guaranteed by Art. 14 is only equality between persons who are equally situated or circumstanced. It might lead to many inconvenient results and even in many cases paralysation of the governmental administrative machinery by insisting upon a lease created by the Government being governed only by the provisions of the Mysore House Rent and Accommodation Control Act. Properties belonging to a State or to a local authority or to a public institution are properties which fall within a special classification. The tenants of those properties cannot claim to be similarly circumstanced as tenants of properties belonging to private individuals. The real basis of the differentia between the tenants of a private landlord and the tenants of a State or a public institution like a muzarai institution is that in the very nature of things, the protection needed by the tenants of a private landlord is not needed in the case of the other category of landlords. Therefore, it cannot be said that S. 20 of the Mysore House Rent and Accommodation Control Act, 1951, is liable to be struck down as unconstitutional or that it offends against the provisions of Art. 14.

It cannot be said that the creation of the exemption in the case of muzrai institutions was an improper exercise of power or impeded the furtherance of the policy of the Act or was mala fide. Nor can it be said that the exemption of muzrai institutions from the operation of the Act to any extent defeats the object or the purpose of the Act since those institutions and the leases created by them are such that the tenants in whose favour those leases are created do not require the protection of the Act as the tenants of private landlords do. ● ——Arts 14 and 19 :(1) (f) — Punjab Public Premises and Land (Eviction and Rent Recovery) Act (31 of 1959)—Validity —Does not contravene Arts. 14 or 19 (1) (f) — Provisions of Act are not violative of principles of natural justice.

Class legislation is not prohibited by Art. 14 of the Constitution if within its ambit it uniformly affects persons in similar situations. So long as there is equality under similar conditions and among persons similarly situated, there is no infringement of Art. 14. Persons within the same class are subject to similar obligations and privileges in like circumstances. Such persons are on equal footing and law which makes a discrimination between them will certainly infringe Art. 14.

It cannot be said that tenants of public premises and those of private premises do not form separate classes. The distinction is rational rather than arbitrary and the lessors of public premises can reasonably form a class apart from private persons leasing out their land. A law such as Punjab Act (31 of 1959) which provides for eviction of unauthorised occupants and for the recovery of rent or damages in respect of public premises as arrears of land revenue operates in respect of a distinct class which has a specified and distinct interest. The difference warranting a classification is real and substantial and bears just and reasonable relation to the object of the legislation in accordance with the test laid down by the Supreme Court in A I R 1954 S C 153 and A I R 1953 S C 91; A I R 1954 S C 545 and A I R 1952 S C 75. The line of demarcation between public premises and private premises is distinct and the segragation has for its basis a reasonable differentia. Punjab Act (31 of 1959) cannot therefore be impugned as violative of the provisions of Art. 14. A I R 1963 S C 222 and A I R 1961 S C 828, Rel on.

It could not be the intention of the Legislature to permit the general law regarding eviction of tenants holding over and the special law (Punjab Act 31 of 1959) to co-exist—There is repugnancy regarding eviction and it is not possible to harmonise the two, as both cannot be extant simultaneously. Hence the contention that the Punjab Act makes a discrimination between occupiers of public premises inter se and therefore violates Art. 14 inasmuch as it enables the Government to pick and choose and single out particular tenants for being proceeded against under the Punjab Act and others under ordinary law is without foundation.

The provisions of Art. 19 (1) (f) are not attracted to the case of a person who remains in possession of a public premises as a tenant holding over after the termination of a contractual tenancy. A I R 1957 S C 599, Rel. on. The procedure laid down by the Punjab Act does not militate against the rules of natural justice.

The Punjab Act cannot be deemed to be violative of any fundamental right on the ground that the appellate authority vests in the Commissioner and not in the District Judge. ——Art. 14—Scope—Houses and Rents — Saurashtra Rent Control Act (22 of 1951), S. 12 (4) — Does not violate Art. 14.

While Art. 14 forbids class legislation it does not forbid reasonable classification for the purpose of legislation. In order, however, to pass the test of permissible classification, two conditions must be fulfilled, namely (i) that classification must be founded on an intelligible differentia which distinguishes persons or things that are grouped together from others who are left out of the group and (ii) that differentia must have a rational relation to the object sought to be achieved by the Act. What is necessary is that there must be a nexus between the basis of classification and the object of the Act. AIR 1952 S C 235, Rel. on. The impugned penal clause (S. 12 (4)) of Saurashtra Act fulfils these conditions. The Act makes no distinction between tenants as defined by the Act and the various procedural provisions including the classifications bear a reasonable relation to the object of the Act Art. 14 has therefore no application. 9 Sau L R 199 : AIR 1956 Sau 58 (Pt E) (Pr 7) (DB).

Government Land (Eviction and Recovery of Rent) Act (29 of 1953)—Validity—Act is not unconstitutional—Distinction made between recovery of possession of Government and Public lands and Private lands in unauthorised occupation, held reasonable – Act does not offend against Art. 14. 1960 All L J 52, Overruled.

The U. P. Government Land (Eviction and Recovery of Rent) Act, 1953 (U. P. Act 29 of 1953) is constitutional.

The Act was enacted to provide a speedier process for eviction from Government land of persons occupying it without authority. The distinction that Act makes between persons trespassing on Government land and persons trespassing upon private land does not offend against Art. 14. Land belonging to the Government is land belonging to the entire public of the State. Consequently a law made in the interest of the entire public of the State cannot be said to be discriminatory. When a private land is occupied by a trespasser it is only the individual that suffers but when the land in unauthorised occupation of the trespasser is Government land, it is the whole public of the State that suffers. Consequently a distinction made by the Legislature between loss caused to an individual and loss to the whole public by enacting a special procedure to be followed by Government in evicting trespassers upon Government or public land is a rational one. The Legislature while making a rational distinction between one class and another, however, is not required to state the basis for the distinction in the preamble. Every presumption is in favour of the constitutionality of an Act and the onus lies upon one who assails it to show that it is unconstitutional.

What Art. 14 restrains is not the normal exercise of the Governmental power but any abuse in the exercise of their authority. It is enough if the classification brought by the Legislature has reasonable relation to the differences.

As there is always justification for speed in Government's acquiring money due to them, there is always a justification for speed in their acquiring possession over their land illegally occupied. Therefore an Act providing a speedier process for eviction from Government lands of unauthorised persons cannot be struck down under Art. 14 of the Constitution as being discriminatory. 1960 All L J 52, Overruled; AIR 1961 S C 828 and AIR 1961 S C 1704, Foll. U. P. Act, III of 1947, is of universal application. S. 7-B applies to all tenants and all landlords alike. It makes no differential treatment between one citizen and the other and therefore the fact that one of the parties to the application (viz., the tenant) is not given a right to file objection unless he deposits an amount of money specified in the notice served on him does not mean that the legislation is a discriminatory legislation. All persons have been treated alike. The proviso is, therefore, not hit by Art. 14 of the Constitution.

Cases under Land Acquisition Acts

● ——Art. 14—Discriminatory law — Rule of reasonable classification — Land Acquisition (Madras Amendment) Act (23 of 1961), S. 3 – Amendments made in S. 23, Land Acquisition Act, 1894—Classification has no reasonable relation to object sought to be achieved — Land Acquisition (Madras Amendment) Act (23 of 1961) infringes Art. 14 and is void.

Under Art. 14 of the Constitution of India the State shall not deny to any person equality before the law or the equal protection of the laws within the territory of India. But this does not preclude the Legislature from making a reasonable classification for the purpose of legislation. The said classification has to pass two tests, namely, (i) the classification must be founded on an intelligible differentia which distinguishes persons and things left out of the group and (ii) the differentia must have a rational relation to the object sought to be achieved by the statute in question. On a comparative study of the Land Acquisition Act, 1894 and the Land Acquisition (Madras Amendment) Act (23 of 1961), it becomes clear that if a land is acquired for a housing scheme under the Amending Act, the claimant gets a lesser value than he would get for the same land or a similar land if it is acquired for a public purpose like hospital under the Principal Act. The classification thus sought to be made by the Land Acquisition (Madras Amendment) Act, 23 of 1961 between persons whose lands are acquired for other public purposes has no reasonable relation to the object sought to be achieved. Discrimination is writ large on the Amending Act and it cannot be sustained on the principle of reasonable classification. The Land Acquisition (Madras Amendment) Act (23 of 1961), therefore, clearly infringes Art. 14 of the Constitution and is void. Vajravelu Mudaliar v. Special Deputy Collector for Land Acquisition, W. Madras, (1964) 2 S C J 703 : (1964) 2 Mad L J (S C) 173 : (1964) 2 Andh W R (S C) 173 : AIR 1965 S C 1017 (1027, 1028) (Pt A) (Prs 19, 20).

● ——Art. 14 — Land Acquisition Act (1894), Ss. 40 (1) (aa), 44 B (as amended in 1962) — Validity — Provisions do not contravene Art. 14.

Per Majority: It is true that acquisition for the purpose of Cl. (aa) of S. 40 (1), Land Acquisition Act, can only be made for a Government company or a public company and cannot be made for a private company or an individual but there is a clear classification between a public company and a Government company on the one hand and a private company and an individual on the other which has reasonable nexus with the objects to be achieved under the law. The intention of the legislature clearly is that private individuals and private companies which really consist of a few private individuals banded together should not have the advantage of acquiring land even though they may be intending to engage in some industry or work which may be for a public purpose inasmuch as the enrichment consequent on such work goes to private individuals or to group of them who have formed themselves into a private company. Public companies on the other hand are broad-based and Government companies are really in a sense no different from Government, though for convenience of administration a Government company may be formed which thus becomes a separate legal entity. Thus in one case the acquisition results in private enrichment while in the other it is the public which gains in every way. Therefore a distinction in the matter of acquisition of land between public companies and Government companies on the one hand and private individuals and private companies on the other is justified, considering the object behind Cl. (aa) as introduced into the Act. R. L. Arora v. State of U. Per Majority : It is always open to the State to fix priorities amongst public utilities of different kinds, bearing in mind the needs of the State, the existing facilities and other relevant factors. It is for the State Government to say which particular industry may be regarded as beneficial to the public and to decide that its establishment would serve a public purpose. No question of discrimination would therefore arise merely by reason of the fact that Government has declared that the establishment of a particular industry is a public purpose. Somawanti v. ——Art. 14 — Scope of — Sections 6 and 17, Land Acquisition Act (1894), if hit by Article.

Where legislation grants a discretion to any authority there are two tests in order to judge whether such a discretion is hit by Art. 14, firstly that the discretion must be in respect of a fundamental right guaranteed by the Constitution and secondly that it admits of the possibility of any real and substantial discrimination. AIR 1957 S C 397, Foll.

Section 6, Land Acquisition Act, itself does not give any arbitrary power to the State Government to issue a declaration. A declaration can only be issued if the land is needed for a public purpose. The fact that the discretion may be abused will not render the provisions of the Act invalid. The exercise of the power may itself be challenged on the ground of mala fides but provisions of the Act cannot be hit by Art. 14 on that ground. Section 17 is also is not hit by the provisions of Art. 14. AIR 1958 All 126 (132, 133, 134) (Pt J) (Prs 15, 21, 23).

——Art. 14—Land Acquisition Act (1894) (as amended by Bombay Act 8 of 1958), Ss. 4 and 6 read with S. 3 (f) (2)—Validity of—Provisions conferring wide and arbitrary powers—Possibility of misuse — Provisions not necessarily discriminatory —Sections not ultra vires.

A discretion given under a law, however wide it may be cannot necessarily be equated with discrimination, and in so far as there is a possibility of the misuse of a discretion the normal presumption of law is that the authority invested with a discretionary power will act fairly and honestly and not abuse it. If it does, however, abuse it in a given case, that is an indication of human frailty rather than of the power being discriminatory. This presumption would prevail also in the case of acquisition of land under Ss. 4 and 6 read with S. 3 (f) (2) as amended by the Bombay Act 8 of 1958 and it cannot be assumed that in the selection of land for acquisition the Government or the Commissioner would act with any particular animus or show discrimination between the petitioner and other citizens. Moreover, even in the present Act there are sufficient criteria or safeguards indicated and the discretion vested in the State Government or the Commissioner is not an arbitrary discretion. The challenge, therefore, to the notifications and the provisions of the Land Acquisition Act under Article 14 fails. ——Art. 14 - Scope—Acquisition for project relating to water for preventing floods— If contravenes Article—(Land Acquisition Act (1894), S. 4).

Where land is proposed to be acquired for a project relating to water for the purpose of preventing floods, it may be that on account of this project being worked out, the lands of some persons might be affected, but it can never be said that the intended project designed to relieve the people of the havoc consequent on the yearly floods, can be said to be discriminatory. In all welfare legislation, there will be a section of the people which may be affected, but such legislation on that account cannot be said to be discriminatory. Therefore the proposed acquisition does not contravene the provisions of Art. 14 of the Constitution. ILR (1956) Cut 443 : A I R 1956 Orissa 114 (118, 119) (Pt C) (Pr 13) (DB).

The fact that the petitioners who are in permissive occupation of the property proposed to be acquired will be deprived of their homestead cannot be said to result in a denial of equality before law or the equal protection of the laws, because such personal inconveniences in the case of acquisition of lands for public purposes are inevitable, and besides, the landless persons who are deprived of their homestead as a result of the acquisition can in their turn expect to be benefited in due time by the extension of the housing scheme sponsored by Government. 1955 Ker L T 533 : I L R (1955) T C 580 : AIR 1955 T C 270 (271) (Pt A) (Pr 2) (DB).

——Art. 14—Equality before law or the equal protection of laws—Violation of—Plea when available —(Travancore Land Acquisition Act (11 of 1089), S. 6).

When the law under which the action is taken is good law and the act complained of has been done in good faith within the limitations imposed by the law and for the purpose of carrying out the objects of the law, the act will be protected unless there is evidence of mala fides in the application of law. Therefore, when the charge of violation of equal protection is confined to an act such as under Land Acquisition Act the attack cannot succeed unless it be established that it was hostile act directed against the complainant, and it is for the complainant to show that the act was mala fide. ——Art. 14 — Discrimination — Order of requisition of land under S. 3 (1), West Bengal Land (Requisition and Acquisition) Act — Not unconstitutional merely because Government had not chosen to apply the lower procedure under the Land Acquisition Act.

The unqualified proposition that where two statutes are available, one giving larger rights to the subject or the citizen and the other lesser, then the choice of statute must be left to the people and not to the State and must always be made in favour of the subject and against the Government, cannot be accepted as correct. A statute applies by force of its own strength and if two statutes cover the same field there is no constitutional law which prevents the application of the one or the other or compels the preference of one to the other. If both can be applied either one or the other can be applied whether it is being invoked by the State or by the subject. If the statutes prescribe unequal procedure or law then the only way they can be challenged is on the ground of infringement of equal protection or equality of laws under Art. 14 of the Constitution. If they survive the test of the challenge of Art. 14 of the Constitution then no further question of unconstitutional preference in the application of one or the other statute on the ground of discrimination can any longer arise.

The West Bengal Land (Requisition and Acquisition) Act 1948 and the Land Acquisition Act, 1894, are indeed different in so far as they meet different purposes. Therefore, if in the exigencies of a particular case the State Government has chosen to apply the West Bengal Act in requisitioning certain lands instead of applying the lower procedure prescribed by the Land Acquisition Act, the order of requisition cannot be challenged as discriminatory or unconstitutional. No part of the Kanom Tenancy Act (24 of 1955) is violative of the fundamental rights of the jenmies under Arts. 14, 19 (1) (f) and 31 of the Constitution. In order to pass the test of permissible classification, two conditions must be fulfilled, namely (1) that the classification must be founded on an intelligible differentia which distinguishes persons or things that are grouped together from others left out of the group and (2) that the differentia must have a rational relation to the object sought to be achieved by the statute in question.

Applying the aforesaid test to the Act in question there is an intelligible differentia, which distinguishes such persons being grouped together from those who have been left out. The object of the Act is to confer better rights on such tenants and the reduction of the renewal fee is related to the aforesaid object. Nor can the Act be held to be discriminatory on the ground that the kanom tenants of the area get greater benefits than kanomdars of the Travancore area. Nor does the Act infringe the fundamental rights of the landlords under Art. 19 (1) (f). AIR 1955 Hyd 194, Applied. AIR 1952 Mad 205 and AIR 1955 Nag 1 (FB) and AIR 1954 SC 92, Rel. on Differentiation by itself does not make a piece of legislation obnoxious. It is the lack of a valid foundation for the differentiation that abrogates a statute.

The development of tenancy legislation in Travancore and Cochin States has not been uniform and a complete identity of the provisions in every respect cannot but be a matter for the future. The legislative history provides ample justification for the differences that obtain. Madras Acts.

● ——Art. 14 — Reasonable classification — Madras City Tenants Protection Act (3 of 1922), S 2 (as amended by Madras Act, 13 of 1960) — Protection given by amending Madras Act 19 of 1955 to non-residential tenants taken away by amending Madras Act 13 of 1960 in respect of such tenants residing in certain town — Existence of real difference found between non-residential tenants living in different towns—Madras Act 13 of 1960 is not discriminatory.

The Madras City Tenants Protection Act, 1921 (Mad. Act III of 1922) was amended by Mad. Act 19 of 1955. In exercise of the powers conferred by Act 19 of 1955, the Government made an order notifying the Town of Tanjore to have come within the purview of the principal Act. The rights which the tenants had inter alia acquired under the 1955 Act were : (i) they were entitled on ejectment to be paid as compensation the value of the buildings erected by them or by their predecessor-in interest, (ii) the Court before issuing a decree for eviction should ascertain the amount due to a tenant and the decree for eviction should be made conditional on the payment of the decree amount, (iii) in suits where decree for ejectment had been passed before the 1955 Act came into force a tenant could file an application for ascertainment of the compensation due in execution and for a fresh decree to be passed in accordance with S. 4 of the principal Act, and (iv) he had also a right, at his option, to apply within the prescribed time to the Court for an order directing the landlord to sell the land to him for a price fixed by the Court, whether a decree for ejectment had or had not been passed. Subsequently, by Mad. Act 13 of 1960 the principal Act was again amended. The effect of the amendment was to withdraw the protection given to tenants of non-residential buildings in the municipal town of Tanjore and certain other towns. A further result of this amending Act in respect of non-residential buildings, in places other than the City of Madras and the other specified municipal towns, was that all proceedings pending in Courts in respect of those buildings abated and the rights acquired by tenants under the 1955 Act in respect of the said buildings were extinguished. The contention of the tenants of the non-residential buildings in Tanjore was that the 1960 Act infringed their fundamental right under Art. 14 of the Constitution for two reasons, namely (i) provisions of the 1960 Act introduced a classification between non-residential buildings in different municipal areas and such a classification had absolutely no relevance to the object sought to be achieved by the Act; and (ii) the 1960 Act made a distinction between non-residential buildings in Madras, Salem, Madurai, Coimbatore and Tiruchirapalli on the one hand and those in other towns, including Tanjore, on the other though the alleged differences between the two sets of localities had no reasonable relation to the object sought to be achieved, namely, the protection of tenants who had built substantial structure, from eviction.

Held, (1) that the provisions of the principal Act applied both to residential and non-residential buildings. So too the 1955 Act. Therefore, when in the 'objects and reasons' attached to Act 13 of 1960 the authors of that Act stated that it was enacted with the main object of safeguarding the tenants from eviction from pesidential quarters, they were only emphasizing upon the main object but were not excluding the operation of that Act to non-residential buildings. So it was not correct to state that the object of the Act was only to protect the tenants of residential buildings; (2) that on the basis of the allegations made in the affidavit filed on behalf of the State of Madras, supported as it was by the statistical data furnished to the Court there were real differences between non-residential buildings in the towns of Madurai, Coimbatore, Salem and Tiruchirapalli and those in other towns of the Madras State which had reasonable nexus to the object sought to be achieved by the Act.

It is true that population alone cannot be a basis for the classification made under an Act. But in the present case the Gazetteer supports the averment made by the State in the affidavit that the municipal towns selected for preferential treatment are more advanced commercially than other towns in the State.

Article 14 of the Constitution embodies the principle of classification, namely, that classification must be founded on intelligible differentia and the differentia must have a rational relation to the object sought to be achieved by the statute in question; and the classification may be founded on different bases, such as, geographical, or according to objects or occupations or the like. The Tanjore Tenants and Pannaiyals Protection Act, 1952, the Madras Cultivating Tenants Protection Act, 1955, as amended by Madras Act 14 of 1956, and the Madras Cultivating Tenants (Payment of Fair Rent) Act, 1958, represent a valid exercise of the State's legislative power under Art. 246 and item 18 of List 2 of the Seventh Schedule of the Constitution. The impugned Tenancy Acts do not infringe the fundamental right of equal protection of laws guaranteed by Art. 14 of the Constitution, and the restrictions imposed by those Acts on the fundamental right guaranteed to the petitioner land-owner by Art. 19 (1) (f) are reasonable and within the limits permitted by Art. 19 (5) of the Constitution.

The Tanjore Tenants and Pannaiyals Protection Act conferred on etenants who were in possession on 1-12 51, the right to continue in occupation as tenants until May, 1957; and on tenants in possession after 1-12-51 the right to continue till the same date and thereafter, for a further period of five years from that date unless the tenancy was put an end to by notice given before 1-5-1957. The Madras Cultivating Tenants Protection Act, 1955, as amended by Act 14 of 1956, gave the tenants in the Tanjore district protection from eviction until September, 1958.

The right which a landowner has to evict a tenant under a contract is vested in the landowner under the general law of contracts and the principles enacted in the Transfer of Property Act. But the legislature has the power to modify or curtail for the benefit of the tenant such rights vested in the land owner under the general law. Restrictions imposed on landowners for the benefit of tenants cannot be regarded as unreasonable or beyond the competence of the legislature. AIR 1954 S C 92, Rel. on.

The denial to landowners in the State of Madras of the right to evict their tenants for a period of 3 or 4 years cannot, in the circumstances, be considered as an unreasonable restriction of their rights. The presumption is in favour of the constitutional validity of the legislation.

The Madras Cultivating Tenants (Payment of Fair Rent) Act is not an unreasonable exercise of the power vested in the Legislature. C. N. Subramania Iyer v. N. ——Art. 14—Scope — S. 6, Madras Cultivating Tenants Protection Act (25 of 1955), if violates Art. 14.

The setting up of revenue Courts manned by officers of the Revenue Department has been the general pattern of tenancy legislation for over a century and the vesting therefore of powers in a revenue Court instead of in a civil Court cannot be objected to on the ground that the presiding officer of the former

Court has not the equipment necessary to deal properly and justly with the questions entrusted to his jurisdiction. Nor does the failure to provide for an appeal from the order of the Revenue Divisional Officer vitiate the law on the ground of a denial of equal protection. Section 6 is not, therefore, violative of Art. 14 of the Constitution. 70 Mad L W 221 : (1957) 1 Mad L J 307 : I L R (1957) Mad 571 : AIR 1957 Mad 333 (337) (Pt D) (Pr 22) (DB).

It cannot be said that there is no rational principle behind the limit of 6·2/3 acres of wet land prescribed by S. 4 (2). It is based on a classification of bigger and smaller land owners and it has specified the reasonable extent of land which could be the subject of personal cultivation by the landlord himself. Whether the extent ought to be 6 2/3 acres either more or less is matter of legislative policy with which the Court has no concern. 70 Mad L W 221 : (1957) 1 Mad L J 307 : I L R (1957) Mad 571 : AIR 1957 Mad 333 (336, 337, 338) (Pt E) (Prs 16, 23) (DB).

——Arts. 14 and 15 — 'Equality before law'—Meaning of — Classification of tenure into Jama and Sagu in Coorg.

After the Constitution, 'equality before law' does not mean that all distinctions between one person and another or between one class of persons and another class of persons are wiped out. The Constitution allows classification, but the classification must rest upon reasonable grounds of distinction. The classification should not be made arbitrarily and persons in the same classification must have equal rights.

It cannot be said that the classification of tenure into Jama and Sagu is not based on reasonable grounds. The classification is not arbitrary and no distinction is made between persons of the same class. There is, no doubt, some distinction between the rights and liabilities of persons within one class and rights and liabilities within the other class of tenure. But this is not opposed to Art. 15 of the Constitution as that classification is not arbitrary, but is based on reasonable grounds. Orissa Acts.

——Art. 14 — Scope — Orissa Tenants Relief Act (5 of 1955), S. 2 (1) (j), Exception 3 — Validity — Exclusion of tenants holding land directly under Government—If unreasonable discrimination.

The preamble to Orissa Tenants Relief Act makes it absolutely clear that the primary object was to prevent private landlords from evicting the tillers of the soil on a large scale.

Bearing in mind the apprehended evil which the Act was intended to remedy, even the complete exclusion of all Government lands from the scope of the Act would not have amounted to unreasonable discrimination so as to offend Art. 14. Where an occupancy ryot holding land directly under Government was paying only produce rent to them he was given the benefit of reduction in rent conferred by S. 3. Doubtless where such a ryot was paying rent partly in cash and partly in kind he derived no benefit from the Act, but on this ground alone the Act cannot be struck down as offending Art. 14. So far as protection from eviction was concerned, there was no necessity to extend the Act to such classes of tenants because their rights of cultivation were permanent and heritable as defined in Exception 3 to S. 2 (1) (j) and they were not ex hypothesi liable to eviction. Hence Exception 3 to S. 2 (1) (j) did not amount to unreasonable discrimination. 23 Cut L T 67 : I L R (1957) Cut 71 : A I R 1957 Orissa 56 (59) (Pt A) (Pr 8) (DB).

——Art. 14 — Scope — Orissa Tenants Relief Act (5 of 1955), S. 18 (d) — Validity—If discriminatory.

The primary object of the Act was to confer benefit on the actual cultivators holding lands under private landlord. If the Legislature felt that the condition of Bhagchassis holding land under a temporary lease by Government was slightly different from that of Bhagchassis under private landlord and did not want to confer protection from eviction on that class, it will not be proper to hold that Act to be unconstitutional. Hence S. 18 (d) which deals with lands held under a temporary lease granted by Government cannot be held to be discriminatory. ● ——Art. 14 — Tenancy Laws — (Tenancy Laws—Punjab Security of Land Tenures Act (10 of 1953)).

The classification between displaced persons and non-displaced persons in the Punjab Security of Land Tenures Act is wholly reasonable and is in conformity with the directive principles of the Constitution. It places the displaced persons at an advantage over the non-displaced persons and it cannot be said that this is an unreasonable classification.

For the same reason the objection that the area of self-cultivation has been restricted by the Act and the expression 'self-cultivation' has been defined somewhat stringently is not tenable. Once it is conceded that large holdings are to be discouraged and a more even distribution of land is to be promoted a somewhat strict definition of the expression 'self cultivation' will become necessary and a land-owner will not be allowed to hold an area in excess of the maximum limit by merely pretending that his close relations are cultivating it. If indeed land is being cultivated by his relations there should be a separation and the land should be owned and cultivated by tha relations themselves. Bhagirath Ram Chand v. Rajasthan Acts ●——Art. 14 — Expediency of legislation — Power of Court to go into — Rajasthan (Protection of Tenants) Ordinance (9 of 1949), S. 7 (1)—Constitutional validity.

It cannot be said that under S 7 (1) of the Rajasthan Ordinance (9 of 1949) landlords who had tenants on their lands on April 1, 1948 were subjected to various restrictions in the enjoyment of their rights as owners, while other landlords were free from similar restrictions. The preamble to the Ordinance recites the object of the legislation and the expediency thereof. The Legislature had necessarily to decide from what date the law should be given operation, and it decided that it should be from April 1, 1948. That is a matter exclusively for the Legislature to determine, and the propriety of that determination is not open to question in Courts. Inder Singh v. ●——Art. 14 — Scope — Rajasthan (Protection of Tenants) Ordinance (9 of 1949), S. 15—Validity.

Section 15 of the Rajasthan (Protection of Tenants) Ordinance, 1949 does not itself indicate the grounds on which exemption could be granted, but the preamble to the Ordinance sets out with sufficient clearness the policy of the Legislature, and the decision of the Government cannot be said to be unguided. Even if S. 15 were to be held, to be bad, that does not affect the rest of the legislation, as the matter dealt with in that section is clearly severable. Section 15 cannot be held to be bad under Art. 14. A I R 1954 S C 465, Rel. on. Inder Singh v. The Notification dated 11th January, 1951, published in the Rajasthan Gazette, is not hit by Art. 14 of the Constitution of India. There is a reasonable basis for classification of military employees whether in service or discharged after the coming into force of the ordinance in the interests of the general public, firstly, to rehabilitate such persons on their own lands, and secondly, to facilitate recruitment of the armed forces also from rural population. The term 'Government' appearing in the notification means the Government of the Union of India. 1957 Raj L W 129 : ILR (1956) 6 Raj 982 : A I R 1957 Raj 19 (21) (Pt A) (Prs 6, 7) (DB).

It is not necessary that the laws should be exactly the same in all the parts of a State, for so long as there are almost similar laws in other areas, discrimination cannot be said to arise.

Courts have to see in each particular case the nature of the law and to Judge if that law is of a progressive character meant for the amelioration of the people of the particular State by which it was passed. If it is a law of that character and if similar progressive laws do not exist in some parts of the State it would be wrong to declare such progressive and ameliorating measure invalid, and thus bring the progressive parts of the State back to the level of the unprogressive parts. The effort should be to bring the former unprogressive parts to the level of the progressive ones. (1880) 101 U S 22, Rel. on.

● ——Art. 14 — Discrimination—What constitutes—Rajasthan Acts 15 of 1951 and 14 of 1952— Validity

— Rajasthan Produce Rents Regulating Act (15 of 1951), S. 1 — Rajasthan Produce Rents Regulating (Amendment) Act (14 of 1952), S. 1.

Tenancy laws aiming at the welfare of the tenantry which forms a large part of the population, have always been a feature of ameliorating legislation in our country. These laws have aimed at reducing the burden on the tenantry in order to raise the economic position of the large majority of the citizens of this country and have generally resulted in the reduction of the amount which the landlords have been receiving from the tenants in the past. They give a little more to the tenant who, by his labour, produces crops, and a little less is left to the landlord who happens to be the owner of the land. It does not follow that such a legislation is per se discriminatory in favour of the tenants and against the landlords.

If a different share was fixed for different landlords then it could have been said that there was discrimination between landlord and landlord and Art. 14 applied. But where there is no discrimination of that kind, it cannot be said that merely because a little more is left to the tenants and little less is left to the landlords, the legislation is against Art. 14.

Held, that there was no discrimination between tenant and tenant or between landlord and landlord in the two Acts, namely, Rajasthan Acts 15 of 1951 and 14 of 1952. Merely by calling the two Acts class legislation, they cannot be said to impugn Art. 14. Raj Sahiban Shersingh v. State of Rajasthan, ILR (1954) 4 Raj 365 : 1954 Raj L W 296 : AIR 1954 Raj 65 (68, 73, 74) (Pt C) (Prs 14, 15, 16, 18, 47, 49) (FB).

——Arts. 14, 19 and 31 — Rajasthan Tenants Protection Ordinance, S. 7—Validity.

The presumption is always in favour of the constitutionality of an enactment and the burden is upon him who attacks it to show that there has been a clear transgression of the constitutional principles. Obviously section 7 of the Rajasthan Tenants Protection Ordinance is not meant for the advantage or disadvantage of any single individual. It applies to all the tenants who were in occupation of their holdings on the prescribed date and were ejected or dispossessed either within three months of the commencement of the Ordinance or within three months of the date of their application for reinstatement whichever is later. There is no discrimination between those tenants who answer to this description. It is quite clear from the preamble of the Ordinance that it was promulgated with a view to put a check on the growing tendency of land-holders to eject or dispossess the tenants from their holdings and in the wider national interest of increasing the production of food grains There was, therefore justification for the legislature to produce an enactment under which this growing tendency could be checked. The Legislature consequently gave protection against ejectment and dispossession to all those tenants who were in occupation of their holdings on the date, the ordinance came into force. The law fixed date about which the growing tendency of the land-holders was operating but at which there was no legislation to protect them. It must be presumed that the legislature of Rajasthan understood and correctly appreciated the need of its own people, that the provisions of the Protection Ordinance were directed to problems made manifest by experience and that the discriminations if any, were based upon adequate grounds. It cannot therefore be said that the alleged discrimination under S. 7 is not based on any adequate grounds. Article 31 had no operation after it has been held that section 7 of the Protection Ordinance is not void. The reinstatement of the tenants had been ordered under the authority of the said law. As regards Art. 19 (1) (f) the only restriction that had been placed upon the landlords was that of not ejecting the tenants who were holding land when the Ordinance came into force and of reinstating tenants who were in occupation of their holding on prescribed date and were ejected or dispossessed thereafter provided they made application for reinstatement within three months from their ejectment or dispossession or the commencement of the Ordinance, whichever be later. The restriction was reasonable and it was in the interest of general public. A I R 1951 S C 41, Foll. 1952 Raj L W 163 : I L R (1951) 1 Raj 770: AIR 1953 Raj 53 (56, 57) (Prs 5, 7) (DB).

Where a class of persons have been subjected to differential treatment whether in the substantive law or in the rules of procedure what one has to see is whether the classification is founded on an intelligible differentia which distinguishes those for whom a special legislation has been made from others who are governed by the ordinary law and secondly whether the differential treatment, has a reasonable relation to the object sought to be achieved by the enactment. The differentiation of tenure holders under the U. P. ——Art. 14—Equality before law—Classification of suits—Validity of S. 98, Hyderabad Tenancy Act — (Tenancy laws—Hyderabad Tenancy and Agricultural Lands Act (21 of 1950), S. 98).

Article 14 guarantees equality before law and equal protection of law to all citizens. It does not affect procedural law and does not bar rational classification of suits for the purpose of determining the forum which might be entrusted with the trial of suits of a particular class. Certain specified Courts are given the jurisdiction to entertain particular types of litigation. The classification of the types of litigation and investing separate Courts with jurisdiction to try such types of cases is nowhere prescribed by the Constitution.

Held, that the contention that in so far as S. 98 of the Hyderabad Tenancy and Agricultural Lands Act, takes away the jurisdiction of the civil Courts to decide suits for possession of agricultural lands it discriminates between such lands and lands of other description is misconceived. ● —Art. 14—Power of State to adopt classification — Validity of Berar Regulation of Agricultural Leases Act (24 of 1951).

The contention that the classification on the territorial basis as evinced in the Berar Regulation of Agricultural Leases Act, 1951, is not reasonable, having regard to the object of the legislation, is not correct. The object of that Act is to provide for long-term leases of agricultural land to ensure fixity of tenure in the interest of efficient agriculture in Berar. The tenancy law in the Central Provinces is different from that in the merged territories or that prevailing in the alienated and unalienated villages in Berar. It is, therefore, reasonable to make different provisions for these three territories even though the object, i. e., efficient agriculture, is the same. As to the need for different legislation for different areas in the State, the judgment of the Legislature must be regarded as final. AIR 1953 S C 91, Rel. on. Bhaurao v. S. D. Neither of the impugned Acts, viz—Bihar Act (25 of 1947) and Bihar Act (11 of 1950) offends Art. 14 of the Constitution, because the legislations in question refer to a class of persons and not to individuals. Where there is a discrimination between classes of persons and not in the same class of persons themselves, there is no discrimination provided that the legislation is not arbitrary. The impugned Acts merely increased the rights of tenants and thereby diminished the rights of landlords. Such legislation cannot possibly be described as arbitrary. —Art. 14—Saurashtra Gharkhed Tenancy Settlement and Agricultural Lands Ordinance (41 of 1949), S. 29 (2)—Validity.

No person has any vested right in any particular procedure. It is for the State to legislate about the forum, and procedure of seeking remedies for infringement of substantial rights and such forum and procedure are bound to vary. Equal treatment does not necessarily mean identical treatment. Identical treatment in unequal circumstances amounts to inequality. Equal protection of laws does not mean protection by identical laws. The conditions which apply to a landlord both in respect of his substantive rights as well as legal procedure for enforcement thereof cannot necessarily be the same as would apply to a tenant for the simple reason that both of them do not stand on the same footing. Though landlord is debarred from taking possession except under an order of the Mamlatdar even when his tenant is willing to surrender possession to him, this discrimination between the rights of tenants and landlords does not amount to denying equality before the law and equal protection of the law, and therefore S. 29 of S. G. T. S. and Agri. Lands Ord. (41 of 1949) is not void under Art. 13 of the Constitution being repugnant to Art. 14 which guarantees equality before the law. 29. Prohibition laws.

● —Art. 14—Prohibition laws — (Madras Prohibition Act (10 of 1937), S. 4 (2))—Validity.

Section 4 (2) of the Madras Prohibition Act does not offend the provisions as to equality before law or the equal protection of laws The presumptions enacted therein have to be raised against all persons against whom the facts mentioned therein are established.

Even on the application of the due process clause, the presumptions laid down in S. 4 (2) cannot be struck down as denying equal protection and therefore unconstitutional. The matter mentioned in S. 4 (2) should be read distributively in relation to the offences mentioned in S. 4 (1). Possession of liquor, for example, is an offence under S. 4 (1) (a). The presumption in S. 4 (2) is that if it is found in the possession of a person, he should be presumed to have committed the offence under S. 4 (1) (a), unless he could give satisfactory explanation therefor, as for example, that it must have been foisted in the place without his knowledge. Likewise, it would be an offence under S. 4 (1) (g) to be in possession of materials, for the tapping of toddy or the manufacture of liquor. Under S. 4 (2) (a), if a person is found to be in possession of materials or other things mentioned in the sub-section, there is a presumption that he has committed an offence under S. 4 (1) (g), but it is open to him to account satisfactorily therefor. Cases under Central Excises and Salt Act.

● ——Arts. 14, 19 and 31—Central Excises and Salt Act (1944), Sch. I, item 17—Levy of excise duty on foot-wears under Item 17 is not discriminatory—It is valid and cannot be attacked under Arts. 19 and 31 of Constitution.

Manufacturers who employ 50 or more workers can be said to form a well defined class. Manufacturers whose manufacturing process is being carried on with the aid of power exceeding 2 H. P. are also a well defined class. The contention that size makes no difference is not valid. It is well known that the bigger manufacturers are able to effect economy in their manufacturing process and their outturn being both large and rapid they are able to under-sell small manufacturers. If this were not so, mass production would lose all its advantages. Therefore, in imposing the Excise Duty under Item 17 in Schedule I to the Central Excises and Salt Act there is a definite desire to make an exemption in favour of the small manufacturer who is unable to pay the duty as easily if at all, as the big manufacturer. Such a classification in the interests of co-operative societies, cottage industries and small manufacturers has often to be made to give an impetus to them and save them from annihilation in competition with large industry. It cannot be successfully assailed on the ground of discrimination. A similar consideration applies in the case where the exemption operates in respect of very small manufacturers employing not more than 50 workers and carrying on their manufacturing process with power not in excess of 2 H. P. This affords a protection to small concerns who if they are made to pay the duty, would have to go out of business. The Schedule which is characterised as discriminative is thus based upon a reasonable classification and is validly enacted. As the law is valid the attack under Arts. 19 and 31 must fail. Cases under Dhoties (Additional Excise Duty) Act.

——Art. 14—Reasonable classification — Dhoties (Additional Excise Duty) Act (1953)—Validity.

The Court must start with a presumption in favour of the constitutionality of the Act and further the Court is also called upon to conceive a rational basis of classification if such a course can be conceived as justifying the measure.

——Art. 14 Dhoties (Additional Excise Duty) Act (1953)—Validity—(Dhoties (Additional Excise Duty) Act (1953), S. 3 (2)).

The word "nature' in S. 3 (2) of the Act of 1953 in the context in which it has been used must be given a comprehensive meaning and it really includes not merely "nature" strictly so called, but also "extent" of the machinery involved. Mills which might have expanded their machinery or equipment during or after the relevant period have been provided for under the Act for suitable treatment. In this view of the matter, it was open to the petitioner mill to have moved the authorities concerned for relief. The impugned legislation could not be condemned as discriminatory on the ground that although the Act provided in the case of a mill or mills which came into existence only during or after the expiry of the relevant period that the Central Government may fix the permissible quota such as may be reasonable having regard to the machinery and other equipment installed therein and to the other circumstances of the case, no similar provision was to be found in the Act with regard to the mill or mills which might have increased their equipment during or after the expiry of the relevant period. Cases under Hyderabad Abkari Act.

——Art. 14—Andhra Pradesh (Telangana (Area) Abkari Act (1 of 1316 F), S. 3 (1) (a)—Power of Commissioner of Abkari to issue directions to his subordinates—Circular No 24648/Ex 63 E4, dated 17-8-1963—Restriction placed on entry into auction hall — Circular is covered by S. 3 (1) (a) and Rule 7 (i) (b) and is not irrational in classification.

Section 3 of the Hyderabad Abkari Act (now, the A. P. (Telangapa Area) Abkari Act) clothes the Commissioner with ample power to issue directions to his subordinate officers in conformity with the policy and purpose of the Act. Further, even though the Rules framed under the Act do not specifically say that a defaulter is not entitled to a hall ticket but, the power conferred on the auctioning authority to cancel the bid of a person who is in arrear, carries with it the power to stop such a defaulter even from bidding. Taking, therefore, into consideration Rule 7 (i) (b) which is to be read with Circular No. 24648/Ex. 63-E4 dated 17-8 1963 issued by the Commissioner of Abkari placing restriction on the entry into the auction hall on those bidders who are defaulters in paying excise revenue of recent years, the circular is proper and is not irrational in classification though such a restriction is placed on defaulters of recent years and of Hyderabad district only. ——Art. 14 - Hyderabad Abkari Act, S. 43 —Validity —(Hyderabad Abkari Act (1318-F) Ss. 2 (1), 4, 6, 15, 43).

A perusal of Ss. 4, 6 and 15 of the Hyderabad Abkari Act will show that the amount realised from a lease is evidently included within the meaning of Abkari revenue. The contract of the toddy trees of the Excise Department with the petitioner is quite clearly a contract in the administrative capacity for the purposes of realisation of State revenue. In leasing out toddy trees the State does not carry on a commercial undertaking on competitive basis. On the other hand, it leases out those trees for tapping purposes in order that it may bring revenue to the State. The State for this undertaking falls under a separate classification and that classification being reasonable and in the interest of the public revenue, it does not infringe the equality clause. By that clause all classifications are not prohibited. Article 14 does not require things which are different in fact or in law to be treated as though they were the same. Toddy trees being a source of revenue the State can very well be treated separately in the public interest. ILR (1955) Hyd 283 : AIR 1955 Hyd 109 (110) (Pt A) (Pr 4) (DB).

Cases under Travancore and Cochin Acts.

——Arts. 14 and 226—Rules under S. 26, Travancore Abkari Act — If inconsistent with S. 14 of Act — Order of Government directing resale—Validity.

The rules made under S. 26 of the Abkari Act, are rules for carrying out the provisions of S. 14 of the Act and are not mere adminstrative orders. Once the rules are rules properly made under the Act, they have the force of law and by reason of S. 65 of the Act have to be read as part thereof.

Where the Board of revenue has not acted under R. 12 and has not passed any order no question of a resale arises and it follows that the order of the Government directing a resale, which is, in effect, an order rejecting the bids of the petitioners, is without jurisdiction. The order in effect denies them the right of their bids being considered and is violative of Art. 14. Art. 226 of the Constitution can be invoked. ——Art. 14 — Applicability — Overt or covert monopoly — Prohibition against creation of — Number of shops grouped into one lump and sold — Similar lump sales held in respect of other shops as well — No monopoly can be said to have been created by such sales—Further as there was a public auction in which any member of the public was entitled to bid Arts. 14 and 19 of the Constitution cannot also apply. ——Art. 14 — Inequality affected by combined operation of Statutes passed by legislatures having independent jurisdiction — Art. 14 cannot be invoked.

Where imposts are levied by two legislatures, each having independent jurisdiction to levy them as well as to grant such exemptions as it liked, Art. 14 of the Constitution cannot be invoked on the ground that inequality has resulted from the combined operation of the laws made by two different legislatures. Where therefore it was contended that the levy of sales tax on cotton fabrics produced by not more than four power looms offended against Art. 14 of the Constitution because as a result of the fact that goods produced by four power looms are exempted from the additional excise duty while they are subjected to heavy sales tax in West Bengal but goods produced by more than four power looms were subject to the additional excise duty but exempted from the sales tax in West Bengal an arbitrary discrimination had been made against producers with not more than four power looms, it was held that Art. 14 of the Constitution had no application. AIR 1954 S C 493, Rel. on.

Held, the fact that goods produced by four power looms were exempted from additional excise duty under notification No. 107/57 dated 14th December 1957 issued under the Additional Duties of Excise (Goods of Special Importance) Act, 1957, while they were subjected to heavy tax under Rule 3 (28) (a) of the Bengal Sales Tax Rules, 1941, but goods produced by more than four power looms were subjected to the additional excise duty but exempted from the sales tax in West Bengal did not amount to arbitrary discrimination against producers with not more than four power looms. AIR 1965 Cal 203 (206) (Pt C) (Pr 9 (v)).

There is no inherent right in a citizen to sell intoxicating liquor by retail, where at the proceedings which began with bidding for individual shops the bidders raised the bids only upto a certain amount and then stopped and the Excise Commissioner and Collector believing that this was due to some understanding among the bidders, resorted to collective bidding to break such an understanding but equal opportunity was given to all the bidders, including the petitioner, to bid at the collective auction it cannot be said that the auction was not bona fide and violated the letter and spirit of Art. 14. ——Arts. 14 and 19 — State when is not 'person'— Licence to vend liquor — Disparity between State and citizen — Discrimination not unreasonable — C. P. and Berar Excise Act (2 of 1915) is not repugnant to Art. 14.

The State in its capacity as a giver of a licence for sale of liquor performs its ordinary function of Government and cannot be said to be a 'person' within the meaning of Art. 14.

The State has a heavy responsibility of carrying on administration for which purpose the revenues must be readily realisable. Hence, the coercive processes issued against the petitioner under S 64, C. P. and Berar Excise Act, 1915 read with Ss. 128 and 225, C. P. Land Revenue Act, 1917 do not offend against either Art. 14 or Art. 19 (5) of the Constitution.

——Arts. 14, 19 (1) (g) — Scope — Section 16 (2), Employees' Provident Funds Act (1952) — Validity — If contravenes Art. 14 or 19 (1) (g).

Under Art. 14 of the Constitution any law providing for classification is permissible provided the classification is on a reasonable or rational basis.

If S. 16 (2) of the Act had empowered the Government to grant exemption in case of any individual factory, then such a provision would become more exposed to challenge or attack on the ground that it enabled the Government to single out an individual at their own sweet will and pleasure and exempt it from the operation of the Act. Furthermore, unless an actual classification is made under S. 16 (2) on the ground of financial position or other circumstances in relation to a group of factories carrying on a particular kind of industry as specified in Sch. I to the Act, it is not possible to say whether Art. 14 of the Constitution has been infringed or not. Section 16 (2) of the Employees' Provident Funds Act, cannot, therefore, be impugned as infringing Art. 14 of the Constitution.

The words 'other circumstances of the case' in S. 16 (2) do vest a wide discretion in the Government. If it can be established that the Government has acted arbitrarily in any case, such arbitrary act can be challenged in a Court of law inasmuch as an arbitrary exercise of discretion is no exercise at all. Section 16 (2) therefore does not violate Art. 19 (1) (g) of the Constitution. 61 Cal W N 694 : (1958-59) 15 FJR 193 : (1958) 1 Lab L J 285 : AIR 1957 Cal 702 (706, 707) (Pt B) (Prs 11, 12).

——Art. 14 — Scope — Section 16, Employees' Provident Funds Act, 1952 — Validity.

Section 16 exempts factories belonging to the Government or local authorities from the scope of the Act. An objection under Art. 14, Constitution of India, on the ground that it is not a reasonable classification cannot be entertained. Even, if, however, no case could be made out for exempting factories belonging to the Government or local authorities from the provisions of the Act, this would not constitute a ground for declaring the Act as a whole to be ultra vires. Employees' State Insurance Act.

——Art. 14 —Applicability and scope of—S. 1 (3) of Employees' State Insurance Act (1948)—Validity.

In order to attract the operation of Art. 14 it is necessary to show that the power of differentiation does not rest on any reasonable basis, having regard to the object which the Legislature had in view.

The discretion which is vested in the Central Government under S. 1 (3) of the Employees' State Insurance Act, 1948 is undoubtedly very wide, but taking into account the policy of the Legislature and the administrative difficulties of operating the Act, the discretion does not involve a contravention of the provisions of Art. 14. A discretionary power is not necessarily a discriminatory power and abuse of power is not to be easily assumed where the discretion is vested in the Government and not in a minor official. There is nothing to show that the reason for the Central Government not bringing Chapters IV and V into force in Saharanpur was anything but administrative difficulty and there had been no discrimination in fact. The provisions of sub-s. (3) of S. 1 are not inconsistent with Art. 14 of the Constitution. ILR (1958) 1 All 109 : AIR 1957 All 136 (138, 139, 141) (Pt A) (Prs 10, 11, 12, 29) (DB).

——Arts. 14, 19 (1) (g), 31, 245, 265 — Employees' State Insurance Act (1948), Ss. 1 (3), 73-A—Validity —Power of Central Government to bring parts of the Act into force in different areas on different dates—No violation of Art. 14 — Levy of special contribution under S. 73-A before benefit sections are brought into force—Not an unreasonable restriction on right of employers—No violation of Art. 19.

Section 1 (3) of the Employees' State Insurance Act, does not contravene Art. 14 of the Constitution and is not ultra vires on that ground. Similarly, the provisions of S. 73-A, Employees' State Insurance Act, are not hit by Art. 19 of the Constitution and the imposition under that section does not constitute an unreasonable restriction on the right of the employers.

Per Mehrotra, C. J. — The provisions of S. 1 (3) of the Employees' State Insurance Act neither violate Art. 14 of the Constitution nor do they constitute excessive delegation. The terms of S. 1 (3) are wide enough and give power to the Central Government to appoint different dates for different provisions of the Act and for different parts of the State. It is open to the Central Government to apply the provisions of Chapter V-A without applying the provisions of Chapter V. If the provisions of Chapter V-A have been validly enacted there is no bar to the realisation of the amount from the employers whether the imposition is of the nature of fee or tax. When the Act is taken as a whole, the restriction placed on the right of the employers if any, cannot be regarded as unreasonable.

As the imposition of special contribution under S. 73-A does not result in any acquisition by the Government, the provisions of S. 73-A are beyond the scope of Art. 31 (2) of the Constitution as amended.

Per Dutta, J.—The employers' special contribution under S. 73-A is not a tax but a fee. A I R 1957 All 136, Dissent. from.

It cannot be said that S. 1 (3) of the Act is ultra vires Art. 14 of the Constitution. Although the Government may bring the different sections of the Act into force in different areas on different dates, it does not mean that Government may bring into force S. 73-A and omit to bring into force Chapter V which provides the benefits for all time to come. If the Government arbitrarily makes delay, the employer can apply for a writ to enforce that duty. If, in fact, Chapter V was brought into force in a particular area of the State and another area was arbitrarily left out, then again such an action could be challenged under a writ petition. There are good grounds for levying contributions before the benefit sections are brought into force. As such there is no infringement of Art. 19 (1) (g) of the Constitution. Factory legislation

● ——Arts. 14, 19 (1) (g)—Factories Act (1948), S. 85 — Power to extend benefits of Act to persons to whom Act has not been extended—Provision for selective application of Act—Bidi making establishments — Maharashtra Government Notification extending benefits of Act to bidi rollers in specified places—Constitutional validity of S. 85 and notification—No contravention of Arts. 14 and 19 (1) (g).

Section 85 which authorises the State Government to issue a Notification applying all or any of the provisions of the Act to any place in which a manufacturing process is carried on, and which involves the consequence that the place is deemed a factory and the persons working therein are deemed workers is not by itself discriminatory so as to infringe Art. 14 of the Constitution. AIR 1963 S C 806, Rel. on ; nor does the provision amount to authorising imposition of unreasonable restriction upon the fundamental right of the owner of the factory to carry on his business. The Notification issued by the Maharashtra Government under S. 85 (1), making the bidi rollers in the specified places "deemed workers" and entitling them to the benefits provided under the Act, is also not open to attack on the ground that the State has issued the Notification by selecting for application of the provisions of the Act, some out of the places in which bidi manufacturing processes are carried on. Nor does the Notification in so far as it seeks to apply the provisions of the Act imposing upon the owner or an occupier of the factory obligation to grant annual leave with wages impose any unreasonable restriction.

Provisions made for the benefit of "deemed workers" cannot therefore be regarded as not reasonable within the meaning of Art 19 (1) (g) of the Constitution.

Inclusion of bidi manufactories registered as factories with the Chief Inspector of Factories in which bidis were rolled by worker must be deemed to be a rational basis for classification. The exclusion of owners of bidi establishments, not on the list of the Chief Inspector of Factories, is ex facie not due to any differentiation but on account of the felt necessity of a situation which caused great hardship to a large number of workers as a result of the decision of the Supreme Court in Shanker Balaji Waje's case, AIR 1962 S C 517, according to which bidi rollers were not 'employed' within the meaning of S. 2 (1) and could not claim the privileges previously accorded to them by Ss. 79 and 80 of the Act.

It is open to the State Government by a Notification to apply all or any of the provisions of the Act to any place wherein any manufacturing process is carried on and if such a Notification is issued, the place so declared is to be deemed a 'factory' under the Act, the owner to be deemed an 'occupier' and the person working therein a 'worker'. If by imposing liability to afford to workers strictly so called under the Act, there is no infringement of the fundamental right of the owner of the factory to carry on his business, a similar obligation in favour of deemed workers, who satisfy the requirements of S. 79, cannot be regarded as infringing that fundamental right. Therefore by imposing liability to afford to "deemed workers" annual leave with wages under S. 79 and S. 80 in the same manner and to the same extent as is afforded to workers strictly so called under S. 2 (1) of the Factories Act, no unreasonable restriction has been imposed upon the occupier or the owner of the factory. Madras G. O. No. 4036 dated 15-9-1956, declaring all establishments as factories where there are five or more workers working, issued under S. 85 (1) of the Factories Act, is not hit by Art. 14 of the Constitution. The fact that other similar establishments have escaped the notice of the Government does not by itself vitiate the Government Order where it is apparent that it did not intend to exclude them. ——Art. 14—Discrimination — Factories Act (1948), S. 85 (1)- Validity —Section not ex facie discriminatory —Notification under S. 85 (1)— No discrimination made in practice.

The language of S. 85 (1) of the Factories Act cannot be said to be ex facie discriminatory. There is no intentional and purposeful discrimination on the face of the Statute. However, though the Statute may be fair and impartial on its face, yet if it is applied and administered by the authority with an evil eye and unequal hand, there is a violation of the guarantee of equal protection given under Art. 14. All places wherein a manufacturing process of the nature specified in the schedule annexed to the notification issued under section 85 (1) is carried on with or without the aid of power, have been notified as the places to which the Act has been applied. It is therefore manifest that there is ex facie no intentional discrimination made, under the section nor is any discrimination actually made in practice. There is a class of cases where the statute is not ex facie discriminatory but it is applied by the administrative authority in a grossly discriminatory manner. In such a case a person aggrieved would be entitled to invoke the guarantee of equal protection of laws under Art 14.

Section 29 (2), Bihar Sugar Factories Control Act, is not on the face of it discriminatory and is constitutionally valid. If, therefore, there has been no discrimination made by the State Government and all the factories in the State have been notified for the purpose of imposing cess at a uniform rate, a sugar factory cannot invoke the guarantee of equal protection of laws under Art. 14 : A I R 1954 S C 139 : A I R 1955 S C 504 and A I R 1955 S C 191, Foll.

No two cases are like in nature and the industrial disputes which arise or are apprehended to arise in particular establishments or undertakings require to be treated having regard to the situation prevailing in the same. There cannot be any classification and the reference to one or the other of the authorities has necessarily got to be determined in the exercise of best discretion by the appropriate Government. Legislation regarding minimum wages.

——Art. 14 — Reasonable classification — Ss. 12 and 22 of Minimum Wages Act (1948) — Validity—Sections do not contravene Art. 14.

Section 25 provides that any contract or agreement, whether made before or after the commencement of the Act, whereby an employee either relinquishes or reduces his right to a minimum rate of wages or any privilege or concession accruing to him under the Act shall be null and void in so far as it purports to reduce the minimum rate of wages fixed under the Act. The fact that whereas the breach of S. 12 would expose the employer to penalties under S. 22, there are no such penalties provided against the employees in case they work on wages less than the minimum rate of wages, would not make Ss. 12 and 22 void on the ground of discrimination.

The legislature has provided for penalties in case of breach of S. 12 by employers only, because it is they who have to pay the minimum rates of wages fixed by Government. Therefore the classification that is made is based on an intelligible and a rational differentia and is intended to fulfil the object of the legislation which is to protect the employees from being exploited by the employers. ——Art. 14—Minimum Wages Act (1948), S. 5 — Notification fixing minimum wages in cinema industry issued by State Government– Challenge on ground of its being discriminatory or arbitrary — Challenge not upheld—Matters to be considered in fixing minimum wages in such industry.

It is well settled that when a legislative enactment is challenged as being discriminatory or arbitrary the challenger must prove that the classification is not founded upon any intelligible differentia having a relation to the object sought to be attained by the enactment. So although ostensibly it might appear that the employees engaged in the different classes of work in different localities may have been unequally treated in the process of fixation of minimum wages in cinema industry by way of a notification issued by the State Government under S. 5 of the Minimum Wages Act, 1948, that by itself will not amount to an arbitrary discrimination. Various factors play part in the matter of fixation of the minimum wages. Thus, in fixing the minimum wages for workers engaged in cinema industry different classes of workers employed in different localities in different kinds of cinema houses or in the same locality (air-conditioned houses and other houses in the same locality) as also the extent of the profits made by such employers out of the industry in which they are engaged, may have to be taken into consideration. AIR 1955 S C 191 (193), Rel. on.

An employer is bound to pay the minimum wage and he cannot plead his incapacity as a ground for shirking his obligation to pay the minimum wage and accordingly it is said that minimum wage has to be fixed irrespective of the capacity of the employer to pay and the question of such capacity is an irrelevant consideration. But the propositions laid down by the Supreme Court in various decisions cannot be construed as laying down an inflexible rule that conditions of the cinema industry or to be more specific the profits or income from the cinema industry cannot at all be taken into consideration in fixing the minimum rate of wages. (1965) 1 Lab L J 387: A I R 1964 Cal 519 (529, 531, 535) (Pt C) (Prs 30, 34, 53) (DB).

Equality before the law guaranteed by Art. 14 is an affirmation of the well-known fundamental principle that among equals the law should be equal and should be equally administered.

While Art. 14 forbids class legislation, it does not forbid reasonable classification for the purposes of legislation. A classification is reasonable when it is not an arbitrary selection and rests on difference pertinent to the subject in respect of which the classification is made. Courts have sustained differentiations where the difference might not be separately divorced from the purpose and circumstances in which any category was sought to be established by legislation. The article is a pledge of equality before the law and equal protection of the law, but it does not guarantee to all persons the benefit of the same laws and same remedy or identical procedure. Legislation regarding shops and establishments.

——Art. 14—Equality before law — U. P. Shops and Commercial Establishments Act (22 of 1947), S. 4.

Article 14 of the Constitution aims against the conferment of special privileges at law on account of birth, religion, caste or creed and enjoins equal subjection of all persons and classes of persons to the laws of the land without distinction of race, wealth, social status or political affiliations. Where it is contended that U. P. Shops and Commercial Establishments Act denies equality amongst halwais and restaurant keepers to a certain class inasmuch as it prescribes the observance of certain formalities by a class of halwais and restaurant keepers and subjects them to restrictions and penalties while exempting from its operation classes of persons mentioned in cls. (a) to (e) and in particular the halwais and restaurant keepers who carry on their trade with the aid of members of their own family without employing outside labour it cannot but be held that the inequalities complained of do not come within the constitutional inhibitions of Art. 14. ——Arts. 14 and 226 – Madras Shops and Establishments Act, S. 4 – Basis of classification—High Court if can extend Act to persons falling under S. 4 (1) (b).

For the purposes for which the Madras Shops and Establishments Act, makes provision it would be perfectly proper and reasonable to make a distinction between employees whose duties involve touring or travelling and employees whose duties do not; a clear line of demarcation between the two exists. Section 4 (1) of the Act can, therefore, be said to have adopted a reasonable basis of classification and hence, an appeal by an employee holding a post which involves travelling and who, therefore, comes within Cl. (b) of S. 4 (1) is not competent. Even if it can be said that the classification is not reasonable the petitioner would not be entitled to any relief unless the Act is extended to persons in his category. The High Court has no jurisdiction to do that in a petition under Art. 226 of Constitution. 72 Mad L W 379 : 1959 Lab L J 78 : (1959) 2 Mad L J 135 : 1959 Mad L J (Cr) 587.

——Art. 14—S. 7 (1) of Punjab Trade Employees Act —Validity — (Punjab Trade Employees Act (10 of 1940), Ss. 2A, 2B, 2C, 7).

Article 14 does not require that same law should be applicable to all persons or trades; they can be differently treated on the same rational grounds. There is a strong presumption in favour of the validity of legislative classification and it is for those who challenge it as unconstitutional to allege and prove beyond all doubt that the legislation arbitrarily discriminates between different persons similar in circumstances. Further, it is well established that the legislature is not bound, in order to support the constitutional validity of its Act, to extend to all cases which it might possibly reach. Section 2-C of the impugned Act (Punjab Trade Employees Act, 1940), makes it clear that the legislature realised that persons and establishments mentioned in Ss. 2A and 2-B could be governed by this section and laid down that the exemption granted to them could be removed by notification by the State Government. It is a matter of legislative policy whether the provisions of this Act should be extended to certain persons or commercial establishments or not. In any case the provisions of S. 7 are beneficial to all those to whom they apply and it is for those who have been exempted from its operation to object to the operation and not for a third person. Section 7 (1) of the Trade Employees Act, 1940, does not contravene Art. 14 of the Constitution. 58 Pun L R 528 : ILR (1957) Punj 155.

——Art. 14 — Debt Laws — U. P. Zamindars Debt Reduction Act (15 of 1953), S. 2 (f) — Not discriminatory — Art. 14 not violated.

The definition of 'debt' given in S. 2 (f) of the U. P. Zamindars Debt Reduction Act, is based on reasonable classfication and does not contravene Art. 14.

It cannot be disputed that the legislature has discriminated between debts due from ex-zamindars to private individuals and the debts due to different authorities like scheduled banks and Government or semi-Government authorities excepted from the definition. The loan advanced by the Court of wards on behalf of one ward to another ward excepted in category (vi) also does not stand on the same footing as a loan by an ordinary money lender to ordinary debtor. This discrimination is based on public policy. The classification is based on a differentia which distinguishes persons who have been excepted from those who have been left out of the group and such differentia has a reasonable relation to the object sought to be achieved by the statute. ——Art. 14 — Reasonable classification — Hyderabad Jagirdars Debt Settlement Act (12 of 1952) — Validity.

Under the impugned Act the differentiation between the Jagirdars, and their creditors and those of the rest of the public is a substantial one in so far as under the two earlier Regulations the estates conferring benefits on Jagirdars, etc., alone have been merged in the State lands, and consequently their financial stability alone has been impaired by such merger. The object of the Act being to afford some relief to the impoverished Jagirdars in lieu of their inability to meet existing liabilities the reduction of the debts as well as scaling them down to the present paying capacity of such persons have a just relation to the object of the enactment.

Exclusion of certain class of debts under S. 3 of the impugned Act also is not without substantial justification, for public demands do not stand in the same position as ordinary demands. Therefore Art. 14 has not been infringed. AIR 1954 S C 728, Foll. ILR (1955) Hyd 510 : AIR 1955 Hyd 194 (200) (Pt B) (Pr 24) (DB).

——Arts. 14, 19 (1)—Madras Money-Lenders Act (20 of 1957), Ss. 2, 4, 10, 14 - Act is valid.

The State Legislature has undoubted power under the Constitution to bring in and enact legislation, for the regulation and control of the business of money lending. 'Money lending and money lenders' is an item in the State List in the 7 Schedule. Legislation could be and is very often made for different classes of persons to achieve particular objects or to give effect to particular policies of the Government. It is inevitable that there should be classification in that regard, the only condition being that such classification should be bona fide and founded upon a reasonable basis having regard to the objects in view. The persons who carry on the business of money lending as a profession come under a distinct class. The object of the legislation in question is to remedy the evils which existed in the transactions entered into by the money lenders with their borrowers. Singling out the money lenders and money lending for a special legislation having regard to the evil that was sought to be put an end to and to the object which the Legislature had in view cannot at all be said to be arbitrary. It has on the other hand, a rational relationship to the objects sought to be achieved. There is nothing in S. 2 (6) of the Act to show that there has been a discrimination in the application of the Act itself. The evil of the money lenders' exploitation was with reference to lower middle class people, particularly, the salaried servants, wage earners. The distinction made under S. 2 (6) in the cases specified therein and other cases of advances is, therefore reasonable. The statutory obligation to take out a licence viewed in the background of the existing conditions in the business, is a reasonable one.

Section 10 is a reasonable provision inserted with a view to check the evasion of the Act. It cannot be regarded in any sense as an undue restriction on the right to carry on the business. Ordinarily a power to grant licence should also include in itself the power to cancel it under certain conditions. Section 14 empowers the licensing authority to cancel the licence only in certain defined classes of cases and having regard to the object of the enactment it cannot be said to be in any way unreasonable. Neither the Act nor any of its provisions can be said to be unreasonable restrictions upon the money lender or of the business of money lending. ——Arts. 14 and 13—Discrimination—Madras Pawnbrokers Act (23 of 1943)—Validity of.

Prima facie, the Madras Pawn-brokers Act is a discriminatory piece of legislation ; but if the classification be reasonable, the apparent discrimination will not be unconstitutional and the enactment will fall outside the ban imposed by Art. 14. Under S. 21-A of the Act the State Government has been invested with a power to exempt any company incorporated under the Companies Act, 1913, before 1st November 1944. This cannot by itself invalidate the Act as a whole. The Act itself does not exempt loans advanced by all the companies incorporated under the Companies Act. The power of exemption in such cases is granted to the Government by S. 21-A of the Act. A power of exemption by itself may not amount to unconstitutional discrimination. Neither the statutory exemptions for which S. 2 (5) of the Act provided nor the statutory power to grant exemptions in favour of companies incorporated under the Companies Act vested in the State Government by S. 21-A amount to an unconstitutional discrimination against the rest of the class of persons engaged in the business of pawnbrokers. The act of fixing a grade designation mark in a manner calculated to cause a person to believe that the goods contained in the receptacle are of a nature or quality different from the real nature or quality thereof, will constitute an offence under Ss. 488/487, Penal Code and thus become punishable with imprisonment extending to 3 years or with fine or with both and will in many cases also constitute an offence under S. 4 of the Agricultural Produce (Grading and Marking) Act, 1937. But the fact that the same act is thus punishable under two different statutes, does not result in any contravention of the provisions of Art. 14 of the Constitution.

The position in law is that every person committing the act is liable to punishment under both the statutes. There is, therefore, no discrimination. There is, therefore, no scope for thinking that there is any discrimination in law, when the same acts constitute offences under two statutes. Section 488, I. P. 35. Laws concerning evacuees and displaced persons.

Cases under Administration of Evacuee Property Act.

● ——Art. 14 — Evacuee Law— Discrimination in— Administration of Evacuee Property Act (1950), S. 22 (b) (as it was before 1953)— Intending evacuee —Property transferred by—Transfer between 14-8-1947 to 18-10-49 and after 18-10-1949 — Difference in benefits available to such transferors under Administration of Evacuee Property Act, 1950 — Difference based on classification — S. 22 (b) does not contravene Art. 14.

Section 2 (d) (iv) of the Administration of Evacuee Proprerty Act, 1950, as it stood after its amendment by Act (11 of 1953), shows which person is an evacuee so that any property of such a person is evacuee property within the meaning of the Act. When in respect of property of such a person an order has been made under S. 7 of the Act declaring it to be evacuee property the evacuee or his heir will be entitled to make an application for restoration of the property under S. 16 of the Act. Under S. 13 of the Displaced Persons (Compensation and Rehabilitation) Act, 1954, when any property of an evacuee has been acquired under S. 12 there shall be paid to an evacuee compensation in respect of his property in accordance with such principles and in such manner as may be agreed upon between the Governments of India and Pakistan. However, a person, who after the 14th day of August 1947, and before the 18th day of October, 1949, transferred his assets or any portion thereof to Pakistan would be an 'intending evacuee' within the meaning of S. 2 (e) (i) of the Act and once a declaration had been made under S. 19 that he was an intending evacuee his property would be liable to be declared evacuee propecty under S. 22 (b). He would not get the benefit of S. 16 of the Administration of Evacuee Property Act, 1950 or of S. 13 of the Displaced Persons (Compensation and Rehabilitation) Act, 1954.

But the denial of benefits under S. 16 of the 1950 Act and S. 13 of the 1954 Act does not amount to a denial of equal protection of the laws within Art. 14 of the Constitution. Such persons who had transferred assets between the 14th August 1947, and the 18th October 1949, may reasonably have been considered by the Legislature to form a class distinct in respect of the application of the law from those who transferred assets after the 18th October 1949. Thus the two groups of persons are not similarly circumstanced and so the denial of equal benefits to the two groups is not an infringement of the guarantee of equal protection of the laws.

What is characterised as discrimination between an evacuee and an intending evacuee is the consequence of the Legislature's omission to extend to the intending evacuee the benefits of S. 16 of the 1950 Act and S. 13 of the 1954 Act and not of the provisions under S. 22 (b).

Section 22 (b) of the Administration of Evacuee Property Act, therefore does not contravene Art. 14 of the Constitution Dr. Mohammad Saheb Mahboob Medico v. Deputy Custodian-General, (1962) 2 S C R 371 : (1963) 1 S C J 563 : AIR 1961 S C 1657 (1659, 1660, 1661) (Pt A) (Prs 5, 6, 8, 9, 10).

● ——Art. 14—Equality before the Law—Administration of Evacuee Property Act (1950)—Validity.

The expression 'equality before the law' does not imply that the same laws should apply to all persons in the same State. It does not refuse to take note of differentiations in economic and social functions, nor of the need for special types of quasi judicial tribunals due to the growing tendency towards the enlargement of State intervention in the economic and social life of the country. The Administration of Evacuee Property Act has laid down a special procedure and constituted special Courts for declaring any property as evacuee property and that that procedure is of a summary nature is not sufficient to justify the conclusion that there has been any violence of the letter and spirit of Art. 14. Asiatic Engineering Co. v. Achhru Ram, 1951 R D (HC) 241 : 1951 All L J 576 : A I R 1951 All 746 (770) (Pt I) (Prs 69, 70) (FB).

● ——Art. 14 —Equality before law — Equal protection of laws — Meaning of — Administration of Evacuee Property Act —If violates Art. 14.

The guarantee of equal protection is not to be understood as requiring that every person in the land shall possess precisely the same rights and privileges as every other person. The classification must be based upon reasonable grounds, it cannot be a mere arbitrary selection. All persons should possess the same privileges and be subject to the same liabilities. Asiatic Engineering Co. v. Achhru Ram, 1951 A'L J 576 : A I R 1951 All 746 (771, 772) (Pt J) (Pr 78) (FB).

● ——Art. 14 —Administration of Evacuee Property Act, (1950)—Validity.

The words 'within the territory of India' in Art. 14 only mean that the equality clause applies to all India inclusive of the Union and the States. India is a vast sub-continent and conditions differ in various parts of the country and one uniform rule may not suit all territories comprised within it. The Administration of Evacuee Property Act cannot be held to infringe Art. 14 on the ground that it applies to certain States and not to others, Asiatic Engineering Co. v. Achhru Ram. 1951 R D (H C) 241 : 1951 All L J 576 : AIR 1951 All 746 (771) (Pt K) (Pr 78) (FB).

● ——Art. 14 — Administration of Evacuee Property Act (1950), S. 2 (d)—Validity.

There is nothing unreasonable in the definition of evacuee given in S. 2 (d) of the Administration of Evacuee Property Act (1950) and the Act cannot be held to be invalid on the ground that the evacuees cannot be treated as a class and that being an evacuee cannot be the basis for any reasonable classification. Asiatic Engineering Co. v. Achhru Ram, 1951 R D (HC) 241 : 1951 All L J 576 : AIR 1951 All 746 (772) (Pt L) (Prs 80, 81) (FB).

● ——Art. 14 —Administration of Evacuee Property Act (1950), Ss. 2 (f), 10—Validity.

Undoubtedly at first sight, a provision which amounts to this that on account of a co-sharer being declared an evacuee, the property of other co-sharers will also become evacuee property and subject to the control of the Custodian seems to be harsh and opposed to principles of natural justice; But on account of the Court's unawareness of the various reasons which may have actuated the legislature in coming to the conclusion that provisions of this drastic nature were needed for the purpose of safeguarding not only evacuee property but the interest of displaced persons in this country and of the country itself the Court would not be justified in declaring this part of the Act as ultra vires of the Constitution on this ground. 6 Cranch 87 and 47 Law Ed. ——Art. 14—Test of infringement of:— (Administration of Evacuee Property Act (1950)).

The test generally applied to ascertain whether any particular enactment is violative of Art. 14, is to see whether it is based on some rational classification. The rational classification denotes three things; a reasonable differentia between the persons governed by the impugned Act and those not covered, a definite objective for enacting the law and a nexus between the two that should be just and reasonable, A I R 1952 S C 75, Rel. on; AIR 1952 S C 123 and AIR 1952 S C 235, Ref.

Administration of Evacuee Property Act (1950) fulfils all these tests. The territorial classification also has been recognised as a rational classification both in this country and United States and what is good ground of classification cannot render discrimination thereby brought in, as violative of the guarantee of equal protection. The discrimination did not therefore violate the guarantee of the actual protection of laws given by Art. 14. I L R (1953) Hyd 147 : A I R 1953 Hyd 157 (159) (Pt B) (Prs 4, 5, 6, 7) (DB).

● ——Art. 14—J. and K. State Evacuees' (Administration of Property) Act (2006), S. 10 (1)—Validity.

Since there is no restriction on cancellation of allotment under S. 10 (1) the provisions of Art. 14 of the Constitution of India, as applied to the State of Jammu and Kashmir which provides for equality before law and equal protection of laws are not violated. ——Art. 14 — Administration of Evacuee Property Ordinance (1949) —Validity.

Article 14 applies to aliens also but there can be a certain amount of discrimination so far as aliens are concerned which would be justified under the police power of the State. Persons who migrate to Pakistan after 1-3-1947 and have to be treated as non-resident aliens cannot complain if, in the interest of the State, provision is made for taking into custody the property which they have left in India and for its administration under the Administration of Evacuee Property Ordinance (1949). These provisions are also intended to safeguard the right and interests of the evacuees in cases where they had left India particularly abandoning their properties. There is no infringement of Art. 14 in such a case. 263 U S 197, Referred. 1951 Mad W N 477 : 1951-2 Mad L J 1 : AIR 1951 Mad 930 (932, 933) (Pt B) (Pr 13) (DB).

——Art. 14—Scope—Validity of S. 12, Administration of Evacuee Property Act.

Section 12 of the Administration of Evacuee Property Act must be read along with R. 14 of the Rules made by the Central Government under the powers conferred upon it by S. 56 of the Act. The discretion conferred upon the Custodian is controlled and circumscribed by safeguards. There is no violation of the guarantee of equal protection of the laws under Art. 14. The procedure prescribed by R. 14 (4) is also reasonable.

It is open to the aggrieved party to apply in revision to the Custodian under S. 26 or to the Custodian General under S. 27 against any arbitrary order made by the Assistant Custodian under S. 12 of the Act, either varying or cancelling a lease or allotment.

Keeping in view the object and the scheme of Act 31 of 1950, it is obvious that there is a rational basis for the differential treatment of the tenancies under the Custodian. This does not amount to a violation of the guarantee of equal protection under Art. 14 of the Constitution and hence S. 12 of the Administration of Evacuee Properties Act cannot be held to be void. 1957 B L J R 520 : ILR 36 Pat 606 : AIR 1958 Pat 43 (47, 48) (Pt C) (Prs 6, 7) (DB).

——Art. 14 — Equal protection of laws—S. 12 of Displaced Persons (Compensation and Rehabilitation) Act (1954) if violates Art. 14.

The Constitution does not contemplate equality of all laws or application of laws equally to every person. By a classification based on a rational principle between persons or objects, the equal protection clause is not violated. The evacuee property notified under S. 12 (1) of the Act vests in the Central Government free from all encumbrances, and the State by issuing the notification has not deprived the person entitled to the benefit of the encumbrance, of equality of law or equal protection of the laws. 59 Bom L R 309 : ILR (1957) Bom 668 : AIR 1957 Bom 119 (130) (Pt K) (Pr 25) (DB).

Cases under Evacuee Interest (Separation) Act.

——Art. 14 – Evaquee Interest (Separation) Act (1951), S. 9—S. 9 of Act does not violate Art. 14 of Constitution.

The Evacuee Interest (Separation) Act does not create any distinction among members of the group of evacuee mortgagors or discrimination among members of the group of non-evacuee mortgagees. Read as a whole, S. 9 exhibits the relation of the object of the Act with the classification made. Classification of evacuee mortgagors or non-evacuee mortgagees into distinct group, has, regard being had to object of the Legislature, to be held to have a reasonable basis. Thus, S. 9 of the Act does not violate the fundamental right of equality recognised and guaranteed by Art. 14 of the Constitution. AIR 1954 Punj 261, Rel. on, AIR 1955 Pepsu 148 (152) (Pt D) (Pr 11) (DB).

——Art. 14 — Evacuee Interest (Separation) Act (1951), S. 9—Validity.

A Legislature has full power to classify the subjects of legislation and to make laws applicable to persons within a particular class provided the classification is reasonable as based upon some natural principles of public policy, rests upon substantial differences among persons who are included in the class and those who are excluded therefrom and the differences have a rational relation to the object sought to be achieved by the legislation This power of classification has not been taken away by the Constitution of India. The Act of 1951 declares that certain mortgages of the property belonging to Muslims who have migrated to Pakistan shall be extinguished in certain circumstances. Now the mortgagees of property of Muslim evacuees are group of persons who constitute a well defined class for purposes of legislation. The Act of 1951 makes no discrimination between one person and another in the group and each one of them is treated alike under similar circumstances and conditions. The classification is neither capricious nor arbitrary; it is based on the fact that the situation and circumstances of persons who are mortgagees of evacuee property are different from the situation and circumstances of persons who are mortgagees of other property; and there is a clear and distinct connection between the classification and the object of the Act and provisions of Art. 14 have not been contravened. Cases under other Acts.

——Art. 14 — Discrimination—Displaced Persons (Claims) Supplementary Act (1954) — Rules framed under R. 5—Validity—Displaced Persons (Compensation and Rehabilitation) Act (1954)—Rules framed under, R. 65 Validity.

Rule 5 of the Rules framed under the Displaced Persons (Claims) Supplementary Act, 1954 (12 of 1954) and Rule 65 of the Rules made under the Displaced Persons (Compensation and Rehabilitation) Act, 1954 (44 of 1954) cannot be attacked on the ground of want of intelligible differentia. This classification has a reasonable relation to the object of rehabilitation, for it cannot be denied that the categories require separate treatments for the purpose of resettlement on new lands and for the payment of compensation. The reasonableness of the classification must be judged after taking the surrounding circumstances and the conditions then prevailing into consideration. The basis of the classification must be judged by the fact that compensation is given in every case. Rules 57 and 97A framed under Act 44 of 1954 afford a reasonable justification for the classification.

Under the rules every displaced person who has settled in a rural area is allotted a house in addition to land; if no house is available in the same village the allottee is given a site and a building grant. Where his claim for a house is rejected he is given a rehabilitation grant. But under the impugned rules separate compensation is given for a rural house of value above a prescribed limit. It will therefore, be seen that the classification is not arbitrary but is based on equitable considerations. A distinction between a rural house which is part of a holding and one which is not a part of a holding but an independent unit is made and different principles of rehabilitation are applied to meet different situations. The hardship caused is diluted by providing to the claimant falling on the wrong side of the line a rural house or a rehabilitation grant. It cannot be said therefore, that the rules suffer from any infirmity on the ground of discrimination. Makhan Lal Malhotra v. Union of India, (1961) 2 S C R 120 : (1963) 1 S C J 783 : A I R 1961 S C 392 (397) (Prs 16, 17).

Where the selection to the Public Services was to be made by the State Public Service Commission by holding a viva voce test of the candidates, selection of those who had obtained less number of marks in preference to those who had obtained greater number of marks, other things being equal cannot be sustained. It is also wrong to allow as a matter of compromise, selection of those candidates who had not appeared for viva-voce test at all and of those candidates when there was nothing to compare them with those who had failed in the earlier selection. In such a case the Court should be slow to accept compromise unless it is made clear that what is being done does not prejudice anybody else. Channabasavaih v. ● ——Art. 14 — Government servants — Employees doing same work constituted into two services with different scales of pay or different conditions of service—Art. 14 not violated.

It cannot be contended that the State cannot constitute two services consisting of employees doing the same work but with different scales of pay or subject to different conditions of service. Constitution of such services is not violative of Art. 14. The proposition that Art. 14 requires that equal work must receive equal pay or that if there is equality in pay and work there have to be equal conditions of service is untenable. AIR 1962 S C 1139, Rel on.

The Government which is carrying on the administration has necessarily to have a choice in the constitution of the services to man the administration and the limitations imposed by the Constitution are not such as to preclude the creation of such services. Besides, there might, for instance, be a temporary recruitment to meet an exigency or an emergency which is not expected to last for any appreciable period of time. To deny to the Government the power to recruit temporary staff drawing the same pay and doing the same work as the permanent incumbents within the cadre strength but governed by different rules and conditions of service, it might be including promotions, would be to impose restraints on the manner of administration which was not intended by the Constitution. So long as the case is considered and the authorities act in an honest manner, the decision taken by them cannot be challenged by means of a writ petition on the ground that they were incorrect. Where, therefore, it was not the allegation of the petitioner that his case was not considered by the selecting authority nor was it his case that the higher authorities acted in a mala fide fashion the authorities must be held to have fully complied with R 17 and the order could not be held to have been hit by Arts. 16 and 14. All the Railway servants subject to the Railway Establishment Code have been grouped together. It is not a case where the provisions of the rules are directed against one individual person or thing or to several individual persons or things and there is no reasonable basis of classification. The rules apply to all railway servants of his class. It cannot also be said that Art. 16 of the Constitution of India is infringed, because neither R. 143 nor R. 148 is discriminatory. AIR 1959 All 643 (654) (Pt H) (Pr 12).

With the repeal of S. 243 of the Government of India Act, 1935. the provisions of Art. 311 of the Constitution of India which is a substitute for S. 240 of the Government of India Act, 1935, are made applicable to the case of members of the subordinate police force.

The opening words of S. 7 of the Police Act clearly indicate that the rules that will be applicable to the case of the police personnel are the rules framed under the Police Act. Proviso 1 to R. 3 of the Civil Services Rules is not applicable to the case of a head-constable because the provisions of the Police Act and the U. P. Police Regulations made under S. 7 thereof fully cover the question of his dismissal. The rules mentioned in Ch. 31 of the Police Regulations are not therefore discriminatory. 1959 All L J 96 : (1959) 1 Lab L J 464 : AIR 1959 All 569 (571, 572) (Pr 6).

——Art. 14—Applications for post of District Munsiffs in Andhra State — Notification laying down conditions—Interpretation of — Held, no discrimination within Art. 14.

The Andhra Public Service Commission by a notification invited applications for the post of District Munsifs in the Andhra State Judicial Service to be filled by direct recruitment. According to para 5 of the notification, an applicant was required to satisfy the commission that at the time when he applied he was practising as an Advocate of the High Court; and he had been actually practising in Courts of Civil or Criminal jurisdiction in India for a period of not less than three years.

Held, that by the words "the High Court" the Commission meant only the Andhra High Court; and that the qualification that the candidate should have practised as an Advocate of the Andhra High Court was not inherently unreasonable as there was a nexus between it and the object intended to be achieved and was, therefore not hit by Art. 14. ——Art. 14 — Applicability — Ex-Burma Railway employees — Different gradations in pay and promotion—Discrimination—If violation of Art. 14.

The contention that since some of the ex-Burma Railway employees got better grades and pay than the petitioner himself, it was a case of discrimination which came under Art. 14, has not much force because the fixation of pay or promotion might depend on so many facts and circumstances. Even if there be any discrimination it will not come under Art. 14 as it is a matter for the Department about which the High Court would express no opinion. AIR 1957 Assam 108 (110, 111) (Pt C) (Pr 7) (DB).

——Art. 14—Applicability—Classification.

It cannot be said that there is illegal discrimination simply because one individual or a class of individuals were left out when some others were taken away from the Sylhet District which had ceased to form part of Assam and were brought to Assam and absorbed in services, provided the classification was not arbitrary and it rested upon some real and substantial distinction bearing a reasonable and just relation to the things in respect of which the classification was made.

Where the petitioner's case was that officers of the Assam origin were taken back to Assam Province when it was newly constituted as a result of the referendum, to the exclusion of officers of Sylhet or Bengal origin and this was a Government policy as alleged by the petitioner, this was surely for the best interest of the State and in support of the public policy and there is nothing to suggest that it was arbitrary and unreasonable. The action of the Government even if true, cannot be said to be so discriminatory as to be hit by Art. 14. Hiranmoy v. State of Assam, AIR 1954 Assam 224 (254) (Pt R) (Pr 65) (FB).

——Art. 14—Central Civil Services (Conduct) Rules (1955), R. 4 (a)—Validity — Persons who are excluded from the application of the Rule are a well defined class — R. 4 (a) cannot be held to be discriminatory.

Rule 4 (a), as originally engrafted in the Conduct Rules, applies to all servants of the Government but, by subsequent amendment effected in 1959, a second proviso was added to sub-rule (1) of R. 1 which exempted certain categories of employees of the Government. By this amendment, certain categories of Government employees were not subjected to the prohibition in R. 4 (a) of the Conduct Rules which prohibits a Government servant from going on strike. Government servants who are taken out of the application of R. 4 (a), are employees in establishments which are of the nature of industrial establishments. They are governed by other industrial laws and there is machinery available to the Government for enforcing discipline and rules of conduct so far as resort to strike in respect of them is concerned. Similarly persons belonging to the railway establishment are a well defined class who are governed by its own rules. 65 Bom L R 65 : I L R (1962) Bom 664 : 1963 Mah L J 205 : (1963) 1 Lab L J 428 : AIR 1963 Bom 121 (136, 137) (Pt G) (Prs 55, 57) (DB).

——Art. 14—Categorisation Order, dated 30-12-1957 made under S. 11 (2), Life Insurance Corporation Act (1956), is not ultra vires on the ground of discrimination. ——Arts. 14, 226, 310 (1) and 311 — Discrimination — Executive order of Government—Legality.

The paramount law as between the Government and their servants is, as enunciated by Art. 310 (1) of the Constitution that the latter hold their office during the pleasure of the former subject only to the two conditions, relating to disciplinary action embodied in Art. 311 thereof. Therefore so far as regulations or orders framed by the Government and governing the benefits or privileges of its servants, are concerned, no legal right capable of vindication in the Municipal Courts arises in favour of the servants. The Madras Civil Services (Disciplinary Proceedings Tribunal) Rules 1955 in excluding cases relating to Government Servants drawing a salary of less than Rs. 200 and cases arising against the Government servants in the subordinate ranks of the police forces of the rank of Sub-Inspectors and below cannot be said to offend the provisions of Art. 14 of the Constitution. The rules are uniformly made applicable to all persons similarly situated without discrimination. The classification on pay and rank is based on a real difference and cannot be said to be arbitrary so as to offend the provisions of Art. 14 of the Constitution. Class legislation is permissible provided the classification bears a just and reasonable relation to the object and purpose of such a legistation. It cannot be stated that a classification based on administrative convenience prescribing different procedure for persons drawing different pay and occupying different ranks, offends Art. 14 of the Constitution. 77 Mad L W 586 : I L R (1964) 2 Mad 526 : AIR 1965 Mad 103 (106, 107) (Pt D) (Pr 7) (DB).

——Art. 14 — Equality before law — Meaning of — Reasonable classification — Applicability — Pepsu Civil Services (Safeguarding of National Security) Rules (1954)—Rules if hit by Article.

Discrimination of State employees engaged in subversive activities involving danger to national security as a special class, and dealing with them separately cannot be regarded as an unreasonable classification. Rules of procedure laid down by law do come within Art. 14 quite as much as a substantive law and it is, therefore, necessary that all litigants, who are similarly situated, are able to avail themselves of the same procedural rights for relief and for defence without discrimination. At the same time, the principle of reasonable classification is equally applicable to procedural as well as to substantive law, and it is competent to the State to make different provisions as to procedure, to suit different types of cases. Hence, to prescribe a special procedure for dealing with acts and conduct unlawful in themselves, and of a kind specially dangerous to national security, would be defensible on the principle of reasonable classification. The Security Rules are therefore not hit by the inhibition laid down in Art. 14: (Meaning of 'Equality before law' explained) ILR (1956) Patiala 246 : AIR 1956 Pepsu 19 (23, 24) (Pt B) (Prs 12, 13, 16).

——Art. 14 — Indian Institute of Technology (Kharagpur) Act (1956), S. 5—Validity—If contravenes Art. 14.

The classification that has been made in S. 5 is founded on a rational basis. Section 5 applies to all the permanent employees of the Institute. Those employees who were working in the Institute could form a class by themselves. There exists a nexus between the basis of classification and the object of the Act; the Act was intended to provide for the incorporation of the Institute and matters connected therewith. The services of all the Government servants who were permanently employed there had to be put at the disposal of the Institute apparently because of their special experience and training for work in the Institute and because they were working there. ——Art. 14—Petitioner fixed up as statistical officer in substantive capacity in service of Rajasthan State and not a statistician in Civil Supplies department — Hence he could not have salary of Deputy Commissioner in Civil Supplies department — Postponement of revision of pay scales on account of fact that Government wanted to introduce Rajasthan Statistical Service — Held there was basis for classifying statistical officers from other Government servants —Petitioner could not be held to be discriminated.

Held (i) that in view of various Government Orders the petitioner was fixed up as a statistical Officer in a substantive capacity in the service of the Rajasthan State. The posting is a matter different from fixation of substantive rank and an officer who may be substantive on one post may be actually posted on another post in a different department but that does not mean that he ceases to be substantive on the post to which he is appointed.

(ii) According to Government Order dated 12.9.1949, the existing incumbents were to have the status of their substantive posts with the designations of the Civil Supplies Department attached to them. It had further been clearly provided that the salaries of the staff would be as at present. Hence the petitioner could not be held entitled to the pay of a Deputy Commissioner, or for that matter, that of the District Collector while he remained in that department as a statistician. Right to salary is based either on a contract or some rules of service which have the force of law. The petitioner was not entitled to the salary of Rs. 500-25-700 with special pay of Rs. 100/- either by contract or by virtue of any statutory rule. As the petitioner was substantively a Statistical Officer and not a Statistician in the Civil Supplies Department, he could not carry the salary of a Deputy Commissioner in the Civil Supplies Department with him, while he was working in other departments. Under the Rajasthan Service Rules the Government may fix the pay of an officiating Government Servant at an amount less than that admissible under these rules. Thus even where a higher officiating salary is admissible the Government can fix a lower rate of salary.

(iii) In the schedule of the Rajasthan Civil Services (Rationalisation of Pay Scales) Rules, it was noted against the posts of Bureau of Statistics that the revision of pay scales was postponed pending organisation of a Statistical Service by Government. A reason was thus given for postponing the revision of pay scales for statisticians and statistical officers because at that time the Government had no clear picture for the proposed service. A basis for classifying statistical officers or statisticians from other Government servants had thus been clearly indicated. In organising Statistical Service which was a new service in the State of Rajasthan, if the Government had taken its own time, it could not be said that the Government did not have a good reason for taking some time in evolving such a service. No differential treatment had been accorded between an officer and officer of the same Statistical Department and the petitioner was not singled out. AIR 1958 S C 538. ——Arts. 14, 310, 311 — Reasonable classification — Civil servants — Direct recruits and promoted candidates—Medical fitness—Difference in instructions relating to—Validity.

From the fact that the instructions relating to the medical examination of candidates to be employed by direct recruitment are different from those applicable to the examination of candidates who are promoted from the police service it cannot be said that the instructions relating to the direct recruits suffer from any defect under the Article. There is a reasonable ground for the classification as for instance that the candidates who are promoted may deserve their promotion by their meritorious services although they do not satisfy the conditions of candidates for direct recruitment in respect of age or physical fitness. ILR (1958) 8 Raj 37 : AIR 1958 Raj 242 (245) (Pt A) (Pr 10) (DB).

——Art. 14 — 'Discrimination' — Different records required for proof of age for different persons — If discriminatory.

In the case of some of the officers, Government only allowed the entry regarding age in the service book to be corrected in accordance with the entry in the school or college records after the expiry of the time prescribed by Government for making applications for the purpose. In the case of some officers Government did accept as proof of age documents other than school or college records.

Held, that this did not amount to violation of Art. 14 of the Constitution. If Government showed any discrimination in the matter of applying the rule relating to proof of age of officers it was only a discrimination shown in the application of the rule. ILR (1956) Trav-Co 879 : 1956 Ker L T 906 : A I R 1957 Trav-Co 124 (131) (Pt C) (Pr 19) (DB).

See Ibid, Art. 311 (2). AIR 1965 S C 1103.

● ——Art. 14—Charges against Government servant constituting criminal offences — Government instituting departmental enquiry instead of criminal prosecution — Article 14 not infringed.

Per Raghubar Dayal and Mudholkar, JJ.—It cannot be contended that as charges framed against the Government servant, if true, would constitute criminal offences, criminal prosecution should have been launched against him in place of the departmental proceedings. It is for the Government to decide what action should be taken against the Government servant for certain misconduct. Such a discretion in the Government does not mean that the provision for the departmental enquiry on such charges of misconduct is in violation of the provisions of Art. 14. The service rules apply equally to all the members of the service, i. e., to all persons similarly placed and are not therefore discriminatory. The Government has the discretion in every case, considering the nature of the alleged misconduct and other circumstances, whether a criminal prosecution should be launched or not. The Government is also free to conduct departmental proceedings after the close of the criminal proceedings, if instituted. There is, therefore, nothing illegal in the Government instituting the departmental proceedings against the Government servant. S. Partap Singh v. State of Punjab, (1965) 1 S C A 259 : A I R 1964 S C 72 (100) (Pt S) (Pr 71).

● ——Art. 14—Public Servants (Inquiries) Act (1850), S. 2 — All India Services (Discipline and Appeal) Rules (1955), R. 5 (4), (7) and (9) — Procedure and provisions of Public Servants (Inquiries) Act are not more drastic and less advantageous than those of the 1955, Rules — Public Servants (Inquiries) Act (1850), does not violate Art. 14.

Where the Government is invested with authority to direct an enquiry in one of two alternative modes and one of the modes is more drastic and less advantageous than the other, an order directing an enquiry under the more drastic and less advantageous mode will amount to an infringement of Art. 14 of the Constitution. But there is no basis for an attack on the validity of the Public Servants (Inquiries) Act, 1850 on the ground that it is discriminatory inasmuch as the procedure and provisions of the inquiries Act are more drastic and less advantageous than those of the All India Services (Discipline and Appeal) Rules, 1955. The procedure of enquiry under the All India Services (Discipline and Appeal) Rules, 1955 is practically the same as under R. 55 of the Classification Rules, the enquiry under which does not substantially differ from the enquiry under the Public Servants (Inquiries) Act, 1850. The contention that the Public Servants (Inquiries) Act, 1850 violates Art. 14 of the Constitution cannot, therefore, be accepted. AIR 1960 S C 493, Rel. on., R. P. Kapur v. S. Pratap Singh Kairon, 1963 Cur L J 105 : 1964 S C D 1 : (1964) 1 S C A 313 : 1964 (1) Cr L J 224 (229, 230) (Pt D) (Prs 16, 21) (SC).

● ——Arts. 14 and 311—Government servant — Dismissal of—Enquiry for misdemeanour — Two sets of rules under which enquiry could be ordered — Disciplinary Proceedings (Administrative Tribunal) Rules (1951) and Bihar and Orissa Subordinate Services Discipline and Appeal Rules (1935)—Enquiry held under Disciplinary Proceedings (Administrative Tribunal) Rules (1951)—Those rules more drastic than Bihar and Orissa Subordinate Services Discipline and Appeal Rules (1935) — Case of discrimination arises.

Article 14 of the Constitution enjoins the State not to deprive any person of equality before the law. If against two public servants similarly circumstanced, enquiries may be directed according to procedure substantially different at the discretion of the Executive authority, exercise whereof is not governed by any principles having any rational relation to the purpose to be achieved by the enquiry, the order selecting a prejudicial procedure, out of the two open for selection, is hit by Art. 14 of the Constitution. If the two sets of rules are in operation at the material time when the enquiry is directed against non-gazetted public servant and by order of the Governor, the enquiry is directed under the Tribunal Rules which are 'more drastic' and prejudicial to the interest of the said servant, a clear case of discrimination arises and the order directing enquiry against the servant and the subsequent proceedings are liable to be struck down as infringing Art. 14 of the Constitution. ● ——Arts. 14, 311—Police services—Enquiry against police officer commenced before the Constitution but completed after the Constitution— Order of dismissal passed against police officer— Reasonable opportunity given to show cause against punishment — No discriminatory treatment. ● ——Art. 14—Scope — U. P. Police Regulations and U. P. Disciplinary Proceedings (Administrative Tribunal) Rules, 1947—Validity — Equality clause was not broken.

Per Majority.—The U. P. Disciplinary Proceedings (Administrative Tribunal) Rules, 1947 and the U. P. Police Regulations in so far as they deal with enquiries against police officers are promulgated under S. 7 of the Police Act, and neither the Tribunal Rules nor the Police Regulations provide an appeal against an order of dismissal or reduction in rank which the Governor may pass. The fact that an order made by a police authority in an enquiry under U. P. Police Regulations is made appealable whereas the order passed by the Governor in an enquiry under U. P. Disciplinary Proceedings (Administrative Tribunal) Rules, 1947 is not made appealable is not a ground on which the validity of the Tribunal Rules can be challenged. In either case, the final order rests with the Governor who has to decide the matter himself. Equal protection of the laws does not postulate equal treatment of all persons without distinction; it merely guarantees the application of the same laws alike and without discrimination to all persons similarly situated.

Per Das Gupta, J. (Contra.) — The right of appeal is not a right without substance. The absence of the right of appeal under R. 10 of the Tribunal Rules, while a right of appeal is given to a police officer under the Police Regulations results in unequal treatment in a substantial matter, as between a police officer proceeded against under the Tribunal Rules and an officer who is proceeded against under the Police Regulations procedure. The petitioner who was a non-gazetted Tahsildar was charged with having accepted illegal gratification and an enquiry was instituted before the Board of Revenue. Consequent on a Government notification declaring the posts of Tahsildar to be gazetted with effect from a date prior to the date of enquiry, the Government withdrew the enquiry and made a reference under R. 4 (2) of the Andhra Civil Services (Disciplinary Proceedings Tribunal) Rules, 1953.

Held, that (i) there was nothing in the rules, which applied equally to gazetted and non-gazetted officers, which could be said to be violative of Art. 14. R. 4 (2) did not offend Art. 14 of the Constitution. (ii) that the choice of the Government from the specified forums of enquiry could not be impugned; the reference could not be said to be violative because the decision at an enquiry by a certain body was not subject to appeal. ——Art. 14—Referring case to Disciplinary Proceedings Tribunal instead of Criminal Court — When hostile discrimination.

Where the Government was given a discretion either to refer the case of a civil servant (who was charged with criminal misappropriation) to the Disciplinary Proceedings Tribunal or to a Criminal Court, referring the case to the Disciplinary Tribunal cannot be challenged on the ground of discrimination. Abuse of the power given by law sometimes occurs but the validity of the law cannot be contested because of such apprehension. The aggrieved party has to establish that there has been a palpable abuse of power by the executive and that there has been a hostile discrimination. Unless these are established, it cannot be said that there was a discrimination as such. (1959) 2 Lab L J 261 (Andh Pra).

——Art. 14—Reasonable classification—Madras Civil Services (Disciplinary Proceedings Tribunal) Rules (1948), R. 5 (b)—Validity.

Rule 5 (b) of the Madras Civil Services (Disciplinary Proceedings Tribunal) Rules, 1948, is not void as it does not offend Art. 14 of the Constitution of India. The object of the rule is to keep unsullied the ranks of the administrative personnel. It cannot be stated that an enquiry in a criminal Court and disciplinary proceedings can be equated, for, in one the offence should be brought home to the accused, but in the other grave and suspicious circumstances may end in a removal of the servant. The character of the evidence and the nature of the act committed affords a reasonable basis for classification. There is a nexus between the classification and the object in respect of which the classification is made. But the object of the classification was to take action against the misfits in the administrative set up, and the classification, having regard to the aforesaid differences, is necessary and reasonable to achieve that object. 1956 Andh W R 978 : 1956 Andh L T 979 : ILR (1956) Andh Pra 948 : AIR 1957 Andh Pra 197 (202, 203) (Pt H) (Pr 15) (DB).

——Arts. 14 and 16—Recruitment of M.As, Honours Graduates and Pass Graduates as Sub-Inspectors of Schools in pursuance of announcement—No differentiation between higher qualified and less qualified —Subsequent differentiation among the same unit violates Art. 16 (1).

Where the Government in pursuance of an announcement for recruitment of Sub-Inspectors of Schools, appoints M.As and Honours Graduates along with Pass Graduates to the same grade and rank with the same pay scale, irrespective of any difference of their individual qualifications, the employees form 'a single unit of employment". Hence the subsequent differentiation on the basis of qualification, in the matter of pay between the members of the same unit must be struck down as violative of Art. 16 (1) : AIR 1962 S C 505; AIR 1962 S C 36 and AIR 1960 S C 384, Rel. on.

The plea of the Government that there was a natural class division as between the less qualified and the higher qualified members of the Sub-Inspectors of Schools is not tenable inasmuch as in making the announcement and in appointing on the basis thereof, the Government did not treat the lesser qualified and the higher qualified as belonging to two different classes but treated them alike.

The mere fact that two different cadres are created does not show whether Art. 14 or 16 has or has not been violated, but once having included different employees into a single grade or unit of employment, it is not permissible for Government to provide a differential treatment between two sections of the same unit, with retrospective effect. ● ——Art. 14—Natural justice.

Violation of the principles of natural justice comes within the purview of Art. 14—The important principle of natural justice is that a person should not be condemned unheard. Where a Government servant was demoted on the report of the Commission of Inquiry and he did not know whether he was called upon to meet the charges or whether the Commission was functioning as merely a fact finding Commission and he was not apprised of the findings on the basis of which he was punished, there is a clear violation of the principles of natural justice and the infringement of the fundamental rights which he enjoys under Art. 14, Constitution of India, as applied to the State of Jammu and Kashmir. Gulam Rasul v. State of Jammu and Kashmir, AIR 1956 J & K 17 (23) (Pt F) (Pr 34) (FB).

[Reversed on another point in AIR 1961 S C 1301].

——Arts. 14 and 311 (2)—Judicial officer in service of State—Proceedings started against officer under Travancore Public Servants (Inquiries) Act, 1122—Proceedings not started against him under Kerala (Classification, Control and Appeal) Rules, 1957 though these rules were in existence—Though procedures in such proceedings slightly differ still guarantee given under Art. 311 (2) is not discriminatory.

In proceedings directed to be taken against a Sub-Magistrate, an officer in the judicial service of the State, under the Travancore Public Servants (Inquiries) Act, 1122, the procedure adopted under the Act and the one adopted in a proceeding started either under Kerala (Classification, Control and Appeal) Rules, 1957, or under Public Servants' (Enquiry Proceedings Tribunal) Rules, 1960 is slightly different, though the Rules of 1957 are substantially the same as the Rules of 1960. Even so, ultimately the reasonable opportunity, guaranteed to the judicial officer under Art. 311 (2) of the Constitution is amply satisfied by the Public Servants' (Enquiry Proceedings Tribunal) Rules, or the Travancore Public Servants Enquiries Act, or the Kerala Civil Services (Classification, Control and Appeal) Rules. Thus there is no question of discrimination under Art. 14 of the Constitution. (1961) Ker L J 231, Foll. AIR 1963 Ker 92 (97, 98) (Pt A) (Prs 31, 35).

—— Arts. 14 and 311 — Equality before law—Removal from service after departmental enquiry—Accused not prosecuted—No violation of Art. 14.

A charge against the petitioner amounted to an offence for which he was not prosecuted in a Court of law but he was removed from service after departmental enquiry.

Held, that Art. 14 only provides that there should be equality before the law and equal protection under the laws which does not mean that every subject suspected of having committed an offence must be prosecuted. Departmental enquiry without prosecution in a Court of law is no violation of Art. 14. AIR 1954 Assam 18, Not foll. 1958 M P L J (Notes) 83.

——Art. 14 — Acquittal of Government servant on technical grounds does not preclude departmental proceedings in respect of same subject-matter—Departmental enquiry might not possess all attributes of criminal trial but to argue therefrom that Art. 14 of Constitution stands infringed leads to patent absurdity. See Ibid, Art. 20 (2). ILR (1965) 2 Mad 373.

——Arts. 14 and 309—Mysore Civil Services (Classification, Control and Appeal) Rules (1957), Rr. 11 and 14A—Scope—Departmental enquiry—Procedure under R. 14A is not different from that under R. 11—R. 14A is not discriminatory merely because it takes away right of appeal to Government which exists in case of inquiry under R. 11.

The Mysore Civil Services (Classification, Control and Appeal) Rules, 1957, are framed by the Governor of Mysore in exercise of the powers conferred on him by the proviso to Article 309 of the Constitution of India. Rule 11 of the said Rules which prescribes the procedure to be adopted by the Disciplinary Authority for imposing major penalties provide that the Disciplinary Authority may himself hold an enquiry or specify any authority to hold the enquiry after framing definite charges on the basis of the allegations on which the enquiry is proposed to be held. The rule further prescribes that if the Disciplinary Authority is not the enquiring authority he should on receipt of the report of the enquiring authority record his own findings on the charges and then communicate the same to the officer and serve a notice to show cause as to why the punishment tentatively proposed in the notice should not be inflicted on him. Under the Rules the delinquent officer on whom one of the major penalties is inflicted is entitled to file an appeal against the finding and the punishment to the Government. Rule 14-A prescribes special procedure in certain cases of misconduct of a Government servant. The said rule prescribes that the Director of Anti-Corruption and Technical Audit, Public Works Department (he was being called as the Special Officer, Efficiency Audit) may either suo motu or on a reference made by the Government take up any investigation and conduct the enquiry himself or authorise any officer of the Directorate of Anti-Corruption and Technical Audit, Public Works Department to conduct such an enquiry. The procedure prescribed for holding an enquiry under R. 14-A is not different from the procedure prescribed under Rule 11 of these Rules. It cannot be said that the holding of enquiry under R. 14A is opposed to natural justice and amount to a denial of reasonable opportunity to the petitioner to prove his innocence. The mere fact that the right of the petitioner to prefer an appeal which he would have had if the enquiry is conducted under Rule 11 is taken away by virtue of the enquiry being held under Rule 14-A cannot be regarded as a ground for sustaining a plea of unlawful discrimination within the meaning of Art. 14 of the Constitution. Misconduct of non-gazetted Government servants as described in Cls. (a) and (b) of sub-r. (1) of R. 4 of the Tribunal Rules may be dealt with either under those Rules or under the Classification Rules at the unfettered discretion of the Government. The power of the Government is arbitrary, unfettered and unguided. Gross discrimination between non-gazetted. Government servants who may have committed identical acts of misconduct is authorised by the Tribunal Rules, and hence Cls. (a) and (b) of sub-r. (1) of R. 4 of the Disciplinary Proceeding (Administrative Tribunal) Rules, 1951, in their application to non-gazetted Government servants, are ultra vires the Constitution and invalid. I L R (1958) Cut 11 : AIR 1958 Orissa 96 (100, 101) (Pt C) (Prs 13, 15, 16) (DB).

In conducting a departmental enquiry against a Government servant either under the Orissa Disciplinary Proceedings (Administrative Tribunal) Rules, 1951, or under the Civil Services (Classification, Control and Appeal) Rules, 1930, in respect of non-gazetted Government servants, the former is less favourable as the right of appeal is expressly taken away; but so far as Gazetted Government servants are concerned the Orissa Tribunal Rules cannot be said to be less favourable. On the contrary they are more favourable to those Government servants inasmuch as their cases are enquired into by an independent Tribunal and not by their immediate superior officers who might otherwise be prejudiced against them. And it lies with the gazetted Government servant concerned to choose under R. 4 (2) of the Orissa Disciplinary Proceedings (Administrative Tribunal) Rules, 1951, whether his case should be enquired into by the Tribunal or in accordance with the Civil Services (Classification, Control and Appeal) Rules, 1930. The discrimination if any is brought about by the option of the Government servant and not by the Orissa Tribunal Rules. Hence, Art. 14 of the Constitution is not attracted. I L R (1957) Cut 177 : AIR 1957 Orissa 70 (73, 74) (Pt F) (Pr 13) (DB).

——Art. 14 — Punjab Civil Services Rules (1959), Vol. 1, R. 3.26 (d) — Validity—Rule does not offend Art. 14.

It is not true that the Government has the alternative of either proceeding against a Government servant by way of departmental enquiry or prosecuting him on a criminal charge. The Government has the right to hold a departmental enquiry against a Government servant as well as to prosecute him. It is the option of the Government to proceed with either the departmental enquiry first or with a criminal prosecution. It is, therefore, clear that because the Government takes one or the other course it does not mean that Art. 14 of the Constitution is attracted and there is a case of discrimination based on arbitrary exercise of power. The Government has the power to proceed in both ways and there is nothing arbitrary in its first proceeding with the enquiry and then, if sufficient evidence is available for prosecution, to prosecute the Government servant. So there is no violation of Art. 14. Inference that the Government has acted mala fide in not proceeding against the Government servant in a Court of Law first is not available when the Government can proceed against the Government servant both by an enquiry and by prosecution and it first starts with an enquiry. A I R 1952 S C 329; and AIR 1957 S C 329; and AIR 1960 S C 493; and AIR 1961 S C 1602 and AIR 1961 S C 1715, Distinguished. 36 (c). Termination of service.

● ——Art. 14 — Railway Establishment Code (1951), R. 148 (3) — Railway Establishment Code (1959), R. 149 (3) — Validity — Termination of service of Railway servant by notice — No rational basis for distinction between them and other public servants — No guiding principle for exercising discretion — Rules held invalid.

(Per Majority view, Shah, J., Contra).—The nature of services rendered by employees in different sectors of public service may differ and the terms and conditions governing employment in all public sectors may not necessarily be the same or uniform; but in regard to the question of terminating the services of a civil servant after serving him with a notice for a specified period, there is no basis on which the Railways can be regarded as constituting a separate and distinct class by reference to which the impugned Rr. 148 (3) and 149 (3) can be justified in the light of Art. 14. If there is any rational connection between the making of such a Rule and the object intended to be achieved by it, that connection would clearly be in existence in several other sectors of public service.

What has happened is that a provision like R. 148 (3) or R. 149 (3) was first made by the Railway Companies when employment with the Railways was a purely commercial matter governed by the ordinary rules of contract. After the Railways were taken over by the State, that position has essentially altered, and so, the validity of the Rule is now exposed to the challenge under Art. 14. Therefore, the challenge to the validity of the impugned Rules on the ground that they contravene Art. 14 must succeed.

Per Das Gupta, J. — Rules 148 (3) and 149 (3) do not lay down any principle or policy for guiding the exercise of discretion by the authority who will terminate the service in the matter of selection or classification. Arbitrary and uncontrolled power is left in the authority to select at its will any person against whom action will be taken. The Rules thus enable the authority concerned to discriminate between two railway servants to both of whom the Rules equally applied by taking action in one case and not taking it in the other. In the absence of any guiding principle in the exercise of the discretion by the authority the Rules have therefore to be struck down as contravening the requirements of Art. 14 of the Constitution. AIR 1958 S C 538, Rel. on.

It is true that R. 148 (3) does not expressly provide for guidance to the authority exercising the power conferred by the Rule, but on that account the Rule cannot be said to confer an arbitrary power and be unreasonable, or be in its operation unequal. The power is exercisable by the appointing authority who normally is, if not the General Manager, a senior officer of the Railways. In considering the validity of an order of determination of employment under R. 148, an assumption that the powers may be exercised mala fide and on that ground discrimination may be practised is wholly out of place. Power to exercise discretion is not necessarily to be assumed to be a power to discriminate unlawfully, and possibility of abuse of power will not invalidate the conferment of power. If in the scheme of the rules, a clear policy relating to the circumstances in which the power is to be exercised is discernible, the conferment of power must be regarded as made in furtherance of the scheme, and is not open to attack as infringing the equality clause. Rules 148 (3) and 149 (3) cannot therefore be regarded as invalid as infringing Art. 14 of the Constitution. Ram Deka v. General Manager, North East Frontier Railway, (1964) 2 S C A 372 : (1964) 2 Lab L J 467 : ILR (1964) 2 All 717 : ILR (1964) 16 Assam 81 : (1964) 5 S C R 683 : AIR 1964 S C 600 (618, 619, 620, 633, 634, 644) (Pt F) (Prs 56, 59, 113, 115, 117, 154).

● ——Art. 14—Termination of contractual service by notice — Civil servant engaged on basis of special contract for certain term on expiry of term reappointed by further contract on temporary basis — In accordance with Government Rules forming part of such contract civil servant discharged from service after notice. Held no question of discrimination arose. See Ibid, Art. 311. AIR 1953 S C 250.

——Arts. 14, 311 — Temporary Government servant — Termination of service after notice according to contract — No discrimination.

As between persons not similarly situated no question of discrimination can arise.

Where the services of a temporary Government servant are terminated in accordance with one of the conditions embodied in his contract or service which is a valid contract, it is not open to him to contend that the action taken is void on the ground of discrimination in enforcement of different contracts. Further, whenever there is a possibility of discrimination in any statute, rule or contract which is not permissible under Art. 14 of the Constitution, that statute, rule or contract itself would become void and in a case where it is not open to the Court to hold that the contract is void, such a ground cannot be taken into consideration. 1955 All L J 665 : AIR 1955 All 496 (499) (Pt D) (Pr 7).

The normal age of retirement of a Government servant governed by the Mysore Civil Services Rules, 1958 under R. 95 (a) is 55 years, but under R. 285 it is competent to the Government to retire compulsorily a government servant prematurely if it is thought that such premature retirement is necessary in the public interest. This power can, however, be exercised only in cases where the Government servant has completed 25 years qualifying service or has attained 50 years of age In other words, ordinary retirement by superannuation occurs after attaining 55 years or completing 30 years service, while premature retirement can be forced on the Government servant if he has either completed 25 years of service, or has attained 50 years of age. In the case of premature compulsory retirement, the Government servant is entitled to pension as indicated in Note 1 to Rule 285.

On behalf of a Government servant who had completed 27 years of service at the age of 48 years and who was made to retire compulsorily under Rule 285 of the said Rules it was contended that this rule was invalid as it contravened Arts. 14 and 16 (1) of the Constitution and that the Government was not justified in coming to the conclusion that it was in the public interest to retire him compulsorily ;

Held, (i) that the law in relation to the validity of the Rules permitting compulsory premature retirement of Government servants had been well settled by the prior decisions of the Supreme Court and need not be reopened. (iii) that whether or not the petitioner's retirement was in the public interest was a matter for the State Government to consider and as to the plea that the order was arbitrary and illegal, it was impossible to hold on the material placed by the petitioner before the Court that the said order suffered from the vice of mala fides. Equality before the law or the equal protection of the laws does not preclude the State from making classification so long as the persons within a particular classification are treated equally or given equal protection of the laws. Reasonable classification is permissible, and what is prohibited is arbitrary selection or discrimination within the class.

Where by a rule, the Government fixed upon a certain date, and said that anybody who completed 55 years of age or 30 years' qualifying service on that date would be retired, and there was no discrimination within this class, the Rule is not hit by Art. 14 of the Constitution. AIR 1952 Raj 17 (19) (Pt D) (Pr 10) (DB).

36 (g). Promotion in service.

● ——Arts. 14 and 16 — Public servants — Equality of opportunity in matters of promotion — Punjab Educational Service (Provincialised Cadre) Class 3 Rules (1961), Rr. 2 (d) (e) (3) — Validity — District Board and Municipal Board teachers taken over by Punjab Government and given same scales and grades of pay as were applicable to teachers in Government employment — Service Rules discriminating them in matters of promotion — Not violative of Art. 14 or 16.

Held, (Per majority, Subba Rao and Shah JJ., Contra). — By the order dated September 27, 1957 which came into effect from October 1, 1957 teachers in the erstwhile Board School became employees of Government and were given the same scales and grades of pay as were applicable to their counterparts in the State cadre, but except this equality of grade and pay there was nothing more that was contemplated or provided for by that order. There was no integration of the two cadres either expressly or by necessary implication. It would follow that it was not the Punjab Educational Service (Provincialised Cadre) Class 3 Rules that created the two distinct cadres but that they existed independently of the rules.

The two services started as independent services. The qualifications prescribed for entry into each were different; the method of recruitment and the machinery for the same were also different and the general qualifications possessed by and large by the members of each class being different, they started as two distinct classes. If they were distinct services, there was no question of inter se seniority between members of the two services, nor of any comparison between the two in the matter of promotion for founding an argument based upon Art. 14 or Art. 16 (1). They started dissimilarly and they continued dissimilarly and any dissimilarity in their treatment would not be a denial of equal opportunity. Civil Writ Petn. No. 1559 of 1960 (Punj), dated 3-10-1961, Reversed.

Per Subba Rao and Shah JJ. (Contra);—The same scales of remuneration were paid to members of both the cadres. They performed the same duties and functions and held the same posts. Posts occupied by the State Cadre teachers could be occupied by the 'Provincialised' school teachers and vice versa. Hence, between the members of the State Cadre and the 'Provincialised' Cadre there was no valid basis for classification so as to justify a differential treatment between their members inter se for the purposes of promotion without infringing the constitutional guarantee of equality of opportunity in the matter of employment.

Once the District Board and Municipal Board school teachers were taken over by the Government of Punjab and an amalgamated Educational Service was evolved, any special provision relating to promotion depending solely upon the source of recruitment and upon no other ground seriously affected the rights of the members of the 'Provincialised' Cadre to promotion, and infringed Art. 16, Cl. (1) of the Constitution. (1960) S C J 344 : AIR 1960 S C 384 and AIR 1962 S C 1139, Dist. State of Punjab v. ● ——Arts. 14, 16 (1) and 235 — Discrimination and equal opportunity in the matter of promotion to higher post — Number of Munsiffs eligible for promotion to higher posts of subordinate Judge — High Court in exercise of its sole authority selecting some in preference to plaintiff — Arts. 14 and 16 (1) not violated—Exercise of power by High Court not justiciable.

Where the High Court who is the sole authority under Art. 235 to decide the question of appointment of a Munsif to the higher rank of a Subordinate Judge had exercised its power after fully considering the plaintiff's case for promotion, by promoting certain Munsifs lower in order than the plaintiff in the seniority list, it cannot be said that the plaintiff has been discriminated against in the matter of promotion and therefore Arts. 14 and 16 (1) of the Constitution have been violated. Equal opportunity contemplated by Art. 16 (1) does not mean getting the particular post for which a number of persons may have been considered. So long as the plaintiff, along with others under consideration, had been given his chance, it cannot be said that he had not equal opportunity along with others, who may have been selected in preference to him. The fact that the High Court made its choice in a particular way cannot be said to amount to discrimination against the plaintiff. The exercise of the power vested in the High Court under Art. 235 was not justiciable. High Court, Calcutta v. ——Art. 14—Scope—Civil servant—Refusal to promote on ground of inefficiency—Art. 311—(Kashmir Civil Service Rules, R. 25).

Where a person's claim for promotion has been ignored on the ground that he does not come up to the mark in efficiency in the estimation of the appointing authority it cannot be said that R. 25 of the Kashmir Civil Service Rules has been violated and that discriminatory treatment has been meted out to him. ——Art. 14 — Equality before law — Kashmir Civil Service Rules (1939), if law—Jurisdiction of Court—(Kashmir Civil Service Rules (1939), R. 25).

The Kashmir Civil Service Rules have been placed on the same footing as the existing law enforceable by the State Courts. Where promotions were ordered by the Accountant General not because the persons promoted were seniors and possessed the requisite qualifications but because it was necessary to implement the cabinet order for purpose of removing the 'communal disparity', the order of the Accountant General which was against law and which denied equal protection cannot but be declared void and ineffective : A I R 1956 J & K 17, Foll.; A I R 1957 J & K 8 (FB), Rel. on. ——Arts. 14, 311 — Equality before law—Supersession of senior civil servant by junior — Question of merit — Powers of Court — (Kashmir Civil Service Rules (General), R. 25)—Validity.

Where according to R. 25, Kashmir Civil Service Rules (General), promotions of civil servants to higher cadre are to be made on basis of merits, seniority being considered only where merits are equal it is the appointing authority which is the judge of merit and ability and the Court cannot substitute its judgment for that of the appointing authority.

Relaxation of the cabinet order by another cabinet order, to the disadvantage of another civil servant who has crossed the efficiency bar in his cadre will not entitle the superseded civil servant to protection from the Court on the ground that he has been denied equality before the law or the equal protection of the laws. ● ——Art. 14 — Discretion — Promotion of junior officer on ground of merit—Art. 311—Rules enabling appointing authority to make promotions on ground of merit—Appointing authority is judge of merit — (Kashmir Civil Service Rules (General), R. 25).

It is not the function of the Court to substitute its judgment for that of the appointing authority. Whatever the Rules, such tests, unless a particular mode of test is prescribed, are bound to be subjective in character. Where the appointing authorities consider a junior officer to be more fit in merit and efficiency to be promoted than the senior, the High Court cannot interfere with the promotion. ——Arts. 14, 16 — Non-promotion of civil servant—No fundamental right is infringed.

No civil servant has a claim to ask for promotion as of right and the giving or refusal of promotion is a matter within the exclusive discretionary domain of the executive authorities concerned in the matter. The equality guaranteed under Arts. 14 and 16 cannot take away the right of the Government to pick and choose proper persons for employment in Government service. It cannot be said that the act of the Government in exempting some members of service from passing the test required to be passed for promotion and its denial of such exemption to other members by itself constitutes an unequal discriminatory treatment. The act of the Government in not giving promotion to a civil servant does not result in any infringement of his fundamental rights under the Constitution. ——Arts. 14, 15, 16—Promotions in Government services—Basis—Seniority by itself cannot confer absolute right to promotion irrespective of other considerations—Idea of selection cannot be ruled out.

Among the well-known attributes of public service, one that is least subject to exception is that no employee can claim as of right a promotion from one position to another unless he could do so under a statutory provision of an enforceable condition of service. Ordinarily, it would be for the State or the promoting authority to determine such suitability after an assessment of all relevant considerations, such as seniority, competence, rectitude, and antecedent official records, none of which is less important than the other, for the preservation of purity and efficiency in public service. The basic or governing consideration in all promotions is what may be shortly described as merit or suitability. Seniority is in substance one of the elements in the assessment of merit. Equality of opportunity under Art. 16 of the Constitution can never be taken to exclude the idea of selection. It only requires that while making the selection, the State should apply same standards to all persons similarly situated with respect to the question on hand. Equality of opportunity should not be confused with absolute equality and Art. 16 does not prohibit the prescription of reasonable rules for selection. Even in regard to promotional posts other than selection posts idea of selection is not ruled out. Seniority by itself can never confer an absolute right to promotion irrespective of other considerations. 36 (h). Preparation of seniority list.

——Art. 14—Equal protection of laws—Integration of services under States Reorganization Act (1956), S. 115 (5) — Provisional Inter-State seniority list by State — List prepared by considering all relevant factors — State publishing revised list and refixing particular servant's seniority — Representation of all affected servants not considered - Revision violates Art. 14 of Constitution. See States Reorganization Act (1956), S. 115 (5). (1965) 1 Mys L J 392 : (1965) 2 Law Rep 191 : A I R 1966 Mys 31 (DB).

——Art. 14 — Integration of State services — Provisional seniority list of State Government servants — Publication by State—Promotions based on such list — Corrections effected without effecting general revision—Action arbitrary—Art. 14 violated—States Reorganisation Act (1956), S. 115.

When the State Government with a view to final integration of services under S. 115 of the States Reorganisation Act prepares a provisional list as to relative seniority of certain class or category of its servants based on the opinion of the departmental committee and publishes it in the name of the Governor as an order, such a list is an act of the State Government notwithstanding the fact that such list represents the opinion of the departmental committee and not final opinion of the Government and that such list prepared by the departmental committee cannot take the place of final integration under S. 115. Consequently when such list is published as a decision simultaneously governing a large number of persons in the matter of promotions etc. before a change could be made therein, representations of all those that have made representations in respect of that list will have to be taken into account simultaneously. A correction made without such general examination and revision is an arbitrary act because it picks out one person from a class for special treatment and therefore involves an infringement of the guarantee of equal treatment before the law under Art. 14 of the Constitution. 1961 Mys L J 425, Rel. on. (1963) 1 Mys L J 477.

36 (i). Pension rules.

——Arts. 14 and 109 - Pension Rules of Mysore State — Old and Revised Pension Rules — Distinction — Government Order dated 25-1-1957 specifying rates of dearness allowance sanctioned to pensioners drawing pension upto Rs. 100 per month—Interpretation of Order in case of pensioners governed by old Rules—Interpretation by A. G. incorporated as R. 147-A (2) in Mysore Treasury Code—Not discriminatory.

Held, (i) that in the case of a pensioner who had commuted a portion of his pension, the original amount of pension inclusive of commuted pension should be taken into account for determining the admissibility and the rate of dearness allowance under the said Order of the Government. Commutation meant interchange of two things or the buying off, of one obligation by another obligation. It was in fact in the nature of a present value of a periodical payment expected to last an estimated number of years for which the Government purchased the obligation of having to make the said periodical payment for the said estimated number of years. Therefore, the interpretation placed by the Accountant-General on the Order of the Government and incorporated as R. 147-A (2) in the Mysore Treasury Rules was correct. (ii) The above interpretation of the Order was not violative of Art. 14 on the ground that in the case of pensioners governed by the Revised Rules, the pension that was taken into account for determining both the admissibility and the rate of dearness allowance was only the cash pension received by the pensioners month by month exclusive of the amount of Death cum Retirement Gratuity. The very fact that one class of pensioners was governed by one set of rules and another class by another set of rules would furnish a basis for reasonable classification in the matter of applying the scheme of dearness allowance. (iii) The definition of pension in R. 2 of the Revised Rules was relevant for certain purposes of the Rules and could not be taken as suggesting that pension and gratuity were the same for all purposes. The definiti n itself indicated that there was a distinction between the two in their essential nature. Pension, gratuity and Provident Fund, were three different and distinct types of retirement benefits although the basis for calculating all of them was furnished by the salary or emoluments drawn by a Government servant. A I R 1963 Mys 247 (249, 250) (Prs 5, 7, 8, 10, 11, 13) (DB).

37. Legislation regarding admission to educational institutions and other educational matters.

Admission to educational institutions.

● ——Art. 14—Government order prescribing interviews for regulating admission to colleges — Order prescribing definite criteria for giving marks and appointing competent men to make selection on that basis — Order does not contravene the article in any way.

An order passed by the Government prescribing interviews for selecting from candidates possessing minimum academic qualifications for admission to colleges and definite criteria in the matter of giving marks at the interview and appointing competent men to make the selection on that basis does not in any way contravene Art. 14 of the Constitution.

Selection by interview is one of the well-accepted modes of selection and it cannot be condemned by adopting a wide statement that, whatever may be the objective tests laid down, in the final analysis it gives ample room for discrimination and manipulation as the awarding of marks is left to the subjective satisfaction of the selection committee and hence it is inherently repugnant to the doctrine of equality embodied in Art. 14. The criticism is mere a reflection on the examination than on the system itself. The scheme of selection however perfect it may be on paper, may be abused in practice. That it is capable of abuse is not a ground for quashing it. So long as the order lays down relevant objective criteria and entrusts the business of selection to qualified persons, the Court cannot have any say in the matter. If in any particular case the selection committee abuses its powers in violation of Art. 14, that may be a case for setting aside a particular interview. Chitralekha v. ● ——Art. 14—Reasonable classification—Rules relating to admission to Medical College at Indore—Rule requiring capitation fee from non-Madhya Bharat students (as modified in 1952)—Validity.

(Per Majority). — The impugned rule divides self-nominees into two groups those who are bona ade residents of Madhya Bharat and those who are not and while it imposes a capitation fee on the latter, it exempts the former from the payment thereof. It thus proceeds on a classification based on residence within the State. The object of the classification underlying the impugned rule was clearly to help to some extent students who are residents of Madhya Bharat in the prosecution of their studies, and it cannot be disputed that it is quite a legitimate and laudable objective for a State to encourage education within its borders. It is well known that it requires considerable finance to maintain a Medical College. A concession given to the residents of the State in the matter of fees is obviously calculated to serve that end, as presumably some of them might after passing out of the College, settle down as doctors and serve the needs of the locality. The classification is thus based on a ground which has a reasonable relation to the subject-matter of the legislation, and is in consequence not open to attack. A classification might validly be made on a geographical basis. Such a classification would be eminently just and reasonable, where it relates to education which is the concern primarily of the State. The contention, therefore, that the rule imposing capitation fee on non-Madhya Bharat students is in contravention of Art. 14 must be rejected. A I R 1953 S C 10, Foll. Joshi v. The classification made under R. 6 of the Rules of Osmania University rests on the residence of the applicants or their parents. It is geographical. There is also a classification issued on occupation, namely, sons of officials working in the twin cities of Hyderabad and Secunderabad on the one hand and others on the other. Entry No. 11 of List II State List is education. Art. 162 of the Constitution provides that the executive power of the State shall extend to such matters in respect of which the Legislature of a State has power to make laws. The inhibition on the subject under Arts. 15 and 29 read together is directed towards discrimination on the ground of religion, race, caste or language or any of them as regards admission to educational institutions. Hence a State can make law limiting admissions in an educational institution of the State to the residents of the State itself and this will not be obnoxious. Nor will this classification violate the letter and the spirit of Art. 14 as the classification is based on reasonable grounds relevant to the object of legislation and cannot be styled as arbitrary or capricious having no relation to the object sought to be achieved.

As the State can make law denying admission on the ground of non-residence in its educational institution it can also make law on the ground of exempting its residents from paying capitation fees. This exemption of its residents from payment will be deemed to be based on reasonable grounds because it is the finances of the State that bear the burden of running the institution. —— Art. 14—Discrimination — Medical Colleges in Madhya Pradesh Rules for Admission (1960) — If law—Discriminatory admission in contravention of Rules—Effect.

Article 14 ensures equality before the law and equal protection of the laws. That Article is in form and admonition addressed to the State and does not directly confer any right on any person. The obligation thereby imposed enures for the benefit of all persons because a necessary result of its operation is that they all enjoyed equality before the law. Law has been widely defined in Art. 13. Even if that definition is adopted for the purposes of Art. 14 it does not embrace within its ambit executive or administrative instructions in a field not covered by any law.

The Medical Colleges in Madhya Pradesh Rules for Admission (1960) are merely executive or administrative instructions in a field which is not covered by any statute and cannot be classified as law. Any discriminatory action taken in pursuance of or even in disregard of these Rules in respect of admission of students to Medical Colleges in Madhya Pradesh, does not attract the principle of equality before the law embodied in Art. 14. ——Art. 14—Government Order No. PLM-80-MMC-64, dated 29-6-1964—Interview test—Two different standards of interview tests for students of Karnataka University and those of Mysore University—Held same were justified.

It was contended that the Selection Committee adopted two different standards in the matter of selection, one for Karnataka University students and another for Mysore University students and that therefore the selection made was violative of the equality clause in the Constitution. The Mysore University students were said to have been discriminated against, inasmuch as no student of that University who secured less than 218 marks was admitted, whereas students of the Karnataka University who secured 208 marks or more were selected.

Held, that the comparative merits of the students of the two universities could not be tested by referring to the marks obtained by them in the examination. The Government therefore thought it best to distribute seats between the two universities in the manner it had done, probably by taking into consideration the areas served by the two universities, the number of students who had passed the prescribed examinations and all other relevant circumstances. (1965) 1 Law Rep 474 : (1965) 2 Mys L J 571 : AIR 1966 Mys 40 (49) (Pt F) (Pr 26) (DB).

——Art. 14—Refusal of admission in a college.

By not admitting the students-petitioners into the College it cannot be said that they have been denied equality before the law. The latter part of Art. 14 does not take away from the State the power to classify either in the adoption of police laws, or tax laws, or eminent domain laws but permits to them the exercise of a wide scope of discretion, and nullifies what they do only when it is without any reasonable basis. The Article can have no application to a case where certain students are refused admission to a college under rules for admission (published in the Tribute of dated 29-7-1950). 53 Pun L R 218 : A I R 1951 Punj 93 (95) (Pt B) (Pr 12) (DB).

——Arts. 14 to 16 and 29 (2) — Nomination for admission to State colleges—If against fundamental rights.

Nomination for admission into State aided or State educational institutions is not against the fundamental rights guaranteed by any of the articles of the Constitution. ——Art. 14—Scope — Admission into College of students—Resolution of Rajputana University refusing admission to Colleges to students passing Intermediate Examination as private candidates from other Universities – If hit by Article and void.

The University of Rajputana passed a resolution that those persons who passed their Intermediate Examinations as private candidates from other Universities or Boards should not be admitted to the degree classes of Colleges affiliated to the University of Rajputana except teachers and women candidates. By passing this resolution the University did not discriminate between persons passing the Intermediate Examination after attending a recognised institution and those passing it as private candidates. It was merely carrying out its educational policy and there is a reasonable basis for classification on an intelligible differentia which has a reasonable connection with the objective to be achieved, namely, sound higher education. It cannot therefore be said that the University is denying equality before the law. Hence the resolution is not hit by Art. 14. ——Arts. 14 and 226—Equality before law—Validity of R. 7, Regulations of the Board of Secondary Education, Madhya Pradesh.

Equality before the law is denial of any special privilege by reason of birth, creed or the like and also equal subjection of all individuals and classes to the ordinary law of the land.

Reasonable classifications by law however is not a denial of equal protection. It is only where there is no reasonable basis for a classification that legislation making such classification may be declared discriminatory and it is the duty of the Court to sustain the classification if any state of facts can reasonably be conceived in justification of the classification. The whole object of classification is to minimise inequality.

Per Mudholkar, J. (Kotwal, J., dissentient).—The effect to R. 7 of the Regulations of the Board of Secondary Education, Madhya Pradesh. is only to make a classification between two categories of candidates namely those who join the National Cadet Corps and those who do not. There is a broad distinction between the discretion to be exercised with regard to fundamental rights and statutory rights and the discretion relating to the former has always to be controlled by clear rules before it can come within the category of reasonable restrictions. The Government should therefore decide its policy in respect of an academic year well in advance of the opening of the colleges and should reduce that policy into simple rules which will not produce a misunderstanding or provoke an application to High Court. ——Art. 14 — Concession in school fees to converts can be restricted to converts from one generation only—(Madras Education Rules, R. 92, App. 17A.)

A person is not entitled as of right to any concession in school fees. In making the exception the State is certainly entitled to fix limits to its operation. After all, when the State is granting an indulgence it is for the State entirely to decide how far the indulgence would go. Where policy of the State evidently was to allow the concession to pupils and students who themselves had been converted to christianity or whose parents or guardians had been converted but the State apparently was not willing to extend the concession where the conversion was more than one generation old, it cannot be said that the State has made any discrimination in making the provision. 1952 Mad W N 696 : (1952) 2 Mad L J 450 : 65 Mad L W 953 : AIR 1953 Mad 21 (22) (Pt A) (Pr 5) (DB).

——Art. 14 — Presumption of constitutionality to be kept in view in examining validity of enactment under Art 14—Bihar State Universities (Amendment) Act (13 of 1962), S. 4 — Section not discriminatory and does not violate Art. 14.

If the legislature indicates a definite objective and the discretion has been vested in the State Government or other authority as a means of achieving that object, the law itself cannot be held to be discriminatory, though the action of the authority concerned may be condemned if it offends against the equal protection clause by making an arbitrary selection. Observations of Patanjali Sastri, J. in A. I. R. 1952 S C 123, Rel. on. Applying this test to S. 4 of the Bihar State Universities (Amendment) Act (13 of 1962), the object of the enactment was to scrutinise certain appointments made within a specified period. The discretion was given to the University Service Commission, and ultimately to the Chancellor of the University, to consider any particular case, to test its validity.

The presumption being in favour of the constitutionality of an enactment, the burden is upon the petitioner to show that there has been a clear transgression of any constitutional principle. It is not enough to allege that the power given under the impugned section is so unreasonable that it is violative of the constitutional guarantee under Art. 14 of the Constitution. ——Art. 14 — Classification — Limbdi Huzur Order allowing free education only to subjects of former Limbdi State continued in force in Saurashtra —If offends Art. 14.

Article 14 forbids class legislation but does not forbid reasonable classification for the purposes of legislation. That classification must have reasonable relation to the object or the purpose sought to be achieved by the impugned legislation. AIR 1955 S C 166, Rel. on.

The Huzur Order in force in the former Limbdi State and continued in force at present in the Saurashtra State classified the students studying in certain High School at Limbdi into two groups, the first being a group of students who were subjects of the former Limbdi or Lakhtar State, and second of the non-Limbdi or non-Lakhtar State students and allowed free education to the former group.

Held, that the Saurashtra State could justify the enforcement of the impugned order on the ground that the classification existed before and has been continued by it.

(2) That the impugned Huzur Order of the Limbdi State applied to all persons who were former Limbdi State subjects and no one out of them was excluded. The measure did not become discriminatory simply because others studying in the same school did not get its benefit and were charged fees. AIR 1954 Raj 104 and AIR 1954 Raj 117, Rel. on.

(3) It would be wrong to declare the progressive and ameliorative measure invalid and bring down part of the Saurashtra State to the level of the other parts. The order was not therefore discriminatory and was not hit by Art. 14. AIR 1956 Sau 54 (56, 57, 58) (Pt B) (Prs 4, 5, 7) (DB).

● ——Art. 14—Prisons Act (1894), S. 59 - Rules under, Punjab Jail Manual, Paras. 571 to 575 — Separation of prisoners for maintenance of jail discipline — Para. 575 not violative of Art. 14 — Power under Para. 575 held exercised with mala fide and separate confinement of petitioner held illegal.

Article 14 of the Constitution permits classification and the said classification must bear just and reasonable relation to the object of the legislation. The object of the provisions in the Punjab Jail Manual providing for the separation of prisoners is to maintain discipline among the inmates of jail. The classification is made on the basis of sex and the nature of the prisoners and also on the availability of cells. The classification has a reasonable relation to the object sought to be achieved by the legislation; nor can the power conferred on the Superintendent to separate prisoners, be said to be arbitrary. In these circumstances, it must be held that para. 575 of the Punjab Jail Manual in its setting does not offend the provisions of Art. 14 of the Constitution. AIR 1961 Punj 524, Affirmed.

Held (Per majority, Raghubar Dayal, J., contra) in the instant case that in the purported exercise of the power vested in him, the jail superintendent. acted with mala fides and meted out discriminatory treatment to the petitioner and thus offended Art. 14 of the Constitution and the confinement of the petitioner was, therefore, illegal. ——Art. 14—Section 497, Penal Code—Validity,

Article 14 in substance means that every law that the State passes shall operate equally upon all persons. Once the nature of the offence of adultery is understood and appreciated, it is clear that there could be no question of the law operating unequally because the law was not intended to operate upon women at all. The mischief aimed at under S. 497 is only against men and not against women. Again, the law has so provided that for the purpose of this section the wife shall not be deemed to be an abettor at all. Thus in the definition of who is an abettor an exception is carved out and that exception is in favour of women. It is impossible to contend that as the section stands it does not operate equally upon all persons. 53 Bom L R 733: 1952 Cri L J 23: 21 Bom Cr C 229: AIR 1951 Bom 470 (471) (Pt A) (Pr 2) (DB).

● ——Art. 14 — Monopoly rights—Motor Vehicles Act (1939) (as amended by Act 100 of 1956), Chapter 4-A—Validity.

The provisions of Chapter 4-A of the Motor Vehicles Act, do not infringe the equality clause enshrined in Art. 14 of the Constitution.

The provisions of Chapter 4-A enable a scheme to be framed conferring a monopoly on the State in respect of transport services. However, the provisions of such scheme do not make any distinction between individuals operating a transport service and private transport undertakings. The classification is only made between the State Transport Undertaking and private transport undertakings. Such a classification made in Chap 4 A of the Act is just and has a reasonable relation to the object of the legislation which, as disclosed by the provisions of S. 68-C, is to provide in the interest of the public an efficient, adequate, economical and properly co-ordinated road transport service. In Chap. 4-A, the Legislature has made a sincere attempt to protect as far as possible individual rights from the arbitrary acts of the executive. Chapter 4-A of the Act in specific terms provides satisfactory machinery for reasonably regulating the exclusion of all or some of the private operators from the notified area or route. J. Y. ● ——Art. 14—Monopoly rights—Legislation creating State monopoly in trade whether infringes equal protection clause in Art. 14.

It is well settled that mere differentiation does not make a legislation obnoxious to the equal protection clause. The Legislature has always the power to make classification and all that is necessary is that the classification should not be arbitrary but must bear a reasonable relation to the object which the legislation has in view. There is no doubt that classification is inherent in the concept of a monopoly: and if the object of legislation is to create monopoly in favour of the State with regard to a particular business, obviously the State cannot but be differentiated from ordinary citizens and placed in a separate category so far as the running of the business is concerned and this classification would have a perfectly rational relation to the object of the statute. No doubt if the creation of a monopoly in favour of the State is itself bad on the ground of violating some constitutional provisions, the statute would be invalid for those reasons and the question of discrimination would not be material at all. The argument that the State ceases to function as a State as soon as it engages itself in a trade like ordinary trader cannot be accepted as a sound proposition of law under the Constitution of India at the present day. The contention that the U. P. Art. 14 of the Constitution forbids class legislation but does not forbid classification which rests on reasonable grounds of distinction. Art. 14 no doubt provides one of the most valuable and important guarantees in the Constitution which should not be allowed to be whittled down and any classification which is arbitrary and which is made without any basis is no classification; a proper classification must bear a reasonable and just relation to the things in respect of which it is proposed. Where a State Government and a co-operative society apply under the Motor Vehicles Act for permits to run stage carriages and the Regional Transport Authority grants permits to the State Government, the decision, right or wrong, cannot be said to offend Art. 14 of the Constitution or any other fundamental right of the co-operative society. The Orissa Motor Vehicles (Amendment) Act (1 of 1949) provides for no compensation to be given to the owners of stage carriage services to whom it is applied as in the case of those owners of Stage Carriage Services to whom Orissa Motor Vehicles (Regulation of Stage Carriage and Public Carriers Services) Act (36 of 1947) applied. This cannot be called discriminatory as between the several owners of stage carriage services. The permit-holders under Orissa Act 1 of 1949 do not fall in the same class or group as the permit-holders under Orissa Act 36 of 1947. There is no question, therefore, of any discrimination between these two classes or groups of permit-holders. The provisions of these two Acts are not in any manner violative of the fundamental right embodied in Art. 14 of the Constitution. Ramchandra v. The State of Orissa, 1956 S C A 346 : 22 Cut L T 171 : 1956 S C C 184 : 1956 S C R 28 : 1956 S C J 293 : AIR 1956 S C 298 (304) (Pt B) (Pr 14).

The power of the State Government to exercise control over the licensing authority is not arbitrary and discretionary. When the licensing authority itself has to determine terms, conditions and restrictions with due regard to the interest of the general public, it is not correct to say that the State Government's power is arbitrary or unregulated. Though the State Government can require terms and conditions which it should consider necessary to be incorporated by the licensing authority in a licence yet its discretion in that direction is circumscribed by all those conditions, etc., which govern the licensing authority itself in determining them. In this background it will not be correct to say that the control given to the State Government by sub-s. (2) of S. 5 is arbitrary or undefined. A I R 1961 All 600 (606) (Pt D) (Pr 23).

——Art. 14—Discretion vested in Commissioner to refuse licence of eating house to applicant under S. 39, Calcutta Police Act—Whether offends Art. 14 —Calcutta Police Act (4 of 1866), S. 39 — Constitutionality.

In the interest of the general public, security of the State public order, decency or morality and for all other public interest and reasons, compendiously described as social welfare, there has to be a balance between individual rights guaranteed under the Constitution and the exigency of the State, which is the custodian of the interests of the general public. It can be postulated that public order implies the orderly state of Society or Community in which citizens can peacefully pursue their normal activities of life. Public order is synonymous or equated with public peace, safety and tranquillity. It cannot be denied that for preventing a breach of the public peace or the invasion of private rights the State has sometimes to impose certain restrictions on the individual rights which the Police Act has sought to do. It therefore, becomes the duty of the State not only to punish the offender against the penal laws of the State but also to take preventive action in the way of not issuing a fresh licence, etc. "Prevention is better than cure" applies not only to individuals but also to the activities of the State in relation to the citizens of the State. The provisions of the Police Act are justified in the larger interests of the society so that the majority of the community may live in peace and harmony and carry on their peaceful avocations untrammelled by any fear of disorder or threat of violence. The individual right has, therefore, to yield to larger interests of the community otherwise Police Act would be a mere rope of sand.

The sufficiency of the grounds, upon which the satisfaction of the Commissioner of Police for granting licence under S. 39, purports to be based has a rational probative value and the grounds are not extraneous to the scope or purpose of the Police Act. So long as the legislature indicates the policy and purpose of the enactment with certainty the mere fact that a discretion is left to the Commissioner of Police for administering the law affords no basis, either for the contention that it amounts to an abdication of the legislative function or that the discretion vested is uncanalised and unguided so as to amount to a carte blanche to discriminate. 1965 (1) Cri L J 679 : A I R 1965 Cal 312 (328) (Pt J) (Prs 73, 74, 75).

——Art. 14—Discrimination.

Mere apprehension of future discrimination is not ordinarily sufficient to strike down a statutory provision as violative of Art. 14. Actual discrimination against the petitioner must be made out. Where a law gives discretion to authorities to grant licences to sell liquor, the petitioner to whom a licence is refused must in order to make out the plea of discrimination within Art. 14, first show that he and the other persons in whose favour bar licences were issued are similarly circumstanced. A I R 1959 J & K 83 (85) (Pt B) (Pr 9).

——Art. 14 — Motor Vehicles Act (1939), Ss. 47, 57 —Validity — Applications for stage carriage permits—Adoption of different criteria — Art. 14 held violated.

In disposing of the applications for stage carriage permits the Regional Transport Authority is required to take into consideration the matters referred to in S. 47 of the Motor Vehicles Act, 1939, and the objections raised under S. 57 (3). Section 47 itself does not lay down the manner and the principles on which the factors mentioned in sub-s. (1) should be taken into consideration. The competent authority has to formulate its own policy and rules on these matters and put them in execution. The authority can change the policy and the rules. But whatever policy or rules made be standing at any time, the Regional Transport Authority is required to carry out the policy and follow the rules so as not to make a departure from the principle of equal protection of the law and from natural justice. He is not at liberty to apply one set of principles and rules to particular applicants and entirely different to others, and if he does that he clearly violates the principle embodied in Art. 14 of the Constitution : A I R 1953 Mad 279 and AIR 1956 Andh 217, Rel. on.

Held, on facts that the R. T. A. failed to observe the relevant mandatory provisions of the Motor Vehicles Act. The disposal of the pending applications in the circumstances resulted in violation of Art. 14 and the order granting a permit was invalid.

(ii) The fact that the petitioner who had applied again after the rejection of his previous application for a permit on a different route did not complain of discrimination and denial of proper opportunity before the R. T. A. did not preclude the petitioner from applying under Art. 226 for quashing the order of R. T. Rule 49-A of the C. P. and Berar Motor Vehicles Rules does no more than lay down a minimum degree of necessary equipment that an applicant must possess when there are several competitors otherwise equally qualified. The limit of 20 vehicles is not arbitrary or discriminatory. It is open to Government or legislature to create standards of efficiency with a view to achieving reasonable public comfort and convenience in matters connected with public utilities. This is all that the rule does. The classification, therefore does not infringe either Art. 14 or Art. 19 (1) (g) of the Constitution. 1957 M P C 694 : 1957 M P L J 830 : 1957 Jab L J 1057 : A I R 1958 Madh Pra 193 (197) (Pt C) (Pr 12) (DB).

He need not be a person actually falling within the category or class for which the legislation seeks to provide. Since a person holding a permit on any route has a right to do business in transport vehicle on that route to the exclusion of others, except to the extent permitted by valid provisions of law, when alternative permit is issued to a permit holder displaced as a result of the scheme of nationalisation an existing permit holder on the route can maintain the objection that S. 68G (2) of the Motor Vehicles Act (1939) is violative of the Constitution. ——Arts. 14, 19 (1) (g) — Bombay Agricultural Produce Markets Act (22 of 1939), Ss. 4 (2), Proviso, 5A—Validity.

Under the Bombay Agricultural Produce Markets Act the powers of granting the licence have been conferred on the market committee which is a representative body and does not consist of a single individual. The market committee when refusing or cancelling a licence is to give reasons in writing and a copy of the order is to be supplied to the person affected. The committee is not left with any unfettered and arbitrary powers in that respect. So far as the grant of the licence is concerned, the policy has been laid down by R. 73 of the Rules under S. 26, namely, the necessity for the efficient conduct of the market. Further there is ample safeguard against the exercise of any arbitrary, unrestricted or unfettered power. Hence S. 4 (2), proviso or S. 5A of the Act cannot be held to be unconstitutional. The Provincial Transport Authority while granting a permit for plying stage carriages to the petitioner imposed a condition that he should not ply buses manufactured earlier than 1950, on the ground that he was an unreliable bus proprietor. The Transport Appellate Tribunal confirmed this order in appeal except that the year 1948 was substituted in place of 1950. This was a special condition imposed on the petitioner while the general condition for all other transport owners was that 'Vehicles provided must not be older than 1945 model'.

Held, that the condition imposed on the petitioner was invalid as violating the principle of equality contained in Art. 14 of the Constitution. Such a condition could become valid only, when either a general rule is made to that effect by the Government under S. 70, Motor Vehicles Act, or it is adapted by the authority as a general criterion of soundness and reliability applicable to all stage carriage owners. AIR 1953 Vindh Pra 49 (51) (Pt B) (Prs 8, 10).

●——Art. 14—Scope—Member representing territorial constituencies deprived of right to exercise vote at Presidential election, by fixing election of constituencies after date of Presidential election — Discrimination, if any — (Presidential and Vice-Presidential Election Act (1952), S. 18).

It cannot be contended that by fixing the elections in some territorial constituencies on a date after the election date fixed for the election of the President, the members representing those constituencies have been discriminated against by being deprived of their right to exercise and enjoy privileges of membership of Parliament, viz., of voting at Presidential election. In so far as the alleged discrimination, if any, in breach of the equal protection clause of the Constitution may be said to be calculated to raise any doubt in connection with the election of the President it will, at best, be a non-compliance with the provisions of the Constitution which may or may not, after the conclusion of the entire election, be made a ground, under S. 18 of the Presidential and Vice-Presidential Election Act, 1952, for calling the election in question. ——Art. 14— Scope — Election tribunal — Appointment of individuals having different qualifications — No discrimination — (Election — Representation of the People Act (1951), S. 86.)

What Art. 14 of the Constitution contemplates is merely a right that cases of exactly similar nature must be tried by Courts or tribunals exercising the same powers and discharging the same functions but does not envisage that even the individuals appointed to function as tribunals must be exactly similar. The fact that the presiding officers of some of the election tribunals are District Judges whereas others are retired Judges of High Courts cannot be said to bring about any discrimination which would be in violation of the provisions of Art. 14 of the Constitution. Further, no citizen can claim that all cases of the same nature must be tried by one single tribunal or one single Court. 1957 All L J 706: AIR 1958 All 137 (138, 140) (Pt A) (Prs 4, 6) (DB).

—— Arts. 14 and 15 — Representation of the People Act, S. 54 (4) — Validity.

Article 14 cannot be held to be infringed when a citizen is allowed the benefit of the general rule of being elected when he has secured the largest number of votes. Clause (iv) of Art. 15 empowers the State to make special provision for socially backward classes of citizens or for the scheduled caste or for the scheduled tribe. Therefore any special provision in favour of the scheduled caste or the scheduled tribes would have the sanction of the Constitution. Section 54 (4) has treated every person alike and there is no discrimination against any citizen on grounds of religion, caste or sect or place of birth or any of them. A classification may be based on geographical or on territorial considerations. There is an obvious classification on which the Proviso to S. 22, Jammu and Kashmir Representation of the People Act, 1957 has been added by Jammu and Kashmir Ordinance I of 1957 and that classification is based on reasonable grounds, which are to the effect that due to abnormal conditions electoral rolls could not be prepared in some constituencies and the interest of the State required that elections should be held in other constituencies without any delay. The State, therefore, was competent to legislate on rational basis in respect of any geographical region provided that there was no discrimination between the people of that region who were similarly circumstanced. ● ——Art. 14 — Power of State Legislature to make laws for different areas — Jammu and Kashmir Ordinance No. 1 of 1957 is valid.

It may be reasonable to enact laws for different areas in the State provided those laws are made on rational basis as needed in that area and do not offend any provisions of the Constitution. The judgment of the Legislature for making those laws on the basis of some reasonable classification cannot be questioned. There has not been any intentional or purposeful discrimination made by the Sadar-i-Riyasat in promulgating Jammu and Kashmir Ordinance No. 1 of 1957. The Sadar-i-Riyast in the absence of the State Legislature thought it reasonable to exclude the electors from Assembly constituencies of Doda District from standing as candidates from other constituencies on the ground that electoral rolls could not be prepared due to abnormal circumstances prevailing in the District; hence, that Ordinance cannot be held to be violative of the provisions of Art. 14 of the Constitution of India. ● ——Art. 14 — Discrimination — Bihar Panchayat Raj Act — Validity — (Bihar Panchayat Raj Act (7 of 1948), Ss. 62 and 68).

It cannot be argued that inasmuch as S. 62 gives only concurrent jurisdiction, it leaves it open to a party to go either to the ordinary Criminal Courts or to a bench of a Gram Cutcherry and that this opens the door for discrimination, because the procedure followed in the ordinary Criminal Courts is substantially different from that followed by a Gram Cutcherry. Section 62 is subject to S. 68 and on a proper construction of those sections it is clear that there is really no discrimination and a case cognizable by a bench of the Gram Cutcherry must be tried there, unless there has been an order to the contrary in the exercise of his judicial discretion by the Sub-divisional Magistrate or the Munsif concerned as contemplated by the latter part of S. 68. Provisions of items 1 and 2 of List II and items 1 and 2 of List III of the 7th Schedule to the Government of India Act 1935 leave no manner of doubt that the Provincial Legislature had power to pass an enactment providing for Courts in addition to those provided by the Criminal Procedure Code, to pres-

Case under J & K Act.

——Art. 14 — Classification — Money-lenders and others - Difference in—S. 7 (b) of Jammu and Kashmir Panchayat Act, 2008 -Not ultra vires.

Classification can be validly made on geographical grounds or according to the occupations of different sections of the public. Even though money-lending as a profession has not been banned either by law or Constitution, yet it cannot be denied that agriculturist communities and money lending classes have come into conflict with each other at various places.

A reference to the preamble to the Village Panchayat Act would show that the Act has been framed to make better provision for village administration. The distinction drawn between the money lending class and other people living in a locality is thus founded on what is known as an 'intelligible differentia' and therefore there is nothing in S. 7 (b) of the Panchayat Act which involves such a discrimination as would be hit by Art. 14 of the Constitution. ——Art. 14—Special procedure for trial of offences before Nyaya Panchayat—Constitutional validity - No provision for framing of charge or for right of accused to cross examine prosecution witnesses twice —No violation of Art. 14 — M. P. Panchayat Rules (2008 Smt.), R. 85—Valid.

The procedure laid down under the M B. Panchayat Rules for trial of an offence by a Nyaya Panchayat is not violative of Art. 14 of the Constitution, merely because it does not provide for the framing of charge nor gives the accused the right to cross-examine the prosecution witnesses twice. Although a charge is not required to be framed, the substance of the accusation has to be explained to the accused. This substantially fulfils the object of informing the accused of the allegations which he has to meet. As regards the right to cross-examine twice, even under Cr. P. Code although, under S. 256, a second opportunity of cross-examination is given to the accused, such a right is not found in S. 251 A.

The departure in the M. B. Panchayat Act from the ordinary procedure laid down in Cr. P. Code is neither substantial nor real. The changes are so minor that they do not really prejudice the accused in getting substantially similar trial as under the existing general law. The test to be applied is not the degree of inequality but the reality of it. AIR 1953 S C 158 and AIR 1952 S C 75 and AIR 1953 S C 287, Relied on. From another point of view it can be said that for the purpose of the Panchayat Act where the maximum punishment to which an accused can be sentenced is a fine of Rs. 100, all the cases triable by it are summons cases and since the procedure laid down in R. 85 is in accord with that provided in Chapter 20 of the Cr. P. Code for summons cases there is no discrimination whatever.

The amended rules to the Madras Village Panchayats Act. 1950. published in the Fort St. George Gazette, dated 17th September, 1952, in so far as they provided for open voting at elections to certain Panchayats, are not invalid and do not offend against any provision of the Constitution.

Where by S. 4 of the Madras Village Panchayats Act, panchayats were classified into two classes, class 1 and class 2 panchayats and certain amended rules were framed by the Government providing for the election of members by secret ballot applicable only to such panchayats as fell in Part I of the Rules, or the question whether such a distinction in the matter of voting brought about by the amendment of rules offended against the principle of equality and equal protection declared by Art. 14 of the Constitution.

Held, (1) that the classification into two classes based on population cum-income basis was not unreasonable or arbitrary.

(2) That there was no warrant for the assumption that every citizen had a fundamental right to vote secretly and any method by which open voting was advocated would not be against his fundamental rights.

Observation. — We cannot refrain from expressing the hope that the Government will be able to devise cheaper machinery for the conduct of elections by secret voting so that it may be possible to introduce that method to every panchayat irrespective of its population or income. 66 Mad L W 1051 : (1953) 2 M L J 665 : ILR (1954) Mad 201 : AIR 1954 Mad 360 (362) (Pt A) (Prs 8, 9, 10, 13) (DB).

Wide discretion has to be given to the State Government for administrative purposes. At the same time, the Legislature expects that this discretion will be fairly exercised on well-recognised principles. It is also well settled that Art. 14 can be used to strike down the law as well as executive acts performed under the colour of law if there is discrimination. From a few instances it could not be said that there had been wholesale abuse of powers and in the circumstances Ss. 4 and 5 of the Rajasthan Panchayat Act could not be held ultra vires, as hit by Art. 14 of the Constitution. Cases under West Bengal Act.

——Art. 14—West Bengal Panchayat Act (1 of 1957), Ss. 3, 5, 25 and 26—Sections do not contravene article—Constitution of India, Preamble—Interpretation of Statutes—Constitutionality of statute — Presumption as to.

In S. 3 of the Act there is no indication whatsoever as to how the Gram Sabhas are to be constituted except that it should be done for the purposes of the Act. However, the Act has been enacted under the legislative head of 'local government' In constituting units for the purpose of carrying out such an object, the problem is such that no legislature at the time of enacting a statute could deal with it completely. The idea behind such an enactment is to confer benefit upon the people, of self-government in local affairs. But the particular problem in each case must necessarily be widely divergent. It may be one of territorial area or of population. There may be a wide area with a sparse population or there may be a small area with a dense population. The population in any given area may also differ greatly in its composition. For example, there may be an industrial area or an area which is completely agricultural. It is not possible at the time of enacting a statute to deal with all such problems. Where, therefore, delegation has been made to a responsible body like the State Government, it is permissible to leave to it the task of dealing with the local problem upon its own facts. In examining the constitutionality of a statute it must be assumed that the legislature understands and appreciates the need of the people and the laws it enacts are directed to public benefit which are made manifest by experience and that the elected representatives assembled in a legislature enact laws which they consider to be reasonable for the purpose for which they are enacted. There is a presumption in favour of their constitutionality. A I R 1951 S C 41 and A I R 1951 S C 318 and A I R 1959 S C 942, Foll.

It is also not correct to say that no safeguards have been provided in respect of delegation made to the Government. An important body under the Act is the Anchal Panchayat which in its turn is composed of a number of Gram Panchayats. Under section 26 of the Act, the representation to the Anchal Panchayats has been provided upon a population basis, namely in the ratio of one member for every 250 members of the Gram Sabha. That in itself is a safeguard. If a particular Gram Sabha has got a higher population it secures greater representation in the Anchal Panchayat. Section 5 of the Act also has some safeguards, because when the area of a Gram Sabha already constituted is going to be disturbed, the views of the Gram Sabha or Sabhas concerned have to be consulted. Therefore, there is no defect in section 5. Sections 3 and 5 pass the test of constitutionality.

The power of establishing Anchal Panchayats under S. 25, though it appears unrestricted has been given to a responsible body, namely the State Government, and can be linked with the object and purpose of the Act. Thus the section is saved from the vice of excessive delegation and discrimination. The purposes for which an Anchal Panchayat is established or a Gram Sabha is constituted, are mentioned not only in the preamble of the Act, but also in the body. Since the State Government is dealing with the subject of "local self Government" which, after all, is a part of its own function, it can be depended upon to decide adequately as to what are the necessities of any particular geographical area and may be depended upon to constitute adequate and viable units which would be suitable for carrying out the functions laid down in the body of the Act, as will be capable of carrying out the objects of the Act and the purpose for which it has been enacted.

So far as section 26 is concerned, proportional representation has been introduced and thus there is no likelihood of there being any discrimination. 69 Cal W N 346.

——Art. 14 — West Bengal Panchayat Act (1 of 1957), Ss. 11 (2) and 11 (3)—Sections violate article.

Under S. 11 (2) no guiding principles have been laid down for determining how many members should be appointed for election from a Gram Sabha to the Gram Panchayat, save and except that the number should not be less than nine or more than fifteen as may be determined by the prescribed authority. Rules have been framed regulating the election of members of a Gram Sabha to constitute the Gram Panchayat, but no rule has been laid down for guidance of the "prescribed authority," regarding the fixation of the number of members for a Gram Sabha to be elected to the Gram Panchayat. The result is that a wholly arbitrary power is granted to a person who might be a minor official without laying down any guiding principle whatever. The "prescribed authority" who, is often no higher than a clerk in the Collectorate. has absolute power to determine the number, without consulting anybody and there is no appeal against his decision.

Similarly under sub-section (3) of Section 11 the prescribed authority may divide the area of a Gram Sabha into a number of constituencies, but there is only one limiting expression—"as may be convenient for the purpose of election". If this duty was conferred upon Government or a very high official, it might have been said that there is a safeguard against an arbitrary use of the power. Placed in the hands of an inspector of Panchayat, there is no safeguard at all. The words "convenient for the purpose of election" are somewhat vague. Many questions may be asked e g., convenient for whom or what? An election affects a large number of persons. A Gram Sabha may include a large territory, parts of which may be densely populated and other parts may be sparsely populated. Some areas may be near to election head-quarters and others may be in inaccessible regions and inspectors of Panchayat cannot possibly consider the convenience of all persons concerned. He has neither the resources nor the man-power to consider the convenience of an election from all these various aspects. No policy or criteria has been laid down. But the worst part of it is that he need not consult anybody and there is no appeal against his order.

The executive instructions issued by the Director of Panchayats on the subject of "fixing number of members and constituencies in Gram Panchayats' cannot possibly affect the legal position. Firstly, the Director of Panchayats appointed under S. 64, has no jurisdiction to issue instructions to the prescribed authority under section 11 (2) and (3) and these instructions are addressed to "Panchayat's supervisors" who do not happen to be the prescribed authority under either of them. On the other hand, it provides support for the view that some sort of rule must be laid down, otherwise. the power given under sub-sections (2) and (3) of section 11 becomes wholly arbitrary.

Therefore, both sub-sections (2) and (3) of section 11 suffer from the vice of excessive delegation of legislative power and are also violative of Art. 14 of the Constitution, being discriminatory and are, therefore, invalid. 69 Cal W N 346.

——Art. 14—Panchayats—West Bengal Panchayat Act (1 of 1957), S. 7—Section does not contravene article.

The right of franchise is not a common-law right. It is a statutory right which is conferred by the particular statute which creates it. Therefore, if the right of franchise is granted to a particular class of persons and not to others there is no constitutional defect. AIR 1952 S C 64, Foll.

Therefore, even if the provision of S. 7 of adopting existing electoral roll prepared for the legislative assembly deprives some persons right to vote, such provision cannot be considered as unconstitutional. 69 Cal W N 346.

43. Prevention of adulteration.

● ——Art. 14 — Prevention of Food Adulteration Rules (1955), R. 5—Validity—Rule does not contravene Art. 14 of the Constitution.

The standards of quality of the various articles of food specified in appendix B to the Prevention of Food Adulteration Rules have been prescribed by the Central Government on the advice of a Committee which included in its composition persons considered experts in the field of food technology and food analysis. In the circumstances, if a rule has to be struck down as imposing unreasonable or discriminatory standards, it could not be done merely on any a priori reasoning but only as a result of materials placed before the Court by way of scientific analysis. It is obvious that this can be done only when the party invoking the protection of Art. 14 of the Constitution makes averments with details to sustain such a plea and leads evidence to establish his allegations. In the absence of a pleading and proof of unreasonableness or arbitrariness the Court cannot accept the statement of a party as to the unreasonableness or unconstitutionality of a rule and refuse to enforce the rule as it stands merely because in the view of the party the standards are too high and for this reason the rule is unreasonable.

The test for Reichert or Reichert-Meissl value of ghee is one of the important tests for detecting adulteration with certain vegetable oils by determining the proportion of the volatile soluble acids in the ghee. The presence of the adulterant disturbs the ratio existing in normal butter fat or ghee between soluble and insoluble acids and volatile and non-volatile acids. The Reichert value of pure ghee is not constant, but is dependant on several factors—among them the breed of the cattle to be found in an area, whether the cattle are pasture fed or stall fed, and the nature of the additional feed given, the nature of terrain, the rainfall and climatic condition, etc. The feed available for the cattle is a very material and determining factor. In the absence of any pleading or proof the Court would not be justified in holding that the basis on which the Reichert value had been prescribed for the several areas in the country was not based on any rational classification and in holding that it was sufficient if any vendor of ghee in the country satisfied the minimum standard prescribed for any area under these rules. The Court would not be correct in holding that as there were areas in the country in regard to which a minimum Reichert value of 21 had been prescribed for ghee the accused who was resident of U. P. was not guilty under S. 16 of the Prevention of Food Adulteration Act as the ghee sold by him satisfied the minimum requirement of 21 Reichert value though Reichert value for U. P. was 28. It may be that the connotation of the expression 'subversive activities' in R. 3 is wide, but that is not to say that it is vague of indefinite, or wide enough to take in lawful activities as well. But, whatever the position if the words 'subversive activities' had stood by themselves, they are sufficiently qualified in the security rules to be definite. The words 'subversive activities' in the context of national security are sufficiently precise in their import to sustain a valid classification. ● ——Art. 14 — Classification — When permissible —Classification under S. 12 of Bombay Act (6 of 1947)—Held arbitrary and void after Constitution — (Public Safety—Bombay Public Security Measures Act (6 of 1947), S. 12).

(Majority View) : While Art. 14 forbids class legislation it does not forbid reasonable classification for the purposes of legislation. In order, however, to pass the test of permissible classification, two conditions must be fulfilled, namely, (i) that the classification must be founded on an intelligible differentia which distinguishes persons or things that are grouped together from others who are left out of the group and (ii) that that differentia must have a rational relation to the object sought to be achieved by the Act. What is necessary is that there must be a nexus between the basis of classification and the object of the Act.

Although the first part of S. 12 of the Bombay Act may indicate and imply a process of classification, the section, in so far as it authorises the government to direct particular "cases" to be tried by the Special Court, does not purport to proceed upon the basis of any classification at all. Further, the supposed basis of the alleged classification, namely, the fact of reference to the Special Court before the Constitution came into effect has no reasonable relation to the objects sought to be achieved by the Act. If the consideration of the security of the State or the maintenance of public order requires the application of the special procedure, there is no obvious reason why it should be applied to "cases" already referred and not to cases not yet referred at the date of the Constitution. The same consideration applies equally to both categories of cases. It is, therefore, clear that there is no nexus which connects the basis on which the supposed classification is founded with the objects of the Act, for the object of the Act is wide enough to cover both categories of "cases" and hence it is not a permissible classification. ——Art. 14 — Railway Services (Safeguarding of National Security) Rules (1954), R. 3—R. 3 is intended to cover infringement of law — Reasonable classification.

Rule 3 is loosely worded; it lacks definiteness. Nevertheless it is not necessary to strike the rule down in its entirety in spite of the omission of the necessary words. The rule is intended to cover only cases which involve an infringement of the law. To prescribe a special procedure for dealing with acts and conduct unlawful in themselves and of a kind specially dangerous to the security of the nation is defensible on the principle of reasonable classification. The Provincial Government (now the State Government) is not a "person" within the meaning of Art. 14 of the Constitution when it exercises its powers under S. 14 of the C P. and Berar Public Safety Act, 1948 or the corresponding provision, namely S. 11 of M. P. Public Security Measures Act, 1950, which has superseded the C. P. and Berar Public Safety Act, 1948. For, while exercising those powers the State Government performs one of its essential functions, the functions of maintaining the security of the State or public order. The power of nominating representatives of backward classes or commercial interests conferred on the Government by the State Legislature under S. 9-A of the Jammu and Kashmir Municipal Act, 2008, cannot be held to come in conflict with Art. 14 of the Constitution. The power of Legislature to classify citizens as backward classes or having commercial interests is not hit by Arts. 14 and 15 of the Constitution. AIR 1954 Mad 563, Rel. on. Gian Chand v. It will not be a reasonable classification but an arbitrary selection where the selection of councillors to a Municipality is left to the absolute and unfettered discretion of the executive Government by a provision in an Act with nothing to guide or control their actions. But where the legislative policy is clear and definite and as an effective method of carrying out that policy, a discretion is vested by the statute in a body of administrators or officers to make selective application of the law to certain classes or groups of persons, the statute itself cannot be condemned as a piece of discriminatory legislation. ● ——Art. 14—Recovery of municipal dues by criminal prosecution—S. 409, Trivandrum City Municipal Act and Rule 31 (2) of Part VI, Sch. II—Validity.

Section 409, Trivandrum City Municipal Act, 1116 or R. 31 (2) of Part VI, Sch. II of that Act do not in any way infringe upon the equal protection guaranteed under Art. 14.

Rule 31 (2) itself provides a restriction on the powers of the Commissioner or in any event, it gives a legislative guidance indicating under what circumstances the Commissioner may prosecute the defaulter.

Section 409 read with R. 31 discriminates the State from any other person in the matter of realising a debt. But the said act of discrimination can be justified on the basis of a reasonable classification. The classification is not arbitrary. There is reasonable basis for the classification, having regard to the obvious differences between the State and the private individual in their relation to the object underlying the impugned provisions. Article 14 forbids class legislation but does not forbid reasonable classification for the purposes of legislation. The classification however cannot be arbitrary but must rest upon some real and substantial distinction bearing a reasonable and just relation to the things in respect of which the classification is made. In other words the classification must have a reasonable relation to the object or the purpose sought to be achieved by the impugned legislation. The classification in S. 16 (1) (ix) has a reasonable relation to the object or purpose sought to be achieved and hence the disqualification prescribed by the section does not violate Art. 14. Section 41 of the Punjab Municipal Act cannot be struck down as violative of Art. 14. There is also reasonable nexus between the object to be achieved and the impugned provision of law. The power conferred on the Government cannot be described to be arbitrary or uncontrolled. If, however, a similar encroachment has been made on the land of some other person that person would be required to file a suit for its removal. A provision like S. 135 (3) violates the guarantee of equality before the law under Art. 14. Section 135 (3) absolutely debars a person if a municipal tax is demanded from him, from seeking redress from the Court. Further S. 135 (3) makes the State Government the sole judge of whether or not the provisions of the Act have been complied with. While laying down that the Magistrate should be satisfied, the law has specified the ingredients or principles which should guide him in recording his satisfaction. By a notification issued under S. 13 D (j) of U. P. This notification does not infringe the provision of Art. 14 of the Constitution on ground of discrimination. The classification embodied in the State Government's Notification is reasonable. Per Majority (H. K. Accepting the classification introduced by the legislature by Ss. 3 and 5 of the Rent Control Act of 1950 there seems to be no reason why the valuation of premises to which the Rent Control Act applies should not be governed by different principles from those which would be applicable to premises to which the Act does not apply. The principle of uniformity of assessment of rateable property has not been introduced in India and there is nothing in the language of the Calcutta Municipal Act, 1923 to justify its introduction. 61 C W N 129 : ILR (1957) 3 Cal 538 : A I R 1957 Cal 466 (474) (Pt F) (Pr 27).

——Art. 14 — Discrimination — Levy of graduated trade tax — If ultra vires — Bengal Municipal Act—(Municipalities—Bengal Municipal Act (15 of 1932), Sch. IV, Item 1).

It is a fundamental principle of discrimination that it can only apply amongst equals. If the imposition of a trade-tax is permissible there is no reason why more should not be raised from a Company which has a greater paid-up capital, and therefore presumed to have the capacity of paying more taxes, than a company which has a less paid-up capital and might be expected to have a lesser capacity for paying taxes. The levy of graduated trade-tax under Sch. The classification resulting from the definition of an abducted person cannot, in any way, be said to be arbitrary or unreasonable. No one can question the propriety of restoring abducted persons to their relatives. It cannot be said that "abducted persons" as defined by the Abducted Persons (Recovery and Restoration) Act are a sub-class chosen arbitrarily from the main class of persons in detention. The classification is reasonable and fully justified. Every person who falls within this class is to be treated alike and the Act, therefore, does not, in any way, contravene the provisions of Art. 14. ● ——Art. 14 — Section 29, Arms Act is wholly unconstitutional and void as contravening Art. 14 — Section 19 (f) is not void—Both sections are severable —Doctrine of severability — Civil and Criminal laws — No distinction. AIR 1959 All 660. Overruled. See Arms Act (1878), S. 29. 1963 (1) Cr L J 1 : AIR 1962 S C 1781.

——Art. 14 — Classification and discrimination — Arms Act, S. 29 — Validity.

Article 14 does not forbid classification absolutely. It permits classification by legislation provided two tests are answered: (1) that the classification is founded on an intelligible differentia; and (2) that the difference has a rational relation to the object sought to be achieved by the statute in question. A geographical or territorial basis is an intelligible differentia, but it is not enough. It must be shown that this geographical or territorial basis has some connection with the object of the enactment.

Section 29 of the Arms Act divides persons who may commit an offence under S. 19 (f) of the Arms Act in two distinct classes; (1) Persons who commit the offence within that area of the country in which S. 32, Cl 2. of Act (31 of 1860) was in force at the time when the Arms Act came into force and (2) persons committing the same kind of offence in the rest of the country. It cannot be suggested that the situation in the area south of the river Jamuna has in any manner been different from that in the area on the north of the river. The discrimination made in S. 29 of the Arms Act between two classes of offenders therefore contravenes Art. 14 of the Constitution. That part of S. 29 which debars one part of the State from claiming the advantage must consequently be held to have become void after the enforcement of the Constitution under Art. 13 of it. 1959 All L J 464 : 1959 All W R (HC) 356 : 1959 Cr L J 1253 : 1959 All Cr R 283 : ILR (1959) 1 All 540 : AIR 1959 All 660 (662, 663, 664) (Prs 11, 12, 13, 23) (DB).

Section 29, Arms Act, is ultra vires because it offends the provisions of Art. 14 of the Constitution of India. It tends to create distinction on territorial basis. Bar Councils Act.

——Art. 14 — Bar Councils Act, S. 4 (3) — Validity — Power of reservation — If arbitrary.

The provisions of sub-s. (3) of S. 4 of the Bar Councils Act which confer a power on the High Court to make provisions for reservation of seats for certain classes of lawyers, are not themselves discriminatory. The provision is not open to challenge on the ground that it confers an arbitrary or a naked discretion on High Court. The discretion is conferred on the highest judicial authority in the State which can be trusted to exercise it judiciously. 61 Bom L R 976: 1959 Nag L J 350: AIR 1960 Bom 83 (85) (Pt B) (Pr 7) (DB).

——Art. 14 — Bar Councils Act — Validity.

Where the Legislature brings into existence a political institution and makes any provisions concerning its constitution or composition the provisions of the law which bring that institution into existence cannot be challenged under Art. 14 of the Constitution, on the ground that the various interests concerned are unequally represented thereon.

The Bar Council is an institution which is the creature of the Act creating it. It confers a right on Advocates among other things, to elect representatives from their own class to the Bar Council. This is neither a fundamental nor a common law right. The right of being a member of the Bar Council is also not a fundamental or a common law right, but is one conferred by the Act alone. ——Art. 14 — Reasonable classification—Bar Councils Act, S. 4 (3) — Validity.

The Legislature in reserving seats for certain classes of advocates, has not done something which is prohibited by Art. 14 of the Constitution. What is prohibited by the Article is denial of any special privilege by reason of birth, creed or the like, and also the equal subjection of all individuals and classes to the ordinary law of the land. Making reasonable classifications by law is not a denial of equal protection. It is only where there is no reasonable basis for a classification that legislation making such classification may be declared discriminatory.

In the provisions of S. 4 of the Bar Councils Act there are two bases for classification. This differentiation is not based on grounds of race, religion, sex, etc., but solely on the ground of qualifications. The classification which the State has made is not arbitrary, and there appears to be a reasonable basis for it. 61 Bom L R 976 : 1959 Nag L J 350 : AIR 1960 Bom 83 (86, 87) (Pt D) (Prs 12, 13, 14, 16, 18) (DB).

Bihar Barahia Tal Lands (Declaration of Possession) Act.

——Art. 14 — Equality — Classification — Basis of — Bihar Barahia Tal Lands (Declaration of Possession) Act (26 of 1950), S. 3 — Validity of.

The equality clause of the Constitution, i e., Art. 14, does not forbid the State to classify the citizens into groups and legislate for them. But the classification must not be unreasonable or arbitrary. A proper classification must always rest upon some difference and must bear a reasonable and just relation to the things in respect of which it is proposed; a classification made without any substantial basis should be regarded as invalid. Judged by this test, S. 3 of Bihar Act (26 of 1950) offends against Art. 14 of the Constitution; there is a complete denial of equality before the law to the landlord governed by the Act. AIR 1951 SC 41. Ref. ILR 30 Pat 1085: AIR 1952 Pat 166 (175) (Prs 43, 45, 46) (DB).

——Arts. 14, 19 and 31 and Sch. VII. List II, Entry 65 and List III. Entry 13 — Scope of — Bihar Barahia Tal Lands (Declaration of Possession) Act, 1950—Validity of.

It is clear from Art. 19 (1)(f) and Art. 31 (1)(2) and (5) of the Constitution that no property can be acquired or taken possession, nor any restraint, reasonable or otherwise, imposed on the proprietary right of any person in the interest of any individual or individuals. The State cannot, in other words, deprive a person of his property right or impose a restraint on his right of enjoyment to benefit an individual or individuals. If, therefore, by any legislative enactment property of A is transferred to B, such enactment cannot be valid and constitutional and must be ignored as if it did not exist, because the Constitution does not empower the legislature to make such a law.

There is no provision in Bihar Act (26 of 1950) which can be said to be a law relating to "arbitration", falling within Entry 13 of List III of the Seventh Schedule to the Constitution; nor can it be said to be a legislation on the topic of land covered by Entry 65 of List II of the Seventh Schedule. Although it may be said to be enactment concerning rights of persons, it does not concern the land itself. The Act, in substance and spirit, undertakes to take the property of one person and transfer it to another. Such a statute cannot be said to be a law at all, much less a law relating to land. The Act, further directly infringes the fundamental rights guaranteed to every citizen by Part III of the Constitution to acquire, hold and dispose of property and other rights. Though generally the legislature has plenary power to legislate with respect to any matter within its own ambit, its enactment must be held to be incompetent and void if in exercise of that power it directly affects any right guaranteed by Part III and transgresses the limitations within which the legislation is permissible under the provisions of that part. The provisions of S. 2 of the Bihar Act are not within the limits imposed by Art. 19 (5) of the Constitution, if it be a legislation with regard to land, it offends the provisions of Art. 19(1)(f) read with Art. 19(5) and is in the nature of an exproprietary legislation The Act which is not in conformity with Arts. 14, 19(1)(f) and 19(5) of the Constitution must therefore be held to be and declared ultra vires the State Legislature.

Though the Act is void and unconstitutional. it cannot be said that it is not a legislation relating to "land". (1947) F C R 77: A I R 1950 S C 27; A I R 1950 S C 69; AIR 1951 S C 118; 55 Cal W N 433. Ref. I L R 30 Pat 1085 : A I R 1952 Pat 166 (172, 174) (Prs 28, 39).

Companies Acts.

● ——Arts. 14, 19 (1) (f) and (g) and 301 — Banking Companies Act (1949), Ss. 38 (1) and (3) (b) (iii) — Banking Companies —Special law dealing with winding up—Validity — Whether discriminatory—Provisions making Reserve Bank sole judge to decide whether affairs of banking company were being conducted prejudicially to interests of depositors and making it mandatory for High Court to order winding up when applicable was made by Reserve Bank — No violation of Arts. 14, 19 (1) (f) and (g) and 301.

Held, (Per Majority) : (Kapur and Shah, JJ., contra) that Ss. 38 (1) and 3 (b) (iii) of the Banking Companies Act were neither discriminatory nor unreasonable and could not be declared void under Arts. 14 and 19 of the Constitution. Since the provisions were manifestly in the public interest, they could not also be declared ultra vires under Art. 301, because they were protected by Art. 302 of the Constitution.

Re: Art. 14.—A wide difference exists between banking companies and non-banking companies. There being a very clear cut and valid classification, the different procedure provided for in Ss. 38(1) and (3) (b) (iii) cannot be said to be discriminatory. It cannot be said that the Reserve Bank would act arbitrarily from case to case. If the Reserve Bank were to act mala fide, the Central Government and in the last resort, the Courts, will be there to intervene. In this view, the provisions of Ss. 38 (1) and (3) (b) (iii) cannot be said to be a breach of Art. 14 of the Constitution.

The winding up of a banking company takes place before the High Court and under the process of law. The momentous decision whether a winding up order should be made or not is left to the Reserve Bank to which alone the judicial process is excluded and the Court merely passes an order according to the Reserve Bank's opinion. In leaving this decision to the Reserve Bank, the law cannot be said to offend the principles of natural justice. The law thus made is justified on the ground of expediency arising from the respective opportunities for action. The reasonableness of such a law in the total circumstances will have to be made out to the ultimate satisfaction of the Supreme Court. It would be impossible for the Court to reach a conclusion unguided by the Reserve Bank if immediate action was demanded. The law which gives the same position to the opinion of the Reserve Bank cannot be challenged as unreasonable. A I R 1961 Ker 268, Affirmed.

Per Kapur and Shah, JJ., contra :

Section 38 is an unreasonable restriction on the right of a banking company to carry on its business and is therefore unconstitutional. The vice of the impugned provision lies in (a) the power vested in the Reserve Bank to apply to the High Court for an order, winding up a bank exercisable solely on its subjective satisfaction, and (b) the obligation imposed by law upon the High Court to make the order of winding up without at any time enquiring whether the conditions on which the application is found to do in truth exist.

By S. 38 (1) (b) read with Cl. (iii), the Court is commanded to lend its aid in defeating a fundamental freedom of banking companies. The impugned provision makes the Reserve Bank the complainant and judge in its own cause which is an absolute negation of the rule of law.

In this view the deprivation of the right to resort to Court is an unreasonable restriction. It is true that in the instant case an appeal to the Supreme Court has not been taken away but what is left is a wholly ineffective right of appeal. Joseph Kuruvilla Vellukunnel v. ——Art. 14—Banking Companies Act (1949), S. 49-A —Validity — Not discriminatory under Art. 14.

The object of the Banking Companies Act, 1949, is to control the business of banking in the paramount interests of the depositors and the various provisions of the Act, are all enacted with that purpose in view.

The classification of a banking company, the Reserve Bank of India, the State Bank of India and the Co-operative Bank also functioning under another Act as not coming within the bar of S. 49-A is perfectly rational and is based on an intelligible differentia. The banking company referred to therein will be subject to the provisions of the Companies Act and also the provisions of the Banking Companies Act. Therefore those banking companies will be subject to control under the various provisions of the Act designed to safeguard the interests of the depositing public. The Legislature has been treating the institutions referred to in S. 49-A as a class by themselves and have been dealing with them as such. Therefore the classification of those institutions is rational and based on intelligible differentia.

Hence S. 49-A, Banking Companies Act, does not suffer from any infirmity under Art. 14 of the Constitution. The power of exemption vested in the Central Government under S. 49-A of the Act though a discretionary power, cannot be considered to be necessarily a discriminatory power and the abuse of power by the Government will not be lightly assumed. ——Art. 14—Andhra Court Fees and Suits Valuation Act (7 of 1956), Sch. II Art. 3 (iii) (A) (2) (b)—Validity — Article not discriminatory and obnoxious to Art. 14 of Constitution.

Article 3 (iii) (2) (b) of Sch. ——Arts. 14 and 229 — Scope — Andhra Court Fees and Suits Valuation Act (1956)—Validity—Prescription of Court-Fees in regard to Writ petitions — If violates Arts. 229 and 14— Power of State Legislature.

Where the competence of the State Legislature to prescribe a Court-fee of Rs. 100 in regard to writ petitions is questioned on the grounds that this law is not in conformity with the Constitution in that it violates Arts. 229 and 14 of the Constitution and that it is not also within the sphere of the State Legislature which could only enact laws in regard to administration of justice :

Held, Art. 14 of the Constitution prohibits a State from denying to any person equality before law or equal protection of laws within the territory of India. While it forbids class legislation it does not prevent a legislature from making a reasonable classification. A complaint could be made only if persons pursuing the same remedy, i. e., instituting the same category of proceedings are treated differently in regard to the payment of court-fee etc. It is for the Legislature to decide as to the rates of fees leviable in regard to various matters taken to a Court of Law.

Power has been conferred specifically on State Legislatures by Entry 3 in List II to make laws in regard to fees in all Courts in the State. (1959) 1 Andh W R 85 : AIR 1959 Andh Pra 271 (273) (Prs 4, 5, 6) (DB).

● ——Art. 14 — Discrimination — Entry 16, Sch. I, Bombay Court Fees Act of 1959—Validity.

A person who applies to the Court under S. 66 (2) of the Income-tax Act on the one hand and a person who applies to the Court under Art. 226 of the Constitution or S. 45 of the Specific Relief Act cannot be regarded as persons similarly situated. The relief in the two cases is not the same. The jurisdictions would be different and the nature of the reliefs claimed in the two cases is also different. The fact that the effect of the remedy may be the same is not a determinative consideration. Hence entry 16 in Sch. I of the Court-fees Act of 1959 cannot be said to contravene Art. 14 of the Constitution on the ground that the provision discriminates between the same class of litigants viz., persons who ask for relief only for mandamus and whose case falls under Sch. II (1) (f) of the Court-fees Act and on the other hand those who apply to Court under S. 66 (2) of the Income-tax Act. C. N. Bros. v. There is a reasonable basis of classification inasmuch as the State takes over the superintendence when the Court of Wards Act is applied to the estate of a particular jagirdar. In order to sustain a plea of discrimination based upon Art. 14, a party will have to satisfy the Court about two things, namely (1) that he had been treated differently from others and (2) that he has been differently treated from persons similarly circumstanced without any reasonable basis. AIR 1964 S C 1179, Rel. on; AIR 1961 S C 552, Distinguished.

Even in respect of an undertaking which is purchased by exercise of the option under S. 6, as provided under sub-s (4) of S. 7-A of the Electricity Act, the purchase price shall be the value as determined as per sub-ss. (1) and (2) of S. 7-A. But in respect of such undertakings, by virtue of the proviso to sub-s. (4) of S. 7-A, the licensee will get an additional amount, not exceeding 20% on the value, on account of compulsory purchase. That proviso does not apply to a case of sale under S. 5 (1). Therefore, the difference in the matter of computation of the market value between an undertaking which is purchased by exercising the option under S. 6 and an undertaking which is directed to be sold under S. 5, consists in the fact that in the latter class of cases the licensee is not given a right to anything over and above the market value fixed under sub-ss. (1) and (2) of S. 7-A. In the Electricity Act there is a broad distinction between persons whose undertakings are purchased by virtue of the option, and persons whose undertakings are to be sold by virtue of the revocation of the license. There is the further fact that among persons similarly situated namely whose undertakings are directed to be sold after revocation of the license, no discrimination at all is made. Obviously the legislature did not want the licensee whose license is revoked under S. 4 (1) to be placed on a par, in the matter of payment of additional amount upto 20% with licensees whose undertaking is compulsorily purchased by exercise of option. Being a compulsory purchase this additional amount is a solatium. Otherwise a licensee can commit wilful default and force the Government to take action under S. 5 (1) and claim full compensation. That is not the intention of the Legislature and the distinction is based on a rational basis. Therefore, Ss. 4 and 5 of the Act are not violative of Art. 14 of the Constitution. 'Hedging in cotton trading like insurance and banking' requires experience and stability; also, it so vitally affects the welfare of a large section of the people of India and India's economic stability in world markets that it cannot be lightly entrusted to inexperienced hands. Where therefore the Textile Commissioner in his discretion exempts certain Association which had been dealing with such contracts for twenty years from the prohibition under the Cotton Control Order, 1950; a recently formed association cannot 'complain that it is discriminated against within the meaning of Art. 14 of the Constitution Further, when the two associations cannot be be said to be on a footing of equality no question of discrimination under Art. 14 can arise. ——Art. 14 — Reasonable classification — Essential Commodities Act (1955), S. 3—Order, dated 11th November, 1957—Validity of.

There can be a valid classification of distributors as co-operative societies and other dealers. The Co-operative Societies are comprised of members who are tobacco cultivating ryots. While in the case of the Co-operative Society, profits would ultimately go to the members, in the case of a private dealer profits would go into his own pocket. There is therefore a reasonable basis in the order dated 11th November, 1957 for the classification, which has a rational relation to the object sought to be achieved the object being in this case the promotion of the interests of the cultivating ryots. The classification is not bad as contravening the provisions of Art. 14 of the Constitution. 1958 Andh L T 587.

——Arts. 14, 19 (1) (g) and (6) and 226—Validity of order directing retail dealers in cloth to carry on business through co-operative societies — (Himachal Pradesh Cotton Cloth Dealers Licencing Order, 1948).

The petitioner was doing cloth business under a a retail dealer's licence issued under the Himachal Pradesh Cotton Cloth Dealers Licensing Order. Subsequently, the petitioner and other retail dealers were informed by order of the State Authority concerned that the work of distribution of cloth had been transferred to Co operative Societies and in future they will not be permitted to do the business unless they joined one of the existing Co-operative Societies or formed one in accordance with law.

Held (i) that as the right of doing cloth business was still capable of being exercised despite the order, there was no total deprivation of the right but only a restriction in the exercise thereof.

(ii) that the petitioner could not ask the Court to adjudicate upon his rights on the basis that the cloth situation in the country had improved.

(iii) that the order did not contravene Art. 14 and the petitioner was not denied equality before the law.

(iv) that the restriction imposed by the order was both reasonable and in the interest of the general public within the meaning of Art. 19 (6).

(v) that the petitioner was not entitled to any relief under Art. 226 even though the power in exercise of which the restriction was imposed may have been capable of being exercised unconstitutionally, unless it was shown that in fact it was exercised arbitrarily. AIR 1953 H P 41 (45, 47, 48, 49) (Pt C) (Prs 20, 21, 27, 29, 30, 31, 33).

——Arts. 14 and 132 (1)—Equality before law—Preferential treatment to "consumer quota holders" — Cotton Textiles (Control) Order (1948), Cl. 30.

There is nothing in the Constitution which precludes a classification even by bodies other than the legislature. Having regard to the wide definition of "law" in Art. 13 (3) as including any rule, regulation and notification having the force of law, it is obvious that any method of distribution which the State adopts in pursuance of a Control Order should not contravene the provisions of Art. 14. There is nothing in the classification adopted in the All India Yarn Distribution Scheme which contravenes the principles laid down in 1951-2 M L J 141 It is true that one way of distribution among several consumers is by adopting the pro rata basis. But that basis need not always be the most equitable basis. This basis has been to a certain extent adopted so far as the new entrants are concerned. But consumers of long standing who had, during the normal years and during the first control period, managed to obtain standing contracts directly with the mills and who had been more or less continuously in the trade were apparently considered to deserve a preferential treatment. Such a view is not unfair or discriminatory. It cannot also be said that this basis has no reasonable and just relation to the object sought to be attained, namely, a proper distribution of yarn. Thus the preferential treatment accorded to "consumer quota holders" cannot be held to be discriminatory and in contravention of the principle underlying Art. 14, especially taking into consideration the fact that the total number of bales allotted to these "consumer quota holders" which includes consumers of different classes is only 1850 out of the aggregate allotment to the Madras State of about 16000 to 18000 bales. Leave to appeal to the Supreme Court was granted under Art. 132 (1) of the Constitution, as this involved a substantial question of law concerning the interpretation of the Constitution. 1951-2 M L J 141, Foll.; 338 U S 604, Rel. on. ——Art. 14— Equality before law — Exclusion from list of "Consumer quota holders."

Where some of the master-weavers, though they were getting supplies direct from the mills during the basic period of 1940-42, were excluded from the list of "consumer quota holders" because they had not been doing business in the first control period, there is nothing unreasonable in this policy of the Government. ——Arts. 14, 19 — Rajasthan Gram and Barley (Regulation of Distribution) Order (1964)— Validity —Order does not contravene Arts. 14 and 19.

Under the Rajasthan Gram and Barley (Regulation of Distribution) Order, 1964 such arbitrary powers as would be violative of Art. 14 of the Constitution have not been placed in the hands of the State Government. In the first place as the power of giving permission in writing has been given to the State Government itself and not to any subordinate authority, the Court cannot readily presume the abuse of power and secondly the exercise of discretion by the State Government is to be guided by the policy behind the Essential Commodities Act and the Order, viz., that of maintaining the available supplies of gram and barley in the State of Rajasthan. The order does not contravene Art. 14. Article 19 of the Constitution has also not been infringed. The restrictions have been imposed by law and as the Act declares it has been passed in the interest of the general public. I L R (1965) 15 Raj 684 : 1965 Raj L W 498 : AIR 1966 Raj 105 (DB).

——Art. 14 — Ss. 23 (1) (a) and 23D of Foreign Exchange Regulation Act violate Art. 14 and are ultra vires.

The power which is vested in the Director of Enforcement under Ss. 23 and 23D of the Foreign Exchange Regulation Act as modified up to 1-7-59, is unfettered and enables him to pick and choose one offender out of a number of similarly circumstanced offenders for being proceeded against under one or other of the two modes now obtainable. The opportunities open to an offender to defend himself must vary according as he is tried by a Court or is proceeded against by the Director. For the same offence an offender may only be fined whereas another may be punished with imprisonment as well as with fine. Section 23 (1) (a), therefore, offends against Art. 14 and is ultra vires the Constitution. That being the position, the relative provisions of S. 23D must also be condemned. Insolvency Acts.

——Art. 14 — Discrimination — S. 9 (e), Presidency Towns Insolvency Act — If void — Difference in S. 6 (e), Provincial Insolvency Act — Reasonable classification.

The fact that under Cl. (e) of S. 9 of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act, it is sufficient cause for adjudicating a person insolvent if his property remains under attachment for a period of twenty-one days, whereas under S. 6 (e) of the Provincial Insolvency Act the attached property of the debtor has to be sold in execution of a decree for the payment of money before the transaction can be considered to be an act of insolvency, would not amount to discrimination, and a denial of equality before the law and the benefit of equal laws to persons residing in or carrying on business within the presidency towns. The entire economical structure and the tempo of life in Presidency Towns (Madras) and those outside are different. The distinction between the provisions is therefore one which can be treated to a just, rational and reasonable classification. Section 9 (e), Presidency Towns Insolvency Act is not therefore ultra vires on the ground that it is hit by Art. 14. 70 Mad L W 367 : A I R 1957 Mad 403 (404, 405) (Pt C) (Prs 2, 4) (DB).

——Art. 14 — Scope — Provincial Insolvency Act, S. 44—Validity—Preferential treatment—Sovereign prerogative.

The Provincial Insolvency Act has been enacted by the Provincial Legislature in exercise of powers analogous to police powers. The prerogative of the Sovereign to preferential treatment over all other creditors has been recognised from early times. In India the priority of taxes in bankruptcy is not predicated upon the prerogative of the Crown, but depends exclusively on statutory provisions.

In S. 44 of the Provincial Insolvency Act, the Legislature has classified debts for the purpose of priority and has accorded a favoured position to debts due to the State. That section is designed to carry out a public purpose ; it operates uniformly on all persons in the State; it is applicable to all persons in like circumstances; it does not subject individuals to an arbitrary power; it does not discriminate against some and in favour of others. A statutory provision of this kind cannot be regarded as violative of the constitutional provision relating to equal protection of the laws. ——Arts. 14, 20—Punjab Jail Manual, Paras. 571 to 575 — Provisions for separation of prisoners for jail management—Not unconstitutional.

Para. 575 of the Jail Manual is not repugnant to Arts. 14 or 20 of the Constitution and is not unconstitutional. It is true that Paras. 571 to 575, which provide for separation of individual prisoners for purposes of jail management, may be abused in a given case, but that by itself does not necessarily lead to the conclusion that they are liable to be struck down as unconstitutional. Para. 575 of the Jail Manual does not place anyone under any disadvantage arbitrarily or in circumstances which do not admit of a reasonable justification for a different treatment. This para. rests on differences, which are pertinent to the subject in respect of which the classification has been made in it. Prima facie, this appears to be reasonable and also necessary. 63 Punj L R 586 : 1961 (2) Cr L J 687 (2) : ILR (1961) 2 Punj 693 : AIR 1961 Punj 524 (527) (Pt B) (Prs 8, 9).

Jammu and Kashmir Enemy Agents Ordinance.

● ——Art. 14—Jammu and Kashmir Enemy Agents Ordinance No. 8 of S. 2005, is not discriminatory—It does not violate Art. 14.

The Jammu and Kashmir Enemy Agents Ordinance is not discriminatory and therefore it is not violative of Art. 14 of the Constitution. The 'enemy' and 'enemy agent' as described in S. 2 of the Ordinance are a clearly defined class of persons and give rise to a reasonable classification for the purpose of the Ordinance. The classification is reasonable and is founded on an intelligible differentia which distinguished persons brought under the Ordinance from others. AIR 1958 S C 538, Foll. Rehman Shagoo v. State of J. & K., 1960 Cr L J 126 : 1960 S C J 172 : ILR (1959) Punj 1955 : (1960) 1 S C R 680 : AIR 1960 S C 1 (4, 5) (Pt A) (Pr 9).

● — Art. 14 — Reasonable classification — Jammu and Kashmir Enemy Agents Ordinance—Validity of.

Article 14 forbids class legislation but does not forbid reasonable classification for the purpose of legislation. The mere fact that there is difference in procedure in the Criminal P. C. and in the Jammu and Kashmir Enemy Agents Ordinance is a matter of no consequence if it is found that there is valid classification. A discrimination not only by the substantive law but by a law of procedure is also condemnable.

An examination of the provisions of the Ordinance reveals that the classification is based on a perfectly intelligible principle which has reasonable relation to the object intended to be achieved by the Ordinance. Even assuming that the Ordinance has given a discretion to the Government to make a selection out of those persons who committed offences under S. 3 of the Ordinance the discretion of the Government would not be uncontrolled or unguided. Rehman Shagoo v. The State of Jammu and Kashmir, 1958 Cr L J 885 : AIR 1958 J & K 29 (35, 36) (Pt F) (Prs 31, 33, 34, 35) (FB).

——Arts. 14, 19 (1) (d) and (e), 20, 21—Revenue Recovery Act (1890), Ss. 3 (2), 5 — Constitutional validity—Power of Revenue Authorities to determine arrears due and issue certificate—Whether absolute and uncontrolled—No violation of Arts. 14, 19, 20 and 21.

S. 3 (2) and S. 5 of the Revenue Recovery Act, are not ultra vires as offending against Art. 19 (1) (d) and (e) and Arts. 20, 21 and 14 of the Constitution.

The proceedings contemplated both under S. 3 and S. 5 of the Act are proceedings in the nature of execution or realization proceedings and, therefore, the Collector in issuing the certificate or in realizing the amount stated therein, acts as an executing authority, which cannot go behind the certificate or re-open such a certificate. It is for this reason that the contents of the certificate have been made conclusive.

What is made conclusive is the amount found due from the accounts maintained by the officer, or where the amount is fixed by the Collector, from the revenue accounts, as the case may be. Neither S. 3 nor S. 5 of the Act confers any power either upon the Collector of the District or a public officer, other than the Collector, to ascertain or fix the amount due by a defaulter as arrears of land revenue.

The right of fixation of such amount either by the public officer or the Collector, as the case may be, therefore cannot be challenged under S. 3 or S. 5 of the Revenue Recovery Act. It would have to be challenged under some other provision—either under the Land Revenue Code or under the Forest Act where the debt due is on account of the forest produce.

A certificate issued under S. 3 of the Revenue Recovery Act can be challenged by a suit as provided for by S. 4 of that Act and in such a suit the plaintiff would be entitled to challenge his liability either wholly or in part, although the certificate issued under S. 3 of the Act is made conclusive in respect of the contents thereof. An order passed under the provisions of Chapter 11 of the Land Revenue Code can also be challenged in appeal as provided for by Ss. 203 and 204 of the Code. It is true that in a case falling under S. 5 of the Revenue Recovery Act, it would be the public officer, other than the Collector, who would ascertain and fix the amount due by a defaulter. It is also true that under S. 149 of the Land Revenue Code, a statement of account certified by the Collector is made conclusive about the contents thereof. But this fact alone cannot render either S. 3 or S. 5 of the Revenue Recovery Act ultra vires.

S. 3 and S. 5 of the Revenue Recovery Act must be looked at from the point of view of the object of that Act. The object of the Act is to make better provision for the realization of arrears of land revenue without having recourse to protracted litigation. It is from that point of view that the Act provides, just as S. 149 of the Land Revenue Code provides, that a certificate or a statement of account certified by the Collector showing a certain amount due would be conclusive. Thus a special rule of evidence giving conclusiveness to these documents is provided for by the Act. Such a provision in no sense can be said to be in violation of the subject's fundamental rights. In a sense, when a subject enters into a contract with the Government and the subject-matter of the contract is one touching the land revenue or the arrears of land revenue, it can be said that in view of these provisions that he had agreed that the accounts maintained either by the public officer, other than the Collector, or the Collector, shall be conclusive and binding upon him. In this sense, no question that such a provision is ultra vires as offending against any of the fundamental rights of the subject can arise. Yet notwithstanding the conclusiveness of accounts and the certificate, there is a right to sue under S. 4 of the Revenue Recovery Act and a right of appeal under Ss. 203 and 204 of the Land Revenue Code. It is no doubt true that if a suit were to be filed as contemplated by S. 4 of the Revenue Recovery Act, the suitor would have to deposit an amount equivalent to the arrears of land revenue and to that extent his right to sue has been hampered. But such provisions are found in several revenue and fiscal Acts. It is, therefore, not possible to accede to the contention that the powers conferred on the Collector in issuing a certificate are unbridled or absolute or that the sections impugned are bad because of any usurpation of power by the executive officers or that these sections are in any sense in violation of Art. 19 of the Constitution.

The detention and arrest of the defaulter by reason of the powers conferred upon the public officer or the Collector, as the case may be, do not violate Art. 19 (1) (d) or Art. 21 of the Constitution. There can be no violation of a fundamental right under Art. 21, where there are statutory provisions under which a warrant of arrest can be issued for the recovery of arrears due to Government and where such provisions constitute a procedure established by law.

Nor does the authority of the public officer or the Collector to ascertain the arrears amount to discrimination within the meaning of Art. 14. AIR 1956 S C 20, Foll. (1962) 3 Guj L R 666.

In fixing the rates the slab system was adopted under which the rate of surcharge progressively increased from two annas to eight annas on each rupee of the land revenue paid. ——Art. 14—Madras Revenue Recovery Act (2 of 1864), S. 52—Validity.

The clause in S. 52, namely, "and all sums due to the Provincial Government including compensation for any loss or damage sustained by them in consequence of a breach of contract" discriminates the State from any other person in the matter of realising a debt. But the said act of discrimination can be justified on the basis of a reasonable classification. The impugned clause does not preclude the affected party from getting his rights decided in a Court of law. S. 59 of the Act saves such right. The provisions of Ss. 52 and 59 attempt to reconcile the paramount interests and duties of the State with the just rights of private individuals. The classification therefore is not arbitrary. There is reasonable basis for the classification, having regard to the obvious differences between the State and the private individual in their relation to the object underlying the impugned legislation. The classification is based upon differences pertinent to the subject in respect of, and the purpose for which it is made. 69 Mad L W 678 : (1956) 2 M L J 185 : AIR 1957 Mad 23 (24) (Pt A) (Pr 4).

——Art. 14—Coal Mines Regulations (1957), Reg. 25 (3)—Reg. 25 (3) is not ultra vires.

The argument that the discretionary power under Regulation 25 (3) can be abused or can be exercised mala fide in a discriminatory manner by the Government, cannot lead to the conclusion that Regulation 25 (3) is ultra vires Art. 14 of the Constitution of India. All discretionary orders whether judicial or administrative are capable of being abused but that by itself will be no ground to strike down the power entrusted to the Central Government under Regulation 25 (3). The presumption is that such power will be exercised in a responsible manner. It is now well settled that mala fide or illegal exercise of discretionary powers—whether judicial or administrative—can be struck down by the Courts under certain circumstances. That by itself is ample check on the arbitrary exercise of such a power. AIR 1963 Punj 198 (201) (Pt C) (Pr 7).

——Art. 14 — Discrimination — Rajasthan Minor Mineral Concession Rules, R. 57 (2)—Validity.

Rule 57 (2) makes no difference between one quarryman and another quarryman in the mineral area and it can hardly be said under the circumstances that there is any discrimination in the rule. It cannot, therefore, be held that R 57 (2) as it stands is hit by Art. 14. 1958 Raj L W 335 : ILR (1958) 8 Raj 541.

——Art. 14 — Rajasthan Minor Mineral Concession Rules (1955), Sch. I—Constitutional validity.

Though the classification adopted in Schedule 1 of the Rajasthan Rules may not stand the test of being a perfectly logical or scientific classification it really does not prescribe different rates of royalty for the same type or quality of goods but fixes different rates of royalty for different types or quality of goods. There is nothing inherently wrong in such a basis of classification, and in any case, it cannot be held that the different rates of royalty are hit by the doctrine of discrimination. ILR (1958) 8 Raj 311 : AIR 1958 Raj 140 (142, 143) (Pt C) (Pr 8) (DB).

——Art. 14—Equality before law—Charging royalty at different rates in different mines — (Rajasthan Mineral Concession Rules (1954), Sch. I).

Why one rate of royalty may be charged in one quarry and another rate in another may be due to so many factors, e. g., quality of stone, distance from railhead, difficulty of communications and so on. Therefore so long as different rates are not charged for products of the same quarry or mine, there can be no question of the application of Art. 14, to Sch. I of the Rajasthan Mineral Concession Rules. I L R (1958) 8 Raj 782.

——Arts. 14 and 303 — Rajasthan Minor Mineral Concession Rules (1955)—Royalty on stones quarried in Rajasthan State—Different rates in several parts of State—Royalty collected on such stones exported out of State—Charge and collection not valid.

Royalty is, inter alia, a charge by the owner of minerals from those to whom he gives the concession to remove them, and the charge is on production, the rate being fixed according to weight. Different rates of royalty as between several parts of the same State if fixed in a contract by the Government are hit by Art. 14 of the Constitution, as they deny equality before law to citizens of various parts of the State. And, further, so far as exports of stone outside Rajasthan are concerned, an extra amount charged as royalty on the stones quarried in the State is nothing more or less than export duty, and the State cannot now charge it after the 1st of April, 1955, the date on which the customs duty has come to an end in all Part B States. Rule 57-A does not offend Art. 14 of the Constitution as it contains a reasonable and rational classification. ——Art. 14—Reasonable classification — Classification as stage carriages and tourist buses—Validity.

Some of the stage carriages are classed as tourist buses whereas others are classed as stage carriages. This is a reasonable classification which is permissible and there is no discrimination made among the same class of stage carriages. Classification has been made among stage carriages on the basis of the year of manufacture with a view to ensure their reliability and efficiency and under Art. 14 of the Constitution reasonable classification is permissible. It cannot be said that the State Government, on whom the power was conferred by S. 44 (5) of the Motor Vehicles Act, to regulate and authorise the delegation of powers was left without any guidance by the Act itself. The functions entrusted to the statutory authority, the State Transport Authority or the Regional Transport authority, are specified by the Act. The Tribunals themselves are creatures of the Act. Section 44 (5) empowered only the Regional Transport Authority to delegate its power. But the limitation set upon the exercise of the power is that such a delegation must be authorised by the State Government and should be subject to such limitations as may be prescribed by the rules made by the State Government under the rule-making power conferred on it by S. 68 (1) of the Act. 70 Mad L W 122 : (1957) Mad L J (Cri) 129 : (1957) 1 Mad L J 314 : ILR (1957) Mad 461 : AIR 1957 Mad 387 (390) (Pt C) (Pr 12) (DB).

——Art. 14—Equality before law—Essentials.

The question of constitutional invalidity under Art. 14 must be limited only to cases where there is actual discrimination in practice and not merely the possibility of discrimination in future. Where there is no such actual discrimination the constitutional validity of the law cannot be questioned, the principle being that the doctrine of severability includes severability in enforcement of the law. It cannot be said that the principle of equal protection has been denied to the Insurance Company by S. 96, Motor Vehicles Act. The purpose of giving facility to an injured party in a running down accident secured in Chapter 8 including S. 96 is not a restriction on the rights of the insurers who have been given a right to intervene in the suit filed by the injured person against the assured which right they did not have under general law and by giving them a right to avoid the liability on certain grounds mentioned in the section. It cannot, therefore, be held that S. 96, Motor Vehicles Act, violates Art. 14 of the Constitution. 61 Punj L R 683 : I L R (1959) Punj 714 : A I R 1959 Punj 297 (302, 303) (Pt F) (Pr 17) (DB).

Passport Act.

——Arts. 14, 19 and 226—Refusal to issue passport—(Passport Act (1920), S. 5) — (Passport Rules (1950).)

In India there is no statutory provision which prohibits a person from leaving India without a passport. Nor is there any provision forbidding an Indian citizen from entering India without a passport.

It is obvious that both the Passport Act and rules made thereunder relate to passports in connection with the entry of a person into India. The Act is quite clear on the point and it is manifestly designed to prevent persons from entering into India without a passport, and the rules cannot enlarge the scope of the Act. There is no provision for the grant or issue of passports to persons leaving India.

Since under the law at present, the State cannot prevent a person from leaving for any country on the ground that he does not hold a passport endorsed for that country or prevent citizen from re-entering India after travelling to foreign countries except with a passport the question of invoking Art. 19 (1) (d) cannot arise.

A passport is not a document enabling a citizen of any country to enter that country. Nor is it a document under which a citizen of a country is permitted to leave the country. By its terms it requests and requires in the name of the Sovereign, all those whom it may concern, to allow the bearer to pass freely without let or hindrance and to afford him every assistance and protection of which he may stand in need.

In granting the passport, the Government does not purport to exercise any power at all, but by reason of its status as a sovereign State it purports to address other foreign States to give certain facilities to one of its citizens. Such rights are recognised in a sovereign State under well-established rules of International law and therefore the exercise of those rights cannot be impugned on the ground that a power not found in the Constitution has been exercised by the executive.

Nor can the refusal to issue a passport be impugned under Art. 14, as that article can have no application to a matter like the issue of passports which consist in the exercise of a purely political function.

No person has any legal right to obtain a passport to any particular country and even where a passport has been granted to an individual, the State cannot be compelled to exercise its protection over that individual in a foreign country. The Government issuing the passport "requests" the Foreign Government to allow the bearer free passage and also to afford every assistance and protection necessary, and therefore the aggrieved party's application, upon a refusal to issue a passport, for directions or orders or a writ of mandamus against the refusal is not one based on any legal rights.

Further issuing of a passport is part of State department's foreign affairs function which is generally beyond judicial review and with which Courts generally refuse to interfere. ILR (1954) Mad 399 : (1953) 2 M L J 413 : A I R 1954 Mad 240 (241, 243, 244) (Prs 6, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 24) (DB).

Penal Code. (See also under marginal heading "Prevention of Corruption Act".)

● ——Art. 14—Discrimination—Prosecution of public servant under S. 409, Penal Code.

Every exercise of discretion is not an act of discrimination. It becomes an act of discrimination only when the person against whom that discretion is exercised faces certain appreciable disadvantages which he would not have faced otherwise. All that Art. 14, Constitution of India, guarantees is a similarity of treatment and not identical treatment. The protection of equal law does not mean that all laws must be uniform and merely some difference in the two procedures will not amount to a denial of the equality of treatment. Where the act of discrimination consists only in using another law which is good and in force and which creates no added difficulties or hardships for an accused, it may be objectionable on other grounds, but it cannot be described as a discriminatory treatment within the meaning of Art. 14, Constitution of India.

If a public servant is prosecuted under S. 409, I. P. Code, such prosecution does not amount to an act of discrimination within the meaning of Art. 14, Constitution of India, on the ground that it denies to him the equality before the laws or the equal protection before the laws. The procedure do not differ to such an extent that a prosecution under S. 409, I. P. Code, rather than under S. 5 (2), Prevention of Corruption Act, will deprive the accused of certain appreciable advantages and he will face certain handicaps in defending himself, which he would not have faced if he had been prosecuted under the Prevention of Corruption Act. There is a dissimilarity in procedure but the accused is not denied the benefit of a fair and normal trial under the general law. The difference between the two procedures is not of that character which should warrant a conclusion, that the equality of law or the equal protection of laws is being denied to an accused, if he is prosecuted under the general law. ——Art. 14 — Classification under — (Penal Code (1860), S. 354).

Article 14 in effect means that every law that the State makes shall operate alike upon all persons and property under the same conditions and circumstances. It does not mean that all persons, property or occupation must be treated alike by the State. Further, a reasonable classification of groups for purpose of legislation is permissible and what is prohibited is discrimination between persons who are included in the group to which the law applies. Police Acts.

——Art. 14 — Police Act (1861), Ss. 15 (5) and 15-A (3)—Validity.

It is not open to the legislature to give arbitrary power to the State Government or any person or authority to do what it likes and in any manner it chooses, unrestrained by any directions as to how the power was to be exercised. If from the other provisions of the Act, however, it can be gathered how the discretion is to be exercised and in what circumstances, then even though the provision may be widely worded it is not necessarily void. In case, however, the discretion is abused such exercise of discretion can be challenged and annulled under Art. 14 which includes within its purview both executive and legislative acts. The whole scheme of Ss. 15 and 15-A of the Police Act lays down the principles which should govern the grant of exemption under sub-ss. (5) and (3) of the said sections respectively and, when there is no allegation that the power has been abused by the State Government, High Court will not interfere. ——Art. 14—Discrimination—S. 124, Bombay Police Act (22 of 1951)—Validity.

An offence under S. 124, Bombay Police Act, is an offence of a minor character, while an offence contemplated by S. 411, Penal Code is an offence of a serious nature. There is no section giving the Police a discretion either to charge under S. 124 or S. 411. The question whether S. 124 makes a distinction between an accused person and another accused person, will have to be considered by sole reference to S. 124. There is nothing in S. 124 to support the contention that the section, in itself and, in terms, makes any such distinction. In order to make Art. 14 applicable, that would be necessary. Per Newaskar, J. — Article 14 comes in where differentiation is made by reason of any respect for persons or classes. Where the classification is based on municipal considerations and a regard to the welfare of all classes within the particular territory, Art. 14 of the Constitution cannot be applied. The circumstances that the law of pre-emption is applicable in territory of former Gwalior State and not so in adjoining territory of former Holkar State do not arise by reason of differentation between persons or classes but on municipal consideration. Pre-emption Acts.

● ——Art. 14 — Law of pre-emption contained in Ch. 14, Berar Land Revenue Code (1928)—Validity.

The statutory rules regulating the right of pre-emption as contained in Ch. 14, Berar Land Revenue Code, have laid down those rules as a part of the law of the land tenure in Berar. Every person holding such a kind of tenure in land has equally been subjected to those limitations whenever a transfer within the meaning of the law is to take place. The law has not discriminated against any particular caste or community, and irrespective of any denominations the law universally governs the rights and liabilities of persons dealing in such property. Hence the law of pre-emption as contained in Ch. 14 of the Code is not void as being inconsistent with Art. 14. Ramchandra v. ——Art. 14 — Equality under — Nature of—Reasonable classification allowed — (Patiala Recovery of State Dues Act (2002 Bk.), S. 3 (1)—Validity.

Equality safeguarded by the Constitution is not violated if a statute operates equally on all persons similarly circumstanced, provided their classification in a group bears a reasonable relation to the objective which the legislation has in view. If the law deals equally with all of a certain well-defined class it cannot be regarded as objectionable or open to the charge of denial of equal protection.

Although there is no specific provision in Art. 14, as in some other Articles like 19, enabling the State to impose reasonable restrictions on the rights of a person in public interest, such a power is implied in the very nature of the right conferred by the article.

The State Government can make appropriate laws to meet different situations and solve different problems that arise in the affairs of the State. Classification and discrimination may be necessitated by considerations of promoting the welfare and social or economic progress of the general public.

Held, that the classification in S. 3 (1) of the Patiala Recovery of State Dues Act, 2002 Bk. is not unreasonable and arbitrary. AIR 1952 S C 123 : 1952 S C J 168 (S C) and AIR 1951 S C 41, Rel. on. AIR 1955 Pepsu 129 (132) (Pt E) (Prs 15, 18) (DB).

Public premises—Eviction from.

—Arts. 14 and 19 — Public Premises (Eviction of Unauthorised Occupants) Act (1958), Preamble — Whether the Public Premises, (Eviction of Unauthorised Occupants) Act, is ultra vires offending Arts. 14 and 19 of Constitution—No proper pleading under Art. 14 even in memorandum of appeal to High Court—Plea of Act being repugnant to Art. 14 cannot be entertained.

Where in the ground of appeal filed before the High Court the appellant stated that the lower Courts ought to have held that S. 5 (1) of the Public Premises (Eviction of Unauthorised Occupants) Act offended against Art. 14 of the Constitution inasmuch as for eviction of the tenants a special discriminatory procedure was provided for therein in denial of the right to equality before the laws and of equal protection thereof, and consequently at least the S. 5 (1) was void as being repugnant to Art. 14 it was held that there was no proper pleading under Art. 14 even in the memorandum of appeal and consequently that plea could not be entertained. AIR 1964 S C 1179, Foll.

(Obiter.) Per S. K. Datta J.—The object of the Public Premises (Eviction of Unauthorised Occupants) Act of 1958 as stated in the preamble is to provide a speedy remedy for eviction of persons in unauthorised occupation of Government premises and other incidental matters. The Act leaves to the choice of the Estate Officers as to whether in a particular case, proceedings should be taken under the special Act or be left to the ordinary laws of the Court. The Act takes away the jurisdiction of the ordinary Court to decide whether a person is in unauthorised occupation or not and takes away the ordinary rights regarding disposed property. It confers power or jurisdiction to any gazetted officer though he may be ignorant of the land laws of the country, the right to determine intricate questions of facts and law relating to landlaws. The Act takes away the right of an appeal or a revision to the High Court. It however confers a right of appeal to the occupant to a qualified judicial officer. Hence the occupants of Government lands are put into great disadvantage compared to occupants of lands belonging to other persons. The Act classifies in a group not only the occupants of Government lands but also lands belonging to the Municipal Corporation of Delhi and Delhi Development Authority unlike the previous Act of 1950.

Hence the provisions of the Act infringe Art. 14 of the Constitution. Further notwithstanding the removal of some objectionable features of the previous Act, there is no harmonious adjustment between the fundamental right declared by Art. 19 (6) and the social control permitted by Art. 19 (6), and the restrictions sought to be imposed by the Act. Hence the Act is arbitrary and has no reasonable relation to the objects sought to be achieved though it may be in the interest of the general public in some cases. Case law discussed.

(Obiter) Per R. N. Dutt, J. — The State being the owner of the land might have leased it out at a time when the State had no necessity for its immediate occupation. With the expanding welfare activities of the State, the State might be in urgent need of a particular land for the interest of general public. The Act provides for speedy eviction of the lessees in such circumstances from the demised land. The restriction on the right of the citizen, a tenant under the State, to hold his property, must be construed to be a reasonable restriction on the exercise of that right in the interest of general public. Therefore the Act does not offend Art. 19 (6). Nor does it offend against Art. 14 of the Constitution because Art. 14 does not forbid reasonable classification for the purpose of legislation. The Act deals with persons in unauthorised occupation of public premises. The ordinary law deals with eviction of persons in unauthorised occupation of private lands or premises. The State may urgently require for its occupation lands in unauthorised occupation of others for the interest of the general public unless some special provision for speedy eviction in such cases is made, the interest of the general public or even the defence of the country may be highly prejudiced. Such a classification cannot therefore be said to be unreasonable. (1965) 69 Cal W N 1035.

Suppression of Immoral Traffic in Women and Girls Act.

● ——Art. 14—Suppression of Immoral Traffic in Women and Girls Act (1956) S. 20—Validity —Section does not give uncanalised power to Magistrate—Reasonable classification —Differences between two classes of prostitutes have a rational relation to the object of the Act — Section does not infringe Art. 14.

The Suppression of Immoral Traffic in Women and Girls Act was conceived to serve a public social purpose, viz., to suppress immoral traffic in women and girls, to rescue fallen women and girls and to prevent deterioration in public morals. The following procedural steps are laid down in S. 20 of the Act : (1) the enquiry is initiated by a Magistrate on his receiving the requisite information that a woman or a girl is a prostitute; (2) he records the substance of the information; (3) he gives notice to the woman or girl to show cause ; (4) he sends, along with the notice, a copy of the record; (5) he has to give the woman or girl an opportunity to adduce evidence on two points, (i) whether she is a prostitute, and (ii) whether in the interests of the general public she should be required to remove herself from the place where she is residing or which she is frequenting; (6) the Magistrate has to give his findings on the said questions, and on the basis thereof, he makes the appropriate order; and (7) the disobedience of the order entails punishment of fine. Special jurisdiction is conferred upon a Magistrate of comparatively high status who can safely be relied upon to discharge the onerous and delicate duties inherent in such jurisdiction. The jurisdiction under S. 20 is not conferred on such a Magistrate as a persona designata but is to be exercised by him in his capacity as a Magistrate functioning within the limits of his territorial jurisdiction. When the Legislature conferred jurisdiction on a Magistrate to decide the question of imposing restrictions on right of personal liberty by following judicial procedure, it is reasonable to hold that it conferred jurisdiction on him as a Court, unless the clear provisions of the Act compel the Court to hold otherwise. If the Magistrate is acting as a Court, it is obvious that he is subject to the revisional jurisdiction conferred under Ss. 435 and 439 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. In the circumstances it is not possible to say that uncanalised power is conferred on the Magistrate as an executive authority to decide the fate of an alleged prostitute in an arbitrary manner.

Art. 14 does not prohibit reasonable classification for the purpose of legislation and a law would not be held to infringe Art. 14 if the classification is founded on an intelligible differentia and the said differentia has a rational relation to the object sought to be achieved by the said law. The differences between a woman who is a prostitute and one who is not, certainly justify their being placed in different classes. The object of the Act is not only to suppress immoral traffic in women and girls but also to improve public morals by removing prostitutes from busy public places in the vicinity of religious and educational institutions. The differences between these two classes of prostitutes have a rational relation to the object sought to be achieved by the Act. S. 20, in order to prevent moral decadence in a busy locality, seeks to restrict the movements of the second category of prostitutes and to deport such of them as the peculiar methods of their operation in an area may demand. S. 20 of the Act does not infringe Art. 14 of the Constitution. A I R 1963 Bom 17, Rel. on. A I R 1963 All 71, Reversed. A I R 1959 All 57, Overruled. State of Uttar Pradesh v. Other Acts.

● ——Arts. 14, 19 — (Madras) Vexatious Litigation (Prevention) Act (8 of 1949)—Validity—Act does not contravene Arts. 14 and 19.

The Vexatious Litigation (Prevention) Act does not seek to create an unreasonable distinction between litigants. The litigants who are to be prevented from approaching the Court. without the sanction of the High Court etc., are a class by themselves. They are described in the Act as persons who habitually and 'without reasonable cause' file vexatious actions, civil or criminal. The Act does not deprive such a person of his right to go to a Court. But only creates a check so that the Court may examine the bona fides of any claim before the opposite party is harassed. The object of the Act is to promote public good; it cannot be claimed that it is an inviolable right of a citizen to bring vexatious actions without control either legislative or administrative. A person declared by the Act to be habitual litigant is not prevented from bringing genuine and bona fide actions. The Act only seeks to cut short attempts to be vexatious. Hence the Act cannot be described as unconstitutional or offending either Art. 19 or Art. 14. Prabhakar Rao, H. Mawle v. The classification of the legal practitioners in the Calcutta High Court practising on the Original Side into three categories, namely, (1) those who only plead (members of the Bar Library Club), irrespective of the question whether or not they are Barristers, (2) those who both plead and act (members of the Bar Association), and (3) those who only act (attorneys who are members of the Incorporated Law Society), is the result of a historical process which began about two hundred years ago and is reasonable. Viewing from the point of view of litigant public and the practising lawyers themselves the best interests of the Court would be served by recognising the necessity for three categories. ● ——Art. 14—Reasonable classification — Notification under Section 4 of the Securities Contracts (Regulation) Act (1956) prescribing qualification for membership of Stock Exchange, Bombay—Validity.

The object of the notification issued under S. 4 of Securities Contracts (Regulation) Act (1956) dated 31-8-1957 is two-fold. The main object is to carry out the purpose of the Act, namely, to prevent undesirable transaction in securities by regulating the business in them. The subsidiary object is to assuage the hardship that recognition of only one stock exchange would cause to the members of the other association. To achieve this twin object the classification is made between active members and inactive members. The Government on a consideration of the necessary data and presumably having regard to the record of the activities of the various members fixed the activities in the crucial year 1956-57 as the standard of activity for membership and fixed 12 months immediately preceding 6-8-1957 as the standard for active membership. There is a presumption in favour of the State that there is a reasonable basis for the classification. The period fixed by the Government as the standard for ascertaining the active membership is not arbitrary or unreasonable. Madhubhai

The classification of traders made by Rr. 18 and 19 is clearly rational and is founded on an intelligible differentia distinguishing persons falling under one class from those falling under the other. It is also clear that the differentia has a rational relation to the object sought to be achieved by the Act.

The challenge to the impugned rules on the ground of infringement of Art. 14 of the Constitution must fail. P. V. Shivarajan v. Union of India, 1959 S C J 481 : 1959 Cal L J 214 : (1959) Supp (1) S C R 779 : AIR 1959 S C 556 (559) (Pt C) (Pr 8) (DB).

P. and Berar Animal Preservation Act, (52 of 1949) (as amended by M. P. Acts 23 of 1951 and 10 of 1956), S. 4.)

While Art. 14 forbids class legislation it does not forbid reasonable classification for the purposes of legislation and that in order to pass the test of permissible classification two conditions must be fulfilled namely, (i) the classification must be founded on an intelligible differentia which distinguishes persons or things that are grouped together from others left out of the group and (ii) such differentia must have a rational relation to the object sought to be achieved by the statute in question. The classification, may be founded on different bases namely geographical or according to objects or occupations or the like and what is necessary is that there must be a nexus between the basis of classification and the object of the Act under consideration. There is always a presumption in favour of the constitutionality of an enactment and the burden is upon him who attacks it to show that there has been a clear violation of the constitutional principles.

The impugned Acts can quite clearly stand the test of permissible classification. Whatever objections there may be against the validity of the impugned Acts, the denial of equal protection of the laws does not, prima facie appear to be one of them. The challenge under Art. 14 cannot prevail. Mahomed Hanif Quareshi v. The question of infringement arises when a person is put in one class governed by one provision while others are arbitrarily put in another class governed by another provision, but not when he is put in both the classes, and is governed by both the provisions. ——Art. 14—Proviso to sub-rule (4) of clause (iii) of R. 153-D introduced by G. O. Ms. No. 2455, Home (Transport I), dated 25-11-1960—Validity—Contravenes, Art. 14.

Proviso to sub-r. (4) of cl. (iii) of R. 153D makes an arbitrary discrimination. It is unreasonable to favour the new entrants or place the existing operators under any disadvantage, in the circumstances that do not admit of any reasonable justification in this different and conflicting kind of treatment. This invidious classification does not seem to have any purpose benind it, nor it can claim to be reasonably related with the objective which is sought to be achieved. The objective is clear that every operator, whether he is a new entrant or an old one, should have a sufficiently equipped workshop. If that objective is to be realised, then the proviso could be made applicable to both these classes and the old operator should be given the same facilities as are now being given to the new entrants, If the new as well the old entrant gives an undertaking in writing that he will make the necessary arrangements within a reasonable time, he should not be disqualified. As long as the proviso therefore is not amended giving equal opportunities to both these classes, there is no other alternative than to declare it as violative of Art. 14 of the Constitution and therefore bad in law.

The provision can however be separated from the rest of the rule which can still be enforced. (1963) 1 Andh W R 77 : AIR 1963 Andh Pra 263 (268) (Pt H) (Prs 12, 13) (DB).

G. O. No. 1142, dated 18th June, 1954, should not clothe the political sufferers with any legal right. This is not a justiciable matter and any departure from such an order does not amount to infringement of any rights of any person.

Under Art. 298 of the Constitution as it stood before the amendment it was quite competent for the Government to make grants to particular persons. There can be no ground for complaint that Art. 14 of the Constitution has in any way been violated by the issue of G. O. in question. (1957) 2 Andh W R 123, Distinguished.

There is no provision at all for making a temporary assignment either in the Board's Standing Orders or in any instructions issued by the Government. To make a permanent assignment the procedure laid down in B. S. O. No. 15 has to be followed and a patta has to be issued. Therefore the person to whom lands have been given for temporary use could not complain of any violation of principles of natural justice if no notice was issued to him before making a permanent assignment of the lands. ——Arts. 14, 372 and Sch. VI — Equality before the law — Reasonable classification — (Scheduled Areas (Assimilation of Laws) Act (1953), Ss. 3, 4, 5).

The whole of S. 1 of the Fourteenth Amendment of the American Constitution is incorporated in Art. 14. It should therefore carry the same meaning and it may be said that the mere fact that a law is limited in its application to all the inhabitants of a particular area is not enough for holding that it offends against Art. 14 of the Constitution. Article 14 forbids the State from denying to any person equality before the law or the equal protection of the laws within the territory of India. Whereas S. 1 of the 14th Amendment guarantees equal protection before law, Art. 14 adds to that guarantee by prohibiting denial of equality before the law and thus places greater emphasis on equality than even S. 1 of the Fourteenth Amendment.

Equality is opposed to discrimination. Discrimination amongst individuals or classes of individuals in laws or in regard to the protection before the laws, is prohibited. But the guaranteed equality must not be confused with uniformity. The article does not provide for or aim at uniform laws in the whole of the country. The entire scheme of the Constitution points to that conclusion. There can be no equality between people not similarly circumstanced. All that Art. 14 requires is that in class or special legislation the Legislative classification must not be arbitrary but should be based on an intelligible principle having a rational relation to the object which the Legislature seeks to attain.

When the constitutionality of a law is called into question the first important principle that should be taken in view is that the presumption is always in favour of the constitutionality of the impugned enactment and the burden is upon him who attacks it to show that there has been a clear transgression of the constitutional principles. Therefore from the mere fact of exclusion of certain areas from Mikir Hills Autonomous District and thereby from the operation of Sch. VI of the Constitution it cannot be said, in the absence of any evidence relating to the reasons for such exclusion, that all the inhabitants of the excluded areas rose to the level of the other inhabitants of the District of Nowgong and Sibsagar and that the object of exclusion of a part of the Mikir Hills area from the Autonomous District was to integrate it partly with Nowgong and partly with Sibsagar District according to the geographical situation of its parts and that the basis of exclusion was that there was no reason left for discrimination between the part excluded from the Autonomous District and the other parts of the District of Nowgong and Sibsagar, and that not the laws which applied to those districts would apply to the excluded areas automatically.

The effect of Scheduled Areas (Assimilation of Laws) Act, 1953 is that the rules for the administration of justice and police which applied to Mikir Hills before the formation of the Autonomous District would continue to apply, notwithstanding the coming into force of the Act, to suits, cases and legal proceedings between parties all of whom belong to the Scheduled Tribes. The failure on the part of the Government to assimilate under the provisions of that Act the laws in force in the District of Nowgong and Sibsagar immediately from the date of the exclusion of the areas from the Mikir Hills Autonomous District may not be regarded as a thoughtless or inadvertent omission. That indicates that no sweeping decision has been arrived at, that all the tribes inhabiting the area have reached a stage of development which would justify immediate claim to uniformity of laws with the rest of the area of the Districts of Nowgong and Sibsagar. Those areas till date of their exclusion formed a class by themselves and had distinct characteristics justifying separate treatment and their special laws found justification in their backward condition and in their historical, geographical and administrative reasons and the delay in applying the ordinary laws is a deliberate act which has ample justification because a mechanical and hurried application thereof may be fraught with serious consequences. The rules relating to administration of justice and police in the Sibsagar and Nowgong Mikir Hills District therefore cannot be said to have lost their validity in their application to the excluded area and the exclusion of the area from the operation of laws applicable in the rest of these districts would not bring them within the mischief of Art. 14. 1954 Cri L J 836 : A I R 1954 Assam 97 (98, 99, 100) (Prs 14, 16, 17) (DB).

——Arts. 14, 19 — Bengal Criminal Law (Industrial Areas) Amendment Act (4 of 1942), S. 3—Validity—Does not offend Art. 14 or any other Article.

Section 3 of the Bengal Criminal Law (Industrial Areas) Amendment Act, 1942 does not offend Art. 14 or any other Article of the Constitution and is therefore perfectly valid.

The second clause of sub-cl. (c) of S. 3 must be held to be based on a reasonable classification. Not only this, the clause applies to a person with previous conviction for theft, but if such a person is found loitering in any bazzar, street, thoroughfare or other place, he must be given an opportunity to explain why he was present or loitering at the particular place. It cannot therefore be said that the clause is in any way unreasonable or that it offends Art. 14 of the Constitution. So far as the other clauses of S. 3 are concerned, each one of them must be held to be based on a reasonable classification.

As regards Art. 19 of the Constitution, that Article cannot be invoked when considering the validity under the Constitution of any piece of penal legislation. 67 Cal W N 494 : 1963 (2) Cri L J 498 : A I R 1963 Cal 562 (563) (Prs 3, 4, 5, 6) (DB).

——Art. 14 — Discrimination — City Improvement Board Regulations (Hyderabad) do not offend Art. 14.

The discrimination in order to be deemed repugnant to Art. 14 should be arbitrary and without any rational basis. The legislation which only affects certain class of people is not thereby necessarily repugnant to this Article. It is only when the object of this discrimination is a bias shown in favour of or against a certain class of persons that the question of infringement of this Article can arise. Under the City Improvement Board Regulations (Hyderabad) the basis on which the classification stands obviously is fair and rational and those regulations cannot be impeached on the ground of repugnancy to Art. 14. ILR 1955 Hyd 737, AIR 1956 Hyd 10 (11, 12) (Pt A) (Pr 2) (DB).

III, Item 18—Scope of—Powers of executive — Constitution of India, Art. 220—High Court Judges cannot do any other work—Commission held invalid.

(i) In the instant case, almost all the claimants who claimed to be the heirs of the deceased Nawab did not belong to the class of big noblemen and the subject of enquiry was no longer big jagirs but only right to commutation amounts and private property; status, either of the deceased Nawab or of the claimants was therefore no sufficient ground for a separate treatment.

The vastness of property of the deceased was also no ground because the City Civil Courts had unlimited pecuniary jurisdiction.

(ii) Circular No. 10 of 1358-F made the ordinary C. P. Code applicable only "as far as possible". Moreover, there was Atiyat Law which has a peculiar procedure of its own and there was also the Jagir (Abolition) Regulation 1358-F, S. 21 (2) of which made all claims about jagirs to be justiciable by the ordinary civil Courts. Therefore, there would be more than one procedure with no vested rights of appeal. This is discrimination and violative of Art. 14. Hence the firman was ultra vires the Art. 14.

(iii) The proviso to S. 21 (2) of the Jagir (Abolition) Regulation 1358 F does not provide for the acquisition of any estate or any right therein or the extinguishment or modification of acquisition of any estate or right therein. The proviso safeguards only the existing law and the existing law of sanctioning succession proceeding is violative of the Constitution Act, as it saves the royal prerogative of sanctioning succession and denies the statutory right of appeal. The proviso is, therefore, discriminating and ultra vires the Constitution. Pronouncement of the majority in Kamal Yar Jungs' case (ILR (1952) Hyd 595) held was obiter dicta and dissented from.

(iv) The State Government has power under Sch. VII, Item 18 of the Constitution of India, to legislate about land and, therefore, sanction commutation after abolishing Jagirs, but to determine the heirs as to who would receive the commutation amounts is not the lot of the executive under the Constitution. The heirs and their shares have to be determined by the ordinary Courts of the land and to those heirs alone the executive can grant the shares so fixed.

(v) Under the Constitution of India no Judge of a High Court can do any other work than the High Court work. He can do other work by the permission of H. E. the President. No such permission was obtained and therefore the Commission whose members were the Hon'ble Judges of the High Court at Hyderabad, was incompetent.

(vi) Hence the Commission was not the proper forum for adjudicating various questions that arose from the deceased Nawab's succession case. Case-law discussed. Tahira Begum v. The Government of Ceylon, that is, the Food Commissioner to that Government, was advised to make the purchase of chillies up to 2500 tons from co-operative societies recommended by the State Government and such a list of societies was forwarded to him.

Held, that there had been no violation of any fundamental right or the principle underlying Art. 14. The Government could not obviously choose anybody at random and if they chose societies which were not mere profit making organisations like private bodies, there could be no arbitrariness or favouritism.

The rule against a person being judge in his own cause or in a cause in which he has a personal interest is not in England a limitation on Parliamentary power. But this is no answer to an objection based on a contravention of Art. 14. Where the Chairman who is himself one of the six Councillors elected from the Graduates constituency, is vested with a power to decide the identity of the two councillors to be eliminated, this is ex facie discriminatory in favour of the Chairman and against the others; unless some rational or reasonable basis could be found for it, it is plainly violative of the equal protection guaranteed by Art. 14. S. 35 (3) of the States Reorganisation Act, in so far as it enables the Chairman of the Madras Legislative Council to specify by order two of the sitting members of the Graduates constituency, offends Art. 14 of the Constitution and the sub-section is to that extent void and inoperative. The competence of the Orissa Legislature to legislate for the purpose of assessing private lands of former Rulers to fair rent is beyond question (see Item 18 of List II in the Seventh Schedule). Even if the Legislature chooses not to implement the assurance given to a Ruler at the time of the merger, the law passed by a Legislature cannot, on that account, be struck down as unconstitutional. 1952 S C J 354 : AIR 1952 S C 252 and AIR 1958 S C 239 : 1958 S C J 586, Rel. on.

Merely by directing the owner of certain properties to pay a fair and equitable rent to the Government as the superior landlord, there cannot be said to be any 'acquisition of land for a public purpose' so as to attract the provisions of Art. 31. Similarly, the Act does not contravene Art. 14. The private properties of the former Rulers formed a class by themselves. They had all along been completely exempt from payment of any rent to Government. It is however open to the Legislature to classify them separately and pass a law for the purpose of assessing them to fair and equitable rent, because there is a reasonable nexus between the basis of that classification on the one hand and the object sought to be achieved on the other. 26 Cut L T 652 : (1960) 2 O J D 346 : AIR 1961 Orissa 131 (132, 133) (Pt A) (Prs 6, 7) (DB).

——Art. 14—Orissa Co-operative Societies Act (11 of 1952), Ss. 133, 73—Validity.

Section 133 read with S. 73 of the Act is not violative of Art. 14 of the Constitution. As there is no fundamental right for a litigant to be represented by a legal practitioner in civil litigation, or for a legal practitioner to appear before any Court or tribunal, the mere conferment of unfettered discretion under S. 73 in the Registrar of Co operative Societies will not offend Art. 14. Moreover, it seems a reasonable classification to divide into two groups the authorities who may exercise powers under the Act, the higher group consisting of the Registrar, the State Government, the Collector and the Board of Revenue and the lower group consisting of other officers exercising the powers of Registrar, liquidator, arbitrator or body of arbitrators, etc. Every order passed by any of the lower authorities is subject to appeal to the Registrar before whom a legal practitioner may appear as of right. Even if there is a possibility of abuse of the power of transfer, it will not be proper to hold that the provision of the statute is unconstitutional though, in some circumstances, his order of transfer may be open to challenge. ——Art. 14 — Sathi Lands (Restoration) Act (34 of 1950)—Validity.

Article 14 does not prohibit Legislative classification. Nor does it prohibit the legislature from enacting special laws to combat special evils. A classification that takes account of the different degrees in which an evil is present must be upheld as reasonable and valid. Even legislation relating to one individual would not violate the equal protection clause, if there is no discrimination. The Sathi Lands (Restoration) Act cannot be held to be invalid on the ground of its violating Art. 14. (1918) 249 U S 152, Rel. on. A I R 1952 Pat 194 (198) (Pt C) (Pr 19) (DB).

——Art. 14—Differential treatment not necessarily discriminatory—Fixation of differential freight rates by railway—Whether violates Art. 14.

The expression "discrimination" indicates an unjust, unfair or unreasonable bias in favour of one and against another which is not necessarily indicative of the expression "differential treatment". Article 14 does not prohibit differential treatment but guarantees equal treatment to all similarly circumstanced. Equal and same treatment to differently circumstanced persons may well in some cases amount to unreasonable or undue discrimination or preference of one over another. There is no precise formula for deciding the question whether a differential treatment accorded by the railway authorities in freight rates amounts to undue preference or unreasonable discrimination or distinction. The general public interest and the effect of charges on the development of the country as a whole are good grounds for fixing differential rates. There can also be no undue preference if there is no competition between the persons favoured and the persons put in a disadvantageous position by the impugned fixation of rates. 63 Punj L R 206 : A I R 1961 Punj 268 (271, 272) (Pt B) (Prs 9, 11) (DB).

The discretion given to the State Government under S. 35 of the Act is wide but is not either unguided or arbitrary. 1. Scope and applicability.

● ——Art. 15—Relative scope of. Arts. 14, 15, 16. See Ibid, Art. 14. AIR 1961 S C 564.

● ——Arts. 15 and 29 (2)— Art. 29 (2) is not limited to minority group —Distinction between Arts. 15 and 29 (2).

Art. 29 (2) is not limited to citizens belonging to a minority group of other than the section or the minorities referred to in Art. 29 (1) or Art. 30 (1), for the citizens, who do not belong to any minority group, may quite conceivably need this protection just as much as the citizens of such other minority groups. The language of Art. 29 (2) is wide and unqualified and may well cover all citizens whether they belong to the majority or minority group. Art. 15 protects all citizens against the State whereas the protection of Art. 29 (2) extends against the State or anybody who denies the right conferred by it. Further Art. 15 protects all citizens against discrimination generally but Art. 29 (2) is a protection against a particular species of wrong namely denial of admission into educational institutions of the specified kind. In the next place Art. 15 is quite general and wide in its terms and applies to all citizens, whether they belong to the majority or minority groups, and gives protection to all the citizens against discrimination by the State on certain specific grounds. Art. 29 (2) confers a special right on citizens for admission into educational institutions maintained or aided by the State. To limit this right only to citizens belonging to minority groups will be to provide a double protection for such citizens and to hold that citizens of the majority group have no special educational rights in the nature of a right to be admitted into an educational institution for the maintenance of which they make contributions by way of taxes. There is no cogent reason for such discrimination. The marginal note alone cannot be read as controlling the plain meaning of the language in which Art. 29 (2) has been couched. State of Bombay v. Bombay Education Society, 56 Bom L R 1211 : 1955 S C R 568 : (1954) S C J 678 : 1954 S C A 784 : (1954) 2 M L J 359 : V L J 1954 S C 45 : A I R 1951 S C 561 (566) (Pt B) (Pr 14).

Art. 16 is a sort of corollary to Art. 15 (1). Where there is no case of discrimination with regard to an employment, because there was no fresh employment, the petitioner being in the service from before nor did he ask for any fresh employment the articles have no application. ——Arts. 15 (1) and 29 (2)— Scope of — Art. 15 (1) controls Art. 29 (2).

Art. 15 (1) which is of wider application than Art. 29 (2) prohibits discrimination on the ground of sex on all matters and so it includes discrimination in matters of admission to educational institutions. The result is that Art. 15 (1) should be construed as controlling Art. 29 (2). AIR 1952 Cal 822 (824) (Pt A) (Pr 9).

——Art. 15—Interpretation—Adherence to American precedents—Permissibility.

In interpreting Art. 15 of the Constitution, the Court should not be guided by the American precedents. The 19th Amendment of the American Constitution provides that "the rights of citizens of the United States to vote shall not be denied or abridged by the United States or by any State on account of sex". Both the language and the theme of that Amendment are different from those of Art. 15 of the Constition. The craze for American precedents can soon become a snare. A blind and uncritical adherence to American precedents must be avoided or else there will soon be a perverted American Constitution operating in this land under the delusive garb of the Indian Constitution. 55 C W N 453 : A I R 1951 Cal 563 (569) (Pr 37).

Neither Art. 15 nor 16 of the Constitution prohibits restrictions being imposed on ground of language qualification. On the other hand, Art. 29 saves the the cultural and educational rights of any section of citizens residing in any part of India. The effect of the Government Resolutions referred to in R. 5 of the Orissa Administrative Service and the Orissa Subordinate Administrative Service Rules, 1950, which are framed under Art. 309 of Constitution is only to prescribe a language test as a necessary condition for entry into Government service. The rule does not purport to discriminate one citizen against another and the test is applicable to all applicants. ILR (1955) Cut 510 : A I R 1955 Orissa 113 (115) (Pt A) (Prs 9, 10) (DB).

2. Who can question constitutionality.

——Arts. 15 (1) and 228—Right to apply for protection in respect of fundamental right under Art. 15 (1) —If available to non-citizen.

It is no doubt true that so far as Art. 15 (1) of the Constitution is concerned it is only a citizen who can come to the High Court under Art. 226 for the enforcement of the fundamental right guaranteed by Art. 15 (1). When, however, it is contended that the law discriminates against citizen and citizen on grounds only of sex, and as such is void under Art. 13, a non-citizen who is being prosecuted under a void law can plead that his prosecution is bad and he cannot be convicted under a void law. To that extent even a non-citizen may rely on any of the fundamental rights, not of course for the purpose of enforcing those rights, but merely to point out to the Court that a particular law in violation of any of these fundamental rights is bad, inoperative, and no penal consequences can follow from the breach of such law. 1952 Cr L J 23 : 21 Bom Cr Cas 229 : ILR (1952) Bom 449 : 53 Bom L R 736 : AIR 1951 Bom 470 (471) (Pt B) (Pr 3) (DB).

——Art. 15 (1) —Applicability to State aided University — University rule allowing only Europeans, Anglo-Indians and Women-candidates to offer Urdu as elective subject—Classification held not arbitrary and capricious.

Under S. 31, East Punjab University Act, the Senate is empowered to make regulations providing for the courses of the studies to be followed, the conditions to be complied with by candidates for any University examination. R. 6 gives a list of compulsory subjects. One of the compulsory subjects is a classical language or Hindi, Punjabi, French or German. European, Anglo-Indian and women candidates can offer Urdu but not other candidates. It was contended that the University has made a discrimination on the basis of sex, race and place of birth.

Held, that the classification made by the University was not arbitrary or capricious.

Held, also, that the educational institutions would be within the purview of Art. 15 (1). if they are State-maintained and not otherwise. The Punjab University is State aided but not State-maintained and, therefore, their regulations do not come within the prohibition enacted under Art. 15 (1). AIR 1954 Mad 67, Relied on. ——Art. 15 (1)—Scope.

Educational institutions will be within the purview of Art. 15 (1), only if they are State maintained and not otherwise. ● ——Art. 15—"State" —If includes President.

Art. 15 of the Constitution prohibits the President from discriminating against citizens on grounds of religion in his official capacity. All official acts of the President are the official acts of the State and for the purposes of Art. 15, the "State" is synonymous with the President or at any rate includes his official capacity. 4. "Discriminate against."

——Art. 15 (1) — Discrimination based on grounds specified in Art. 15 (1) along with other grounds — Not invalid.

The discrimination which is forbidden by Art. 15 (1) is only such discrimination as is based solely on the grounds that a person belongs to a particular race or caste or professes a particular religion or was born at a particular place or is of a particular sex and on no other ground. A discrimination based on one or more of these grounds and also on other grounds is not hit by the Article.

Held, on facts that the refusal to admit the appellant to a mixed college was not mala fide or based solely on the ground that she was a woman, but because under a scheme of better organisation of both male and female education at that place, which covered development of the Women's College as a step towards the advancement of female education, it was considered reasonable to restrict further admission of women student to the mixed College and hence there was no discrimination within Art. 15 (1). 56 Cal W N 801 : AIR 1952 Cal 825 (829) (Pt A) (Prs 16, 17) (DB).

——Art. 15 (1)—Discrimination—Meaning of.

Discrimination is comparative in its connotation. Discrimination on the ground of sex alone must mean that one sex is discriminated as against the other. Discrimination is double-edged. To discriminate against one sex is to discriminate in favour of other, but inherent in the very notion of every discrimination is a measure of comparison. The language used in Art. 15 (1) "discriminate against" should be understood in the above light. There cannot be any discrimination 'against' without a resulting and corresponding discrimination in favour of some one else which would be commonly known as preference for that some one else. Discrimination and preference are twin and inseparable ideas. ('51) 55 C W N 453 : AIR 1951 Cal 563 (568) (Pt G) (Pr 30).

5. "Citizen."

——Art. 15 (1)—Right of non-citizen.

A person who is not a citizen cannot come to the High Court for assistance, invoking his right under Art. 15 (1). But even a non-citizen may rely on any of the fundamental rights, not indeed for the purpose of enforcing those rights, but merely in order to point out to the Court that a particular law being in violation of any of these fundamental rights is bad, inoperative and no penal consequence can follow from the breach of such a law. 53 Bom L R 736 : 1952 Cr L J 23 : 21 Bom Cr C 229 : ILR (1952) Bom 449 : AIR 1951 Bom 470 (471) (Pt B) (Pr 3) (DB).

——Art. 15 — Applicability — Non-citizen—Right to challenge legislation affecting fundamental rights. See Ibid, Art. 14. 1959 Cri L J 439 : A I R 1959 Cal 237.

——Arts. 15, 19—Applicability to persons migrating to Pakistan after 1-3-1947.

Articles 15 and 19 confer rights and privileges only on citizens. A person who has migrated from the territory of India to the territory included in Pakistan after 1-3-1947 cannot be deemed to be a citizen of India and Arts. 15 and 19 do not apply to him. 1951 Mad W N 477 : 1951-2 Mad L J 1 : A I R 1951 Mad 930 (932) (Pt A) (Pr 12) (DB).

6. "On grounds only of religion, race, caste, sex, place of birth or any of them."

——Art. 15 — Scope — Discrimination based on religion, race or caste — Legality — Acquisition of land for establishment of Harijan colony—Order of requisition under S. 5, Bombay Land Requisition Act — Legality.

Article 15 (1) of the Constitution expressly states that discrimination merely on the ground of religion, race, caste, sex or place of birth is not and cannot be a reasonable ground for passing an unequal law. If the State therefore takes any action which is of a discriminatory nature and which discrimination is based merely on the ground of the religion, race or caste of a person or of a section of the public, then the action can be successfully challenged under Art. 15.

Where an order of requisition under S. 5 of the Bombay Land Requisition Act, 1948, states that certain land is required for a public purpose, namely, the establishment of a Harijan colony, the order cannot be justified. There can be no doubt that the colony which is intended to be constructed is intended only for the benefit of Harijans. There is no doubt that it is a laudable object, but when the State picks out members of a particular caste and wishes to give those members particular facilities, although other members of the public may equally be in need of those facilities, the action is undoubtedly discriminatory, and the order must be held to contravene Art. 15 of the Constitution. No purpose can be public within the meaning of the Land Requisition Act which is either unlawful or unconstitutional and since a Harijan colony offends against Art. 15 (1) the establishment of a Harijan colony can never be a public purpose within the Land Requisition Act. ILR (1953) Bom 44 : 54 Bom L R 678 : A I R 1952 Bom 461 (461) (Pt B) (Pr 3) (DB).

——Art. 15 (1)—S. 497, Penal Code—Validity.

Article 15 (1) speaks of discrimination on grounds only of religion, race, caste sex, place of birth or any of them. If religion, race, caste, sex, place of birth is merely one of the factors which the Legislature has taken into consideration then it would not be discrimination only on ground of that fact, but if the Legislature has discriminated only on one of these grounds and no other factor could possibly have been present, then undoubtedly the law would offend against Art. 15 (1).

What led to discrimination in S. 497 in this country is not the fact that women had a sex different from that of men, but that women in this country were so situated that special legislation was required in order to protect them, and it was from this point of view that one finds in S. 497 a position in law which takes a sympathetic and charitable view of the weakness of women in this country. Therefore S. 497 does not contravene Art. 15 (1). 53 Bom L R 736 : 1952 Cr L J 23 : 21 Bom Cr C 229 : ILR (1952) Bom 449 : A I R 1951 Bom 470 (472) (Pt C) (Prs 4, 5) (DB).

——Art. 15 (1)—Scope and effect — Girl student refused admission to mixed college under scheme of better organisation of both male and female education.

What Art. 15 (1) of the Constitution forbids is discrimination and discrimination based solely on all or any of the grounds mentioned in the Article. All differentiation is not discrimination, but only such differentiation as is invidious and as is made, not because any real difference in the conditions or natural difference between the persons dealt with makes different treatment necessary, but because of the presence of some characteristic or affiliation which is either disliked or not regarded with equal favour but which has no rational connection with the differentiation made as a justifying reason. Next, the discrimination which is forbidden is only such discrimination as is based solely on the ground that a person belongs to a particular race or caste or professes a particular religion was born at a particular place or is of a particular sex and on no other ground. A discrimination based on one or more of these grounds and also on other grounds is not hit by the article.

Where a girl-student was not refused admission to a mixed college merely because she was a woman, but because under a scheme of better organisation of both male and female education at Hooghly, which covered development of the Women's College as a step towards the advancement of female education and also relieving the pressure on the Moshin College which was a mixed College, it was considered reasonable to restrict further admission of women students to the Women's College and at the same time to safe-guard the interests of women students reading for Honours by permitting them to attend Honours Classes at the Moshin College, it cannot be said that any discrimination was made against her on the ground that she was a woman. 56 C W N 801 : A I R 1952 Cal 825 (829) (Pt A) (Prs 16, 17) (DB).

——Art. 15 (1) and (3) — Scope of — Discrimination against and in favour of women—How far protected.

Article 15 (1) of the Constitution provides, inter alia, that the State shall not discriminate against any citizen on grounds only of sex. The word "only" in this article is of great importance and significance. The impugned law must be shown to discriminate because of sex alone. If other factors in addition to sex come into play in making the discriminatory law, then such discrimination does not come within the provisions of Art. 15 (1). Superadded to sex, if there are proprietary considerations, then the discrimination cannot be said to be on the ground of sex alone. 55 C W N 453 : A I R 1951 Cal 563 (568, 569) (Pt E) (Prs 32, 33, 34, 35, 36).

——Arts. 15 (1), 29 (2) — Discrimination on ground of residence—Articles not contravened by it.

Discrimination on the ground of residence, by itself has not been referred to either in Art. 15 (1) or 29 2). And prima facie these two articles cannot be considered to have been violated by such discrimination. ●——Art. 15 — Abducted Persons (Recovery and Restoration) Act (1949), S. 2 (1) (a) — Validity — (Abducted Persons (Recovery and Restoration) Act (1949), S. 2 (1) (a).

Article 15 deals with discrimination on grounds only of religion, race, etc. The word "only" is important and it is clear that what Art. 15 says is that a person shall not suffer merely because he belongs to a particular religion, race or caste vis-a-vis another person similarly circumstanced. The persons who come under the mischief of the Abducted Persons (Recovery and Restoration) Act have other qualifications besides the qualification of religion. Religion alone is not the ground upon which the distinction is based. The abducted person may not even be a Muslim at the time of his or her being taken into custody. He must have been separated from his family between the 1st of March 1947 and the 1st of January 1949 and he must be living under the control of any other individual or family. These additional factors are a necessary incidence to the definition of an abducted person and thus there is no discrimination on grounds only of religion. Ajaib Singh v. State of Punjab, 54 Pun L R 260 : 1952 Cri L J 1313 : ILR (1952) Puni 381 : A I R 1952 Punj 309 (332) (Pt D) (Pr 143) (FB).

7. Discrimination on ground of religion.

● ——Art. 15 (1) — Scope — Elections on communal lines.

Any law providing for elections on the basis of separate electorates for members of different religious communities offends against Art. 15 (1). The constitutional mandate to the State not to discriminate against any citizen on the ground, inter alia, of religion clearly extend to political as well as to other rights, and any election held after the Constitution in pursuance of such a law, subject to Cl. Clause (iv) of Rule 2 of the rules framed under S. 258 read with S. 230 of the M. P. Land Revenue Code 1959 governing the appointment, duties, etc., of Kotwars, is repugnant to Art. 15 of the Constitution and therefore invalid inasmuch as it made women ineligible for the post of Kotwar and thus it discriminated against women on the ground of sex alone.

Article 15 (1) of the Constitution prescribes inter alia that the State shall not discriminate against any citizen on ground only of sex. The word 'only' in Art. 15 (1) is of importance and significance and it shows that the discrimination which is prohibited by that article is one based because of sex alone. If the discrimination is founded not on the ground of sex alone, but on the ground of sex with certain considerations superadded to it, then the discrimination is not hit by Article 15 (1).

No doubt, having regard to the arduous nature of the duties and responsibilities of a Kotwar, the appointment of a woman as a Kotwar may not at all be desirable or suitable or conducive to the proper and efficient discharge of the duties that a Kotwar is required to do. But this is a matter which the appointing authority has to decide in each case having regard to the principle that the selection of a Kotwar is to be made on the basis of merit and merit alone, and it is only if in respect of suitability to the post the claimants are of equal merits that preference may be given to the near relative. 1965 M P L J 165: 1965 Jab L J 1054.

10. Discrimination on ground of place of birth.

● ——Art. 15 (1)—Rule requiring capitation fee from non-Madhya Bharat Students (as modified in 1952) —Validity.

(Per Majority, Jagannadhadas, J. Contra)—The rule as modified in 1952 is clearly not open to attack as infringing Art. 15 (1). The ground for exemption from payment of capitation fee as laid down therein is bona fide residence in the State of Madhya Bharat. Residence and place of birth are two distinct conceptions with different connotations both in law and in fact, and when Art. 15 (1) prohibits discrimination based on the place of birth, it cannot be read as prohibiting discrimination based on residence. It could not be held that the exemption based on domicile was in effect, an exemption based on place of birth under an alias. Domicile of a person means his permanent home. Whether the expression used is "domicile of origin" or "domicile of birth", the concept involved in it is something different from what the words "place of birth" signify. And if "domicile of birth" and "place of birth" cannot be taken as synonymous, then the prohibition enacted in Art. 15 (1) against discrimination based on place of birth cannot apply to a discrimination based on domicile. Citizenship and domicile represent two different conceptions. Citizenship has reference to political status of a person and domicile to his civil right. Domicile has reference to the system of law by which a person is governed, and when we speak of the domicile of a country, we assume that the same system of law prevails all over that country. But it might well happen that laws relating to succession and marriage might not be the same all over the country and that different areas in the State might have different laws in respect of those matters. In that case, each area having a distinct set of laws would itself be regarded as a country for the purpose of domicile. There could be different domiciles for different States. It cannot be contended that there cannot be a domicile of Madhya Bharat under the Constitution. When the rule-making authorities referred to domicile in Cls. (a) and (b) of the rule they were thinking really of residence. In this view also, the contention that the rule is repugnant to Art. 15 (1) must fail. Case law discussed. Joshi v. State of Madhya Bharat, 1955 S C A 511 : 1955 S C R 1215 : 1955 S C J 298 : 1955 Mad W N 406 : A I R 1955 S C 334 (336 to 339) (Pt A) (Prs 5, 6, 7, 8, 10, 11).

● ——Art. 15 (1)—Discrimination on ground of place of birth — Rule relating to admission to Medical College at Indore — Rule giving favourable treatment to citizens of other countries (as modified in 1952).

No doubt, Cl. (d) of the rule strikes a new note, it may be that as a matter of policy the management of the institution decided that it would be an advantage to associate citizens of other countries with Indian citizens in educational institutions, and therefore, reserved a few seats for them on the most-favoured nation treatment basis. But as Cls. (a) to (c) rest on a classification based on domicile and residence, and are distinct and severable from clause (d) they would be valid even if Cl. (d) were to be held bad. Joshi v. State of Madhya Bharat, 1955 S C A 511 : 1955 S C R 1215 : 1955 S C J 298 : 1955 Mad W N 406 : A I R 1955 S C 334 (339) (Pt B) (Pr 12).

——Art. 15 — Discrimination on ground of place of birth — Place of birth and place of domicile — Distinction — Rule 6 of Osmania University - Contemplates place of residence—It does not offend against principle of Art. 15—Words and Phrases—Domicile —Osmania University Act (9 of 1959), Rules under R. 6.

The prohibition enacted in Art. 15 is the discrimination resting on place of birth. Place of birth and place of domicile are two different concepts each with different import, the first bearing on the place where the candidate is born while the other relates to the place where the candidate or his parents reside. Domicile of a person means his permanent home. It could not be posited that R. 6 offends against the principle embodied in Art. 15.

There is nothing unreasonable in the fact that persons of the same State should be required to prove domicile in a particular part of the State, because different areas in the State may have different laws in respect of certain matters. In that case, each area having a distinct set of laws would itself be regarded as a country for the purpose of domicile. ——Art. 15 (1) — Discrimination on ground of residence.

The right granted under Art. 15 is a sort of a negative right and arises only on a discrimination being made on one or more of the five grounds mentioned therein. If discrimination is made on any other ground it will not mean violation of the Fundamental Right under Art. 15. Discrimination on the ground of place of birth means discrimination because a person is born at a particular place. Hence, a distinction if made by a State on the ground of residence in the matter of imparting education cannot mean a discrimination on the ground of place of birth. 11. Customary law.

——Art. 15 — Customary right — Acquisition of — Proof.

Customary rights can be recognised by Courts only if the custom is reasonable, besides being ancient and certain. The question of reasonableness has to be decided with reference to the provision contained in Art. 15 of the Constitution. If a section of the public puts forward an exclusive right to the use of a public well, it must establish that the well was not dedicated to the use of the general public but was dedicated to the exclusive use of the particular section of the public. In this respect the mere user of a well by a section of the village community, in the absence of evidence that other members of the village community had been prevented from using that well when they attempted to do so, would not be sufficient to establish dedication of the well to a particular community. ——Arts. 15, 19 — Custom — Alienation —Ancestral land — Restrictions on powers of male proprietor — If infringe fundamental rights.

The rights of a male proprietor governed by custom in ancestral land are that he holds the land as a full owner but in regard to his powers of alienation there is in his male descendants or in the collaterals connected with him from the common ancestor from which the land has descended, the right to object to the alienation if it is not with their consent or is not for necessity. The reversioners have a residuary power vested in them of controlling the alienations made by a proprietor. It cannot be said from this that the male proprietor has not the right to dispose of his property and therefore it is an interference with the right guaranteed by Art. 19 (1) (f) of the Constitution. The owner of ancestral land, which has come into the hands of a male proprietor, has "not the whole and the sole interest in the property or power to dispose of it" as this is the nature of ownership in custom and is attached to ancestral land, and it cannot be said that this is an unreasonable restriction on the exercise of any rights even if it were held that the matter falls within Art. 19 (1) (f), as is clear from Art. 19 (5).

Whoever lives in the Punjab, whether he is a Jat or Rajput or anybody and whatever be his race, he has these limitations imposed upon his power of alienation. The estate which he has in other words is of a limited nature. By the very nature of the estate that he inherits from his ancestors the power of alienation is a limited one and there is no infringement of Art. 15 either. As long as a set of people are governed by these laws these limitations will remain.

Whether the limitation is on the man or on the property, whichever way we may look at it, it is not an infringement of any fundamental right. AIR 1951 Punj 445 (446, 447) (Prs 5 to 8).

In construing a proviso one must not nullify the section itself. A proviso merely carves out something from the section itself, but it does not and cannot destroy the whole section.

Art. 15 (3) is obviously a proviso to Art. 15 (1) and proper effect must be given to the proviso. The proper way to construe Art. 15 (3) is that whereas under Art. 15 (1) discrimination in favour of men only on the ground of sex is not permissible, by reason of Art. 15 (3) discrimination in favour of women is permissible, and when the State does discriminate in favour of women, it does not offend against Art. 15 (1). Therefore, as a result of the joint operation of Art. 15 (1) and Art. 15 (3) the State may discriminate in favour of women against men, but it may not discriminate in favour of men against women.

Even if in making special provision for women by giving them reserved seats the State has discriminated against men, by reason of Art. 15 (3) the Constitution has permitted the State to do so even though the provision may result in discrimination only on the ground of sex. Therefore, S. 10 (1) (c) of the Bombay Act does not offend against Art. 15 (1) by reason of Art. 15 (3). 55 Bom L R 323 : ILR (1953) Bom 842 : AIR 1953 Bom 311 (313) (Pt E) (Pr 7) (DB).

——Art. 15 (3) — 'Provision for' — Meaning—'For' means only 'in favour of' (Words and Phrases—For).

Article 15 (3) really contemplates provision in favour of women although grammatically and etymologically, 'for' may mean 'concerning' and although, theoretically, it is possible to think of reasonable discrimination against women and children such as that they shall not be admitted to certain sections of a public museum or an art gallery where exhibits of a certain kind are to be seen. But the ordinary meaning of 'provision for' is certainly 'provision in favour of'.

Clause (3) is obviously an exception to clauses (1) and (2) of Article 15 and since its effect is to authorise what the Article otherwise, forbids, its meaning seems to be that notwithstanding that Clauses (1) and (2) forbid discrimination against any citizen on the ground of sex, the State may discriminate against males by making a special provision in favour of females. 56 Cal W N 801 : AIR 1952 Cal 825 (830) (Pt B) (Pr 20) (DB).

——Art. 15 (3)—Reference to children is pointless — (Obiter).

Obiter—There is nothing in the rest of the Article which affects children as such, because age is not one of the forbidden grounds of discrimination specified in Clauses (1) and (3) and hence the authorisation in Cl. (3) of special provisions for children, notwithstanding anything contained in Article, appears to be pointless. 56 Cal W N 801 : AIR 1952 Cal 825 (831) (Pt C) (Pr 21) (DB).

——Art. 15 (1) and (3)—Scope—Special provision — For women and children — Meaning — Identical facilities not intended.

Article 15 (1) has been expressly made subject to Art. 15 (3) which enables the State to make a special provision for women and children. The words 'for women and children' in Art. 15 (3) mean in favour of and not "against women and children." AIR 1951 Cal 563, Foll.

Held that an order of the Director of Public Instruction directing that no more women students should be admitted in College 'A' and that the women students who got themselves admitted in College 'B', a newly established College for women, would be allowed to attend classes in College 'A' for the courses of studies for which there was no affiliation in College 'B' was intended to promote the development of the new college for women and ultimately to make it a well-established and self-sufficient organisation for the education of women and was thus a special provision as contemplated by Art. 15 (3) of the Constitution, made in the interest of and for the benefit of women students in the country with the result that the operation of Art. 15 (1) was ousted.

Held further that Art. 15 (3) provides for only special provision being made for the benefit of women and does not require that absolutely identical facilities as those enjoyed by males in similar matters must be afforded to women also. ——Art. 15 (1) and (3) — Distinction — O. 25, R. 1, Civil P. C.—Validity.

Sub-article (3) only refers to future provision, that is, made after the coming into force of the Constitution and does not affect the existing law at the commencement of the Constitution such as O. 25, R. 1 (3) of the Civil P. C. Further this sub-article (3) does not protect discrimination against women or children. Difference in language used should mean a difference in meaning. It is not an absolute rule but a general principle to be deviated from only in exceptional circumstances. By using therefore the language "special provision" in Art. 15 (3) the framers of the Constitution did not intend to convey the same idea as "discriminate against" used in sub-article 1 of Art. 15. The various provisions in R. 1, O. 25 of the Civil P. C. do not at all discriminate against the female sex. Therefore, the provisions contained in O. 25, R. 1 (3) of the Civil P. C. are not ultra vires the Constitution and do not infringe the fundamental right guaranteed under Art. 15 (1) of the Constitution. ● ——Arts. 15 (4), 340 — Appointment of Commission and subsequent steps to follow under Art. 340 do not constitute condition precedent to action being taken under Art. 15 (4).

It cannot be said that it is not competent to the State to make an order under Art. 15 (4) unless a Commission has been appointed by the President under Art. 340 (1) and a copy of the report of the said Commission is laid before the House of Parliament under Art. 340 (3). Though the Constitution contemplated the appointment of a Commission by the President, whose report and recommendations it was thought, would be of assistance to the authorities concerned to take adequate steps for the advancement of Backward Classes the appointment of the Commission by the President and the subsequent steps that were to follow it did not constitute a condition precedent to any action being taken under Art. 15 (4). Art. 340 (1) itself shows that it is the Union or the State that has to take action in pursuance of the recommendations made, and so, the argument that the President alone has to act in this matter cannot be accepted. ● ——Art. 15 (4) — State can make provision under, by executive order—Legislation not necessary

It would be unreasonable to suggest that the State must necessarily mean the Legislature and not the Government. Besides, where the Constitution intended that a certain action should be taken by legislation and not by executive action it has adopted suitable phraseology in that behalf. Therefore, when Art. 15 (4) contemplates that the State can make the special provision in question, the said provision can be made by an executive order and legislation for the purpose is not necessary. ● ——Art. 15 (4)—Scope – Art. 15 (4) has to be read as proviso to Arts. 15 (1) and 29 (2).

Article 15 (4) was added by the Constitution (First Amendment) Act, 1951. The object of this amendment was to bring Articles 15 and 29 in line with Art. 15 (4). Article 15 (4) has to be read as a proviso or an exception to Arts. 15 (1) and 29 (2). If an order is justified by the provisions of Article 15 (4) its validity cannot be impeached on the ground that it violates Art. 15 (1) or Art. 29 (2). The fundamental rights guaranteed by the said two provisions do not affect the validity of the special provision which it is permissible to make under Art. 15 (4). M. R. Balaji v. ——Arts. 15 (4), 29 (2)— Art. 15 (4) amends Art. 29 (2) in respect of denials on ground of race or caste but not on ground of sex— (Dictum).

Dictum — It may be said that Art. 15 (4) has been added as an exception to that part of Art. 15 (1) which forbids discrimination on the ground of race or caste and as an amendment of that part of Art. 29 (2) which forbids denial of admission into educational institutions on the same grounds ; but since no such provision regarding educational institutions has been made in Article 15 in the case of the ground of sex, Art. 29 (2), in so far as it does not mention sex as a forbidden ground of discrimination in regard to admission into educational institutions, remains unaffected. ——Art. 15 (4)—Order No. PLM-80-MMC-64, dated 29-6-1964—Construction—Held word 'economically' in the order was a mistake for the word 'educationally.'

Held, that the Order of 1964 was purely an executive order, issued by the Government in exercise of the power conferred on it by Art. 15 (4). But that did not make it a constitutional document. Mistakes can creep into not only into legislative enactments but also into executive orders. But, the Courts, naturally, attach great deal of importance to the language of a statute, because of the formality attached to it, the care with which it is expected to be drafted and its scrutiny at various stages. It is because of this that the Courts hesitate to go behind the words of a statute. This, however, is not an invariable rule. The Courts have often read words into a statute, filled up omissions. On rare occasions they have held that a word found in a statute is a mistake for another. But as regards executive orders the position is different. An authority issuing the order is in a position to inform the Court of the intention with which the order in question was made. The explanation given by the executive is not, however, conclusive. It is one of the circumstances which may be taken into consideration in the interpretation of the Order. There were many circumstances in the present case which satisfied the Court the purpose of the Government was to reserve seats for candidates belonging to Socially and Educationally Backward Classes of citizens. Considering the explanation of the Government, the history of the reservation in question, and the internal evidence available from the order it was clear that the reservation in question was made for socially and educationally backward classes and that the word 'economically' found in it was a mistake for the word 'educationally'. The mistake that had crept into the Order caused no prejudice to the petitioners. The income and the occupation tests laid down therein were the very tests laid down in the previous order the tests which were held to be relevant for finding out social and educational backwardness. ——Arts. 15 (4), 340 — Order under Art. 15 (4) — Appointment of commission under Art. 340 and their report is not a condition precedent.

Though the Constitution contemplates, under Art. 340 the appointment of a commission by the President, whose report and recommendations would be of assistance to the authorities concerned to take steps for the advancement of Backward Classes, the appointment of the Commission by the President and the subsequent steps that were to follow it, do not constitute a condition precedent to any action being taken by a State under Art. 15 (4). It is to the extent as provided in Art. 15 (4) that the fundamental rights conferred upon the citizens by Art. 15 and Art. 29 (2) could be abridged. If the reservation in question cannot be justified by the provisions of Art. 15 (4) then the same has to be struck down as infringing the fundamental rights of the citizens. 15 (a). Socially and educationally backward classes.

● ——Art. 15 (4)—"Socially and educationally backward classes" — Classification made on basis of economic condition and occupation only — Order of Government is not bad on the ground that caste has not been considered.

An order of the Government making a classification of socially and educationally backward classes on the basis of economic condition only is not bad because it has not been done by taking into consideration the caste also. The authority concerned may take caste into consideration in ascertaining the backwardness of a group of persons; but if it does not, its order will not be bad on that account, if it can ascertain the backwardness of a group of persons on the basis of other relevant criteria. Caste is not a compelling circumstance in ascertaining the backwardness of a class and where it can be done the social backwardness of a group of citizens can be determined without reference to caste at all.

Articles 46, 341, 342 and 15 (4) form a group which has relevance in making of a special provision for advancement of any socially and educationally backward classes of citizens in the matter of admissions to colleges.

The important factor to be noticed in Art. 15 (4) is that it does not speak of castes, but only speaks of classes. If the makers of the Constitution intended to take castes also as units of social and educational backwardness, they would have said so as they have said in the case of the Scheduled Castes and the Scheduled Tribes. Though it may be suggested that the wider expression "classes" is used in Cl. (4) of Art. 15 as there are communities without castes, if the intention was to equate classes with castes, nothing prevented the makers of the Constitution to use the expression "backward classes or castes." The juxtaposition of the expression, "Backward Classes" and "Scheduled Castes" in Art. 15 (4) also leads to a reasonable inference that the expression "classes" is not synonymous with castes. A I R 1963 S C 649, Explained; Observations to contrary in Writ Petns. Nos. 1592 and 1522 of 1963, D/- 30-9-1963 (Mys), Overruled.

Mudholkar J. (Contra). — It would not be in accordance either with Cl. (1) of Art. 15 or Cl. (2) of Art. 29 to require the consideration of the castes of persons to be borne in mind for determining what are socially and educationally backward classes. It is true that Cl. (4) of Art. 15, contains a non-obstante clause with the result that power conferred by that clause can be exercised despite the provisions of cl. (1) of Art. 15 and cl. (2) of Art. 29. But that does not justify the inference that castes have any relevance in determining what are socially and educationally backward communities. Chitralekha v. State of Mysore, (1965) 1 S C A 132 : (1964) 6 S C R 368 : A I R 1964 S C 1823 (1833, 1834, 1842, 1843) (Pt D) (Prs 15, 18, 19, 43).

● —Art. 15 (4) — Special provision for advancement of socially and educationally backward classes of citizens — Order of Mysore Goyernment dated 31-7-1962 reserving seats in technical institutions for backward classes — Validity—Under the Order, classification is based solely on considerations of caste—Order is therefore invalid.

The Backward Classes for whose improvement special provision is contemplated by Art. 15 (4) are in the matter of their backwardness comparable to Scheduled Castes and Scheduled Tribes. The backwardness under Art. 15 (4) must be social and educational. In dealing with the question as to whether any class of citizens is socially backward or not, it may not be irrelevant to consider the caste of the said group of citizens.

Under the order of the Government of Mysore State (dated 31-7-1962) by which 68 per cent. of seats available for admission to the Engineering and Medical Colleges and to other technical institutions are reserved for backward classes, more backward classes, scheduled castes and scheduled tribes the classification of the socially backward classes of citizens made by the State proceeds on the consideration only of their castes without regard to the other factors which are undoubtedly relevant. If that be so, the social backwardness of the communities to whom the impugned order applies has been determined in a manner which is not permissible under Art. 15 (4) and that itself would introduce an infirmity which is fatal to the validity of the said classification. M. R. Balaji v. State of Mysore, (1963) 2 S C A 1 : 1962 Ker L T (SC) 145 : (1963) Supp (1) S C R 439 : A I R 1963 S C 649 (658, 659, 660) (Pt D) (Prs 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25).

● —Art. 15 (4) — Order of Mysore Government dated 31-7-62 reserving seats for backward classes in technical institutions — Validity — It would not be possible to sever the invalid provisions of the impugned order — If categorisation of backward classes is invalid Supreme Court cannot and would not attempt the task of enumerating said categories — If percentage of reservation is improper and outside Art. 15 (4), Supreme Court would not attempt to lay down definitely and in an inflexible manner as to what would be proper percentage to reserve. M. R. Balaji v. State of Mysore, (1963) 2 S C A 1 : 1962 Ker L T (SC) 145 : (1963) Supp 1 S C R 439 : A I R 1963 S C 649 (661, 662) (Pt F) (Pr 29).

● —Art. 15 (4) — Extent of special provision — Order of Mysore Government, dated 31-7-62 reserving seats for backward classes in technical institutions — Reservation of 68 per cent. is inconsistent with Art. 15 (4). ● —Art. 15 (4) — Order of Mysore Government dated 31-7-1962 reserving seats for backward classes in technical institution — Validity — Classification made between backward classes and more backward classes not warranted by Art. 15 (4).

The sub-classification made by the order of the Mysore Government dated 31-7-1962 between backward classes and more backward classes does not appear to be justified under Art. 15 (4). Art. 15 (4) authorises special provision being made for the really backward classes. In introducing two categories of backward classes what the impugned order, in substance, purports to do is to devise measures for the benefit of all the classes of citizens who are less advanced, compared to the most advanced classes in the State and that is not the scope of Art. 15 (4). The result of the method adopted by the impugned order is that nearly 90% of the population of the State is treated as backward, and that illustrates how the order in fact divides the population of the State into most advanced and the rest, and puts the latter into two categories of backward and more backward. The classification of the two categories, therefore, is not warranted by Art. 15 (4). M. R. Balaji v. State of Mysore, (1963) 2 S C A 1 : 1962 Ker L T (SC) 145 : (1963) Supp (1) S C R 439 : A I R 1963 S C 649 (663) (Pt H) (Pr 35).

● —Art. 15 (4) — Measures to be taken by State Government for removing backwardness.

If the State Government has decided to afford financial assistance, and make monetary grants to students seeking higher education where it is shown that the annual income of their families is below a prescribed minimum, it may afford relief to and assist the advancement of the backward classes in the State, because backwardness, social and educational, is ultimately and primarily due to poverty. An attempt can also be made to start newer and more educational institutions, polytechnics, vocational institutions and even rural Universities and thereby create more opportunities for higher education. This dual attack on the problem posed by the weakness of backward communities can claim to proceed on a rational, broad and scientific approach which is consistent with, and true to, the noble ideal of a secular welfare democratic State set up by the Constitution of this country. Such an approach can be supplemented, if necessary, by providing special provision by way of reservation to aid the backward classes and Scheduled Castes and Tribes. In taking executive action to implement the policy of Art. 15 (4), it is necessary for the States to remember that the policy which is intended to be implemented is the policy which has been declared by Art. 46 and the preamble of the Constitution. It is for the attainment of social and economic justice that Art. 15 (4) authorises the making of special provisions for the advancement of the communities there contemplated even if such provisions may be inconsistent with the fundamental rights guaranteed under Art. 15 or Art. 29 (2) The context, therefore, requires that the executive action taken by the State must be based on an objective approach, free from all extraneous pressures. The said action is intended to do social and economic justice and must be taken in a manner that justice is and should be done. M R. Balaji v State of Mysore, (1963) 2 S C A 1 : 1962 Ker L T (S C) 145 : (1963) Supp (1) S C R 439 : AIR 1963 S C 649 (663, 664) (Pt K) (Pr 36).

——Arts 15 (4) and 29 (2) — Admission into educational institutions — Reservation of seats for backward classes—Principle of selection.

The fundamental right of a citizen whether he belongs to a backward community or not is to secure admission in any educational institution maintained by the State without his being discriminated on ground only of religion, race, caste or any of them. In exercise of the power under Art. 15 (4) of the Constitution of India, a State may direct that certain per cent of the seats in each faculty of educational institution should be reserved for candidates from backward classes. The rule should be worked out in such a way as to protect the interests of students of the backward classes without at the same time causing prejudice to students of other communities. ——Art. 15 (4) — Order under, reserving seats in educational institutions for certain backward classes —Reasons for considering them backward not stated therein—Order not invalid on that ground.

An order made by the State Government under Art. 15 (4) reserving seats in certain educational institutions for some backward classes specified therein need not disclose any reasons for the State Government classifying the particular groups mentioned therein as backward. If the State Government are able to satisfy the Court by any relevant materials and circumstances, that were available before them, when they passed the impugned order, the mere circumstance, that the order does not give, as such, the reasons for making the reservation will not justify the Court striking down the said order on that ground alone. 1963 Ker L T 783 : 1963 Ker L J 820 : (1963) 2 Ker L R 372 : AIR 1964 Ker 39 (51) (Pt A) (Pr 56).

——Arts. 15 (4), 14 —Classification under Art. 15 (4) — Must be according to Art. 15 (4) itself — Art. 14 does not apply.

Article 15 (4) itself provides for the manner in which the classification and in whose favour the classification is to be made. The Article lays down the test for the purpose of classification, namely the socially and educationally backward class. It also indicates the object for which the said classification is to be made. Therefore, Art. 14 does not at all come into the picture, when considering reservation to be made under Art. 15 (4). ——Arts. 15 (4), 29 (2), 46 — Admissions to educational institutions —Reservation of seats under Art. 15 (4)—Member of reserved class competing on general merit basis — Does not affect percentage of reserved seats for the class—Education.

Notwithstanding the fact that a class has been treated as Backward and given protection under Art 15 (4) by providing a particular percentage for that group, it does not take away the right of any member of that group from competing on the general merit basis, and securing as many seats as possible. That circumstance cannot be taken into account for cutting down the percentage that is fixed for that class as a whole, by action taken under Art. 15 (4). The few seats that may be captured by members of that group on a general merit basis, are seats obtained by them in their individual right in accordance with the guarantee given to them under Art 29 (2), and not as members of a backward class, for whom protection is provided under Art. 15 (4). To hold, otherwise, would mean that the provisions of Art. 15 (4), which are really intended for the advancement of the weaker sections of the citizens, are really invoked for the purpose of causing prejudice to the members of that class. That certainly is not the intention of the Constitution. (1963) 2 Ker L R 372 : 1963 Ker L T 783 : 1963 Ker L J 820 : AIR 1964 Ker 39 (64) (Pt E) (Prs 107, 108).

——Art 15 (4) — 'Socially and educationally backward classes'—Who are —Decision rests with State — Such decision is open to judicial review - Order of State presumed to be valid — Burden of proving invalidity is on person challenging it — Nature of proof required.

Under Art. 15 (4) of the Constitution, it is the State that has to determine who the socially and educationally backward classes are. It is true that the State's decision in this regard is open to judicial review. But in the very nature of things, the State is in a better position to deal with this great social problem. Further, law presumes that in passing an order under Art. 15 (4), the State has acted in the interests of society. Unless the persons who challenge the validity of the order are able to demonstrate that the order passed by the State is either ultra vires of the Constitution or is a fraud on the Constitution, the order will have to be upheld. It is not sufficient if they show that the impugned order is not very best that could have been passed. They must go further and show that the same directly or indirectly contravenes one or the other of the constitutional provisions or is a fraud on the Constitution. (1963) 2 Mys L J 302 : AIR 1964 Mys 132 (135) (Pt A) (Pr 7) (DB).

——Art. 15 (4) — Socially and educationally backward classes—Advancement of—Nature of the question — Challenge to validity of government order under Art 15 (4) — Sectional approach deprecated—Duty of Judges.

The problem of advancement of the socially and educationally backward classes of citizens certainly calls for a balancing of the immediate requirements of the nation with its long range interests. It is unfair to adopt a sectional approach in these matters and that more particularly by the advanced sections of the people. Further, in pronouncing on such a social question, nay a human problem, the judges should not forget their own limitations. They should, while in no manner limiting the scope of their judicial review, be dictated by their sense of responsibility and self-restraint and the sobering reflection that the Constitution is meant not only for people of our way of thinking but for all and that the Cabinet representing the majority in the Legislature democratically elected has taken the impugned decision. (1963) 2 Mys L J 302 : AIR 1964 Mys 132 (136, 138) (Pt C) (Prs 9, 15) (DB).

——Art. 15 (4)— Admissions to technical and professional colleges— Government order prescribing interview for selection —Subjects and marks to be allotted specified — Order not conferring arbitrary powers—Selection Committee not following instructions properly — Interviews held invalid — (University).

Where a Government order relating to admissions of the backward class students to the technical and professional colleges prescribed that the students should be interviewed by a committee, that certain number of marks should be given and also specified five heads in respect of which marks were to be allotted, it did not mean that the Government had conferred an unguided power on the Committees. In the absence of specific allocation of marks for each head, it must be presumed that the Government considered that each of the heads mentioned in the order as being equal in importance to any other. In other words, intention of the Government was that each one of those heads should carry 1/5th of the 'interview' marks.

Held, however, that the Selection Committees had misinterpreted the scope of the powers conferred on them and had not exercised the power conferred in a reasonable manner. The interviews were, therefore, held as vitiated and were quashed. (1963) 2 Mys L J 302 : AIR 1964 Mys 132 (141) (Pt C) (Pr 22) (DB).

——Arts. 15 (4) and 29 (2) — Scope — Criteria for determining educationally backward classes — Classification on basis of caste or literacy — Admission to Medical and Technical Colleges — Reservation of seats for backward classes — Validity — If discriminatory and unconstitutional.

A special provision for the educational advancement of any backward class of citizens though comprised within the directive principles of the State Policy, can be made only by way of a permissible abridgment of the fundamental rights under Arts. 15 and 29 (2). The 4th clause of Art. 15 comprises two ideas — One of classifying citizens as socially and educationally backward and the other making special provision for their advancement. The former has relevance to the ideas of equality and non-discrimination and the latter to the ambit of the restraint which could lawfully be placed upon the fundamental right. What the Constitution really prohibits is a discrimination based on grounds only of caste. If, however, a group of persons clearly identifiable by their caste is really backward socially and educationally, and is on that basis given the benefit of certain reservations, the ineligibility of a person belonging to another caste to secure those reservations is clearly not based on the ground of caste but is a consequence of the reservation properly made in favour of a backward class. Such a classification will be open to challenge if it can be shown that the preference given will virtually amount to a preference on the ground caste alone. A I R 1960 Mys 338, Foll.

Held, on facts : (i) that literacy as a test of educational backwardness adopted by the Backward Classes Committee for the classification was both an intelligible one and reasonably related to the object to be gained.

(ii) The fact that the classification can be made on other basis is no ground for striking down one made on the basis or a criterion not shown to be unreasonable.

(iii) The selection of the candidates on the basis of marks awarded at the interview by the Selection Committee in addition to the marks obtained at the qualifying examinations could not be attacked as improper.

(iv) For reservation of a certain number of percentage of seats to be constitutionally correct, it should not be in the nature of compartmentalisation but in the nature of a guaranteed minimum in the course of a general competition among all categories of citizens.

The Scheduled Castes, Scheduled Tribes and other Backward Classes are three different categories whose classification is based on different indicia and the classification of the third may vary from time to time and with reference to the nature of their backwardness.

Hence, the allotment of seats under the provisions of the impugned orders in favour of the other Backward Classes in excess of the 22 per cent. reserved for them in a manner otherwise than by open competition is an unreasonable restraint on the fundamental right of other citizens and therefore opposed to the Constitution. 39 Mys L J 159 : ILR (1961) Mys 140 : AIR 1961 Mys 220 (230, 231, 233, 234, 235) (Pt B) (Prs 39, 43, 57, 62, 66, 67, 69) (DB).

——Art. 15 (4) —Scope—Notification reserving percentage of admissions to medical college, to certain classes on grounds of social and educational backwardness—When amounts to fraud on Constitution—Tests.

If it is found that by Government notification (reserving certain percentage of admissions to medical colleges to certain classes) under Art. 15 (4) classes other than socially and educationally backward classes have been benefited, or if it is found that classes who are socially and educationally backward have not been benefited, then the notification will amount to fraud on the Constitution.

In order to amount to a fraud on the Constitution it is not necessary that the act in question must be a mala fide one or brought into existence with fraudulent intent. A I R 1952 S C 252, Rel on.

Held, that inasmuch as in the notification the list of backward classes included 95 per cent. of the population of the State and excluded only a few of the communities, e. g., Brahmins, Kayasthas, Banias, Anglo-Indians and Parsees from getting the benefit of the seats reserved for all other communities of the State, it was more a discrimination against the communities who have been excluded and those who represent only five per cent. of the population of the State than a provision, for the backward classes. The object of Art. 15 (4) was not to enable the State to make a discrimination against a small section of the population or to permit a provision being made for comparatively backward classes, i e., classes who, compared to the most forward classes, were backward. Such an order would, therefore, amount to non-compliance with the terms of and a fraud on the Constitution. Held further that the so-called provision for socially and educationally backward classes did not in fact benefit such classes as it debarred the boys of the different groups from getting any seats above the number of seats allotted to the 'backward classes' and on this ground also the notification could not be justified under Art. 15 (4). A I R 1958 Andh Pra 129, Rel. on.

The students selected and admitted into the colleges would not be affected since they were not parties to these writ petitions. ——Arts. 15 (4) and 340 — Power of State, to determine who socially and educationally are backward classes.

The State has power to determine who the socially and educationally backward classes are and to make provision for them under Art. 15 (4). The object of Art. 340 is to enable the executive to take steps to remove the difficulties of the backward classes and to improve their conditions. It is for that purpose that a Commission has to be appointed by the President. The classes enumerated by the Commission as socially and educationally backward classes, even though accepted by the President, will not for purposes of the Constitution mean the socially and educationally backward classes. In any event, when the President has not made any such specification, the State would be competent in acting under Art. 15 (4) to do so. 38 Mys L J 652 : I L R (1959) Mys 740 : AIR 1960 Mys 338 (343, 344, 345) (Pt B) (Pr 17) (DB).

——Art. 15 (4)—'Backward classes' —Determination —Basis of.

'Backward classes' can be determined on the basis of castes, and they need not always be determined on territorial, economical, occupational or some such basis. The basis on which classification of backward classes may be made would vary from State to State. 38 Mys L J 652 : I L R (1959) Mys 740 : A I R 1960 Mys 338 (345) (Pt C) (Pr 18) (DB).

15 (a) (i). Tests of social and educational backwardness.

● ——Art. 15 (4)—Educational backwardness—Order of Mysore Government, dated 31-7-1962 reserving seats in technical institutions for backward classes—Validity—Class of citizens whose average of student population was the same or just below State average cannot be treated as educationally backward.

On the figures supplied to the Nagan Gowda Committee, which admittedly were approximate and not fully accurate, the Committee came to the conclusion that the State average of student population in the last three High School classes of all High Schools in the State was 6.9 per thousand. The Committee decided that all castes whose average was less than the State average of 6.9 per thousand should be regarded as backward communities.

Held, that even assuming that the test applied was rational and permissible under Art. 15 (4), a community which satisfied the said test or was just below the said test could not be regarded as backward. It is only communities which were well below the State average that could properly be regarded as educationally backward classes of citizen. Classes of citizens whose average of student population worked below 50% of the State average were obviously educationally backward classes of citizens. Therefore the State was not justified in including in the list of Backward Classes, castes or communities whose average of student population per thousand was slightly above, or very near, or just below the State average. M. R. Balaji v. State of Mysore, (1963) 2 S C A 1 : 1962 Ker L T (S C) 145 : A I R 1963 S C 649 (660, 661) (Pt E) (Prs 26, 28).

——Arts. 15 (4), 14—Mysore Government Order No. Ed. 75 TGL 64, dated 26-7-63 reserving seats for backward class students in technical institutions—Validity of classification—Tests of—Order held not invalid.

In considering the validity of any classifications the only true tests are : (1) is the classification rational and based on intelligible differentia; and (2) has the basis of differentiation any rational nexus with its avowed policy and object? If both these tests are satisfied the Statute must be held to be valid; and in such a case the consideration as to whether the same result could not have been better achieved by adopting a different classification would be foreign to the scope of the judicial enquiry. If either of the two tests is not satisfied, the statute must be struck down as violative of Art. 14. 'Caste' basis should not be made the sole basis but should be adopted with other tests as 'occupation test', 'poverty test' and 'residence test'. AIR 1963 S C 649; AIR 1960 S C 457, Rel. on.

Thus where the validity of the Mysore Government Order No. Ed. 75 TGL 63 dated 26-7-1963 dealing with the reservation of seats to the students of the backward classes in admissions to the institutions of the technical education in the State was challenged on the ground that the order was fraud on Constitution :

Held, that the classification of socially and educationally backward classes made in the impugned order was a rational one and based on intelligible differentia and the basis of the differentiation had rational nexus with the policy intended to be implemented and the object tried to be achieved. Hence, it could not be struck down, as an invalid classification. (1963) 2 Mys L J 302 : AIR 1964 Mys 132 (139, 140) (Pt F) (Pr 18) (DB).

——Art. 15 (4)—Backward classes — Tests of social and educational backwardness.

The decision of the Government that certain classes are 'socially and educationally backward" is open to challenge in a Court of law. The Court can consider whether the classification by the Government is arbitrary or is based on any intelligible and tenable principle. If the notification by the Government is arbitrary, it can be struck down by the Court.

The determination of backward classes made in 1959 on the basis of the census report of 1941 cannot be said to be based on any intelligible principle, and the Census Report of 1941 cannot be any basis for the determination of backward classes in 1959. Educational backwardness does not necessarily mean 'social' backwardness. Clause (4) requires for its applicability both educational and social backwardness.

It was held that in this case the Government notification was arbitrary and not based on any intelligible principle. For instance, communities in which there was higher percentage of literacy than others were included as 'educationally backward' while the latter communities were excluded. The notification was struck down. 38 Mys L J 652 : ILR (1959) Mys 740 : AIR 1960 Mys 338 (346, 347) (Pt F) (Prs 23, 25) (DB).

● ——Art. 15 (4)—Reservation of seats in educational institutions for students of Scheduled Castes and Scheduled Tribes—Validity of Orders issued by State of Mysore on 10-7-1961 and 31-7-1962—Effect of decision of Supreme Court in AIR 1963 S C 649—Impugned Orders have been quashed by Supreme Court solely by reference to additional reservation made by those orders in regard to socially and educationally Backward Classes—Reservation made in respect of Scheduled Castes and Scheduled Tribes

No. 9520, dated 11-10-1958 — Order of Deputy Commissioner based on order, dated 20-8-1956 — Both orders held unconstitutional and ultra vires and are liable to be quashed by issue of certiorari.

The order of the State Government, dated 20-8-1958 in the matter of giving preference to Scheduled Castes and Scheduled tribes in the settlement of excise shops, contained in Excise Commissioner's Memo. No. 9520, dated 11-10-1958 violates the guarantee under Art. 15(1) of the Constitution inasmuch as the effect of the order is not merely to give preference to candidates belonging to scheduled castes and scheduled tribes but to exclude candidates from all other communities in cases where there was a single candidate belonging to scheduled caste or scheduled tribe, and is therefore, unconstitutional and ultra vires. It follows that the order of the Deputy Commissioner which is based on the Government order, dated 20-8-1958 and under which a member of scheduled caste or scheduled tribe is preferred to the exclusion of a person who did not belong to such caste or tribe is also illegal and ultra vires and must be quashed by grant of writ in the nature of certiorari under Art. 226 of the Constitution. A I R 1963 S C 849, Applied. As a matter of construction, it is manifest that Art. 15(4) of the Constitution is not an independent or substantive enactment but it is an exception or a qualification to the main guarantee under Art. 15 (1) of the Constitution. It is, therefore, not permissible to interpret Art. 15 (4) of the Constitution in such a way as to destroy or nullify the meaning of guarantee under Art. 15 (1) of the Constitution. It is because the interest of the society as a whole is served by promoting the advancement of the weaker elements of that society that Art. 15 (4) of the Constitution authorises special provision to be made. But if a provision which is in the nature of an exception completely excludes the rest of the society, that clearly is outside the scope of Art. 15(4). A I R 1964 Pat 393 (394, 395) (Pr 3) (DB).

——Arts. 16 and 15—Scope of.

Article 16 deals with a limited subject the subject of employment or appointment by the State. The expression "the State" is used in the wide sense in which Art. 12 defines it and Art. 16 emphasises that the State in appointing or in employing persons shall give equal opportunity to all citizens and will not make any person ineligible to hold an office or discriminate against him in respect of that office on ground of religion, race, caste, sex or place of birth. Article 15 is more general in its application and it deals with all cases of discrimination which do not fall expressly under Art. 16. Therefore although a case of discrimination may not fall under Art. 16. it may still fall under Art. 15(1) if it is not saved under Art. 15(3). 55 Bom L R 323 : I L R (1953) Bom 842 : AIR 1953 Bom 311 (314) (Pt G) (Pr 10) (DB).

——Arts. 16 (1), 309 and 310 — Equality of opportunity in matters relating to employment — Extent and scope.

Article 16 (1) of the Constitution speaks of all "matters relating to employment". The guarantee of equality embraces all matters of employment. The direction for equality of opportunity in Art. 16 (1) covers all the periods during which the public servant is employed, and thereby excludes such servants being treated arbitrarily. It is clear that rational classification is not excluded; but it is equally well settled that purposeful or invidious discrimination is barred. ——Art. 16 (1) and (2)—Relative scope.

The scope of cl (1) of Art. 16 is wider than the scope of cl. (2) of that Article Discrimination on grounds other than those mentioned in cl. ——Arts. 16, 41, 310 and 311—Scope—If controlled by Art. 41.

Article 41 has no bearing on the interpretation of Art. 16. It is manifest that the expression "public assistance" in Art. 41 refers to economic assistance or relief to people who are unemployed, or old, sick or disabled or to other similar cases of undeserved want.

The expression "appointment" in Art. 16 manifestly refers to appointment to a public office or to a public post, and it is well established that a public office is not in the nature of property or in the nature of contract. From the legal point of view, a public office is in the nature of an agency or trust created by a public authority for a public purpose. Articles 310 and 311 of the Constitution throw a mantle of protection over the public servant but the legal character of the office is not thereby altered. Therefore, it is not right to treat public appointment as "spoils" or as a species of property and the appointee to the public office as receiving public assistance or financial relief within the meaning of Art. 41. 1 (b). 'Equality of opportunity'.

● ——Art. 16 (1)—'Equality of opportunity'—Meaning of — Different rules of promotion for Station Masters and Guards — Effect of — (Indian Railway Establishment Code, Vol. I, App. II.)

The concept of equality can have no existence except with reference to matters which are common as between individuals, between whom equality is predicated. Equality of opportunity in matters of employment can be predicated only as between persons, who are either seeking the same employment, or have obtained the same employment. Equality of opportunity in matters of promotion must mean equality as between members of the same class of employees and not equality between members of separate, independent classes.

As the Road-side Station Masters and Guards are recruited separately and trained separately and have separate avenues of promotion, they form two distinct and separate classes as between whom there is no scope for predicating equality or inequality of opportunity in matters of promotion. ● ——Art. 16 — Case of grant of contract — If covered.

Article 16 provides for equality of opportunity to all citizens in matters of public employment. Employment necessarily presupposes the existence of a relationship of an employer and an employee. It cannot cover the case of a grant of a contract. The granting of a contract to an individual will not amount to employment within the meaning of Art. 16. AIR 1959 S C 490, Rel. on. ——Arts. 16, 299, 310 — 'Employment' and 'appointment' — Distinction.

The words "employment" and "appointment" connote two different conceptions. "Appointment" obviously refers to appointment to an office. The terms "appointment" therefore implies the conception of tenure, duration, emolument and duties and obligations fixed by law or by some rule having the force of law. It is obvious that these elements are absent in the case of public employment which is a contract for a temporary purpose.

The word "emplyment," refers to a condition in which a man is kept occupied in executing any work. In other words, it means not only an appointment to any office for the first time but also the continuity of that appointment. 1 (d). 'Office under the State.'

● ——Arts. 16, 13, 309 and 310 — 'Office under the State' — Meaning of — Village Munsiff under Madras Act (III of 1895), is one such office.

The Office of village munsiff under the Madras Hereditary Village Offices Act, 1895 is an 'office under the State' within the meaning of that term in Art. 16 (1) and (2) of the Constitution of India The appointment is made by the Collector, the emoluments are granted or continued by the State, the Collector has disciplinary powers over the village Munsiff including the power to remove, suspend or dismiss him, the qualifications for appointment can be laid down by the Board of Revenue. He holds a public office. He not only aids in collecting the revenue but exercises power of a Magistrate and of a Civil Judge in petty cases. He has also certain police duties as to repressing and informing about crime, etc.

Even assuming that Arts. 309 and 310 and other Articles in Chapter 1, Part XIV, of the Constitution relate only to an organised Public Service like the Indian Administrative Service, etc., the scope and effect of Cls (1) and (2) of Art 16 cannot be cut down by reference to the provisions in the Services Chapter of the Constitution. Even if there was a custom which has been recognised by law within the scope of its meaning under Art. 13 with regard to a hereditary village office, that custom must yield to a fundamental right.

The argument that Art. 16 does not apply to a hereditary village office such as a village Musiff cannot be sustained. There is nothing in the nature of the office which takes it out of the ambit of Cls. (1) and (2) of Art 16 of the Constitution AIR 1958 S C 937 and AIR 1952 Mad 150 and A I R 1954 Mad 483, Rel. on. ——Arts. 16 (1) and 12—Equality of opportunity.

Article 16 (1) of the Constitution guarantees equality of opportunity to all citizens in respect of the matters relating to employment to any office under the State. Local authorities are included in the word 'State' by virtue of Art. 12 of the Constitution. Where, therefore, an order by the State Government picked out a certain person for preferential treatment, the order was held to be discriminatory as far as the petitioner and the other candidates who had applied for the post were concerned. Rule 4 of the Rules framed under the U. P. Primary Education Act contemplates no such discrimination. A I R 1965 All 151 (153, 154) (Pt D) (Pr 9).

——Art. 16 — Applicability—Person temporarily required to discharge duties of village officer — Later on asked to hand over charge to another suitable person — If discrimination — (Madras Hereditary Village Offices Act (III of 1895), S. 10 (4)).

Article 16 of the Constitution applies only to any employment or office under the State. Where a person is temporarily required under S. 10 (4), Madras Hereditary Village Offices Act, to discharge the duties of a village officer, it cannot be said that he is appointed to any office. Further, the fact that he is chosen to execute the duties of a village officer and is required by the Collector to hand over charge to another person with a better title thereto, shows that he is not made ineligible or discriminated against by reason only of descent or that he is denied any opportunity of employment or of appointment. There is, therefore, no scope to invoke Art. 16 of the Constitution. AIR 1957 Pat 617, Disting. (1959) 2 Andh W R 364 : 1959 Andh L T 813 : I L R (1959) Andh-Pra 1137.

——Art. 16 (1) (2) — 'Appointment to office under the State'—Municipal Councillor.

The language used in Art. 16 (1) is "employment or appointment to any office under the State," and the word "appointment" must be read ejusdem generis with "employment." Further, the expression "under the State" makes it clear that the person holding office to which Art. 16 (1) applies is a person who stands to the State as a subordinate would to a higher officer, or, in other words, there must be a relationship of employer and employee between the person holding office and the State or at least there must be an element of subordination to the State in the office contemplated by Art. 16 (1).

A Councillor elected under the Bombay Municipal Boroughs Act is a part of the Municipality in which the government of the municipal borough has been vested. Therefore, far from being a person who holds office under the local authority, a councillor is a part of the local authority, itself, and hence the equality of opportunity which is required under Art. 16 (1) is not in relation to an election to a local authority.

Similarly the expression "office" occurring after "employment" in Art. 16 (2) must also be construed ejusdem generis, and the office contemplated under Art 16 (2) is also an office which would be subordinate to the local authority and over which the local authority would have powers of control and supervision. In Art. 16 (2) also the expression used is not merely "office" but "office under the State", and therefore neither Art. 16 (1) nor Art. 16 (2) has any application to the election of the Municipal Councillor 55 Bom L R 323 : ILR (1953) Bom 842 : AIR 1953 Bom 311 (312, 313) (Pt C) (Prs 3, 4) (DB).

——Art. 16, Cls 1 and 2 — Claim for Shanbhogi office based exclusively on principles of hereditary succession hits Cls. 1 & 2 and cannot be allowed.

Village Offices fall within the meaning of expression "office under the State" occurring in Cls. 1 and 2 of Art. 16 of the Constitution and the application of the principles of hereditary succession in the matter of selecting persons to fill those offices amounts to o[illegible] involves a denial of equality of opportunity to citizens in the matter of employment relating to such offices under the State and also discrimination on ground of descent.

Where, therefore, the claim of a person to a Shanbhogi office is based exclusively on the principles of hereditary succession, it is no longer possible for him, after the commencement of the Constitution, to claim to be appointed to the office on the basis of principles of hereditary succession nor is possible for the High Court to recognise and enforce such claim. AIR 1961 S C 564; AIR 1962 Mys 233, Foll.

(Prayer for setting aside the appointment of present incumbent in the office and for an order directing the authorities to make a fresh selection without regard to principles of hereditary succession not granted.) AIR 1962 Mys 233, Disting. 1963 Mys L J 354.

——Art. 16 — Office of village patel—Appointment of—Application of principles of hereditary succession is unconstitutional — Merits of contending parties should be the consideration.

The offices held by village officers fall within the meaning of the expression 'office under the State' occurring in Cls. (1) and (2) of Art. 16, and the application of the principles of hereditary succession in the matter of selecting persons to fill those posts would amount to or involve denial of equality of opportunity to citizens in a matter relating to employment to such office under the State and also discrimination on the ground of descent. Hence the application of the principles of hereditary succession to the post of a village patel is unconstitutional. Where such a post is rendered vacant the appointing authority should consider the respective merits, irrespective of and without regard to the principles of hereditary succession. ——Art. 16 (2) — 'Office under the State'—Madras Hereditary Village Offices Act (III of 1895), Ss. 3 (4), 12 and 13 — Office of village artisan—Office is held under State — S. 12 recognizing customary law of succession to such office solely on ground of descent — Section violates Art. 16 (2)—Claim to office and emoluments based on such right is unenforceable.

The incumbent of the office of village artisan under the Madras Hereditary Village Offices Act (III of 1895), is a holder of an office under the State as contemplated by Art. 16.

Section 12 of the Act in so far as it recognises the customary law of succession to a village office of artisan, like that of village blacksmith, solely on the ground of descent offends Art. 16 (2) and is invalid to that extent. Hence, the right to the office of village blacksmith, and consequently to the emoluments based on such customary law is unenforceable. 1 (f). Appointment.

——Art. 16— Governor's opinion — If justiciable — Government not bound to disclose its reasons.

There is no authority for the contention that the Government must disclose its reasons for arriving at its decision when that decision is challenged as an infringement of a fundamental right. Where therefore, in a petition under Art. 226 the Governor's opinion regarding the petitioner's unfitness for a judicial post, under R. 14 of the U. P. Civil Service (Judicial Branch) Rules, 1951 is challenged as an infringement of the fundamental right guaranteed by Art. 16, the Government is not bound to disclose the reasons on which that opinion was arrived at. AIR 1961 All 361 (363) (Pt C) (Pr 6).

——Arts. 16, 14 — Recruitment of M. ——Art. 16 — Appointment to Government service — Right of applicant to compel Government to disclose materials in the consideration of antecedents and character of applicant — Held applicant had no such right. See Ibid, Art. 226. AIR 1965 Ker 19.

——Arts. 16, 311 — Person appointed on provisional basis—Service terminated not by way of punishment but because character and antecedents of person not found satisfactory for permanent appointment — Held provisions of Arts. 16 and 311 are not violated.

Held, that the equal opportunity under Art 16 (1) and (2) is amply satisfied when a party has been given a chance to apply and his application has been considered and there is no right for getting appointed to a particular post. It is open to the appointing authorities to fix reasonable qualifications for all such applicants for being appointed to Government service. The appointing authorities are entitled to take into account the character and antecedents of the applicants and if the authorities are not satisfied on these matters that will be a good ground for refusing appointment under the State. As no action had been taken as against any of the applicants as and by way of punishment and as the services of the applicants, who were appointed on a provisional basis pending an investigation into their character and antecedents, were dispensed with because their character and antecedents were not found to be satisfactory so as to make them eligible for permanent appointment, there was no violation of the provisions of Art. 311 and Art. 16. ——Art. 16 (1) — Candidate not appointed by the State for post of munsiff on the ground that on verification of character he was found to be Communist — Exclusion is not based on irrelevant consideration and is not violative of right guaranteed by the Article.

The petitioner was selected and recommended by the Public Service Commission for appointment as Munsiff. But the State did not appoint him on the ground that on verification of his character and antecedents he was found to be a Communist and hence he was not suitable for the post. There was no lack of bona fide on the part of the Government.

Held, that the decision of the Government excluding him from appointment was not based on any irrelevant consideration and hence it was not violative of the right guaranteed by Art. 16 (1) of the Constitution. AIR 1956 S C 520; AIR 1962 S C 602; AIR 1957 Pat 617; AIR 1963 S C 268, Rel. on.

What is expected from the State under Art. 16 (1) in the matter of appointment is very much the same as what is expected from a public body in the United Kingdom. In U. K. a public body cannot be regarded as having statutory authority to act in bad faith or from corrupt motives. Further an act of the public body, even though performed in good faith and without the taint of corruption can be inoperative where it is so clearly founded on alien and irrelevant grounds as to be outside the authority conferred upon the body. 1926 Ch 66, Rel. on.

The duty and the responsibility of fixing the test of character were primarily that of the State; its discretion by its very nature would have to be large and untrammelled and the Court could not possibly substitute its own yardstick for that of the Government of the day.

The fact that the candidate was a Communist was a relevant consideration for excluding him from appointment and such exclusion would not be violative of Art. 16 (1). 1963 Ker L T 1145 : I L R (1964) 1 Ker 120 : (1964) 1 Ker L R 46 : 1963 Ker L J 1155 : (1964) 1 Lab L J 565 : AIR 1964 Ker 238 (240, 241) (Prs 11, 14, 15, 19, 20) (DB).

——Arts. 16 (1) and (2), 226, 309 — Kerala State and Subordinate Service Rules (1958), Rr. 3 (b) and 10 (b) (ii) — Scope of Art. 16 — Appointment to police service—Inclusion of names of petitioners in list of approved candidates selected by State Public Service Commission — No right to appointment to such post is conferred — State can exclude candidates from appointment if requisite qualifications prescribed by R. 10 (b) (ii) are not fulfilled—Art. 16 not violated.

What is guaranteed by Art. 16 (1) of the Constitution is equality of opportunity in the matter of appointment in State service and nothing more. It is open to the State Government, to frame the necessary rules prescribing the requisite qualifications and it is also open to the authority to lay down such prerequisite conditions for appointment, as would be conducive to the maintenance of proper discipline amongst Government servants. AIR 1956 S C 520 and A I R 1962 S C 36, Rel. on.

Held, on facts (i) that mere inclusion of the names of the petitioners in the list of approved candidates by the Public Service Commission did not confer any right to appointment to the service in view of R. 3 (b) of Kerala State and Subordinate Service Rules, 1958, framed under the proviso to Art. 309 of the Constitution. (ii) That the State Government was absolutely entitled to take the character and antecedents of the petitioners into account, because of the provisions contained in cl. (ii) of sub-rule (b) of R. 10 of the Kerala State and Subordinate Services Rules, 1958. (iii) That there was no violation of Art. 16 of the Constitution as it could not be said in the circumstances of the case that the petitioners had been denied the equal opportunity relating to the employment in the State service. Therefore, there cannot certainly be a charge of the petitioners being discriminated against in these matters by the State Government. The qualification regarding character and antecedents had reasonable basis in relation to the appointment because such a qualification is absolutely essential for all services under the State and more so when appointments are being made to Police Service. Since the petitioners had no right to the appointment to the posts, their writ petitions could not be entertained. A I R 1962 S C 602, Disting. ——Art. 16 (1)—Equality of opportunity — Qualification or standard is not abolished—State is entitled to obtain best service.

The opportunity that is guaranteed by Art. 16 (1) of the Constitution to which every citizen of the country is entitled, is an opportunity, which is subject to the other clauses of that article, but which is not limited by rank, birth, wealth or any other circumstance. The requirement of Art. 16 (1) which guarantees a fundamental right to all the citizens of the Republic of India is that each citizen shall be eligible for employment or appointment to any office under the State according to his capacity and without any distinction other than what is demanded by his own attainment or talent. It is, however, clear that such equality of opportunity does not mean the abolition of qualifications or standards or that the State is not entitled to make an appointment in accordance with its desire to get the best service that can be obtained or attach importance to the fact that the Government should be well served. ● ——Art. 16 (1)—Equality of opportunity in matter of promotion — Officers holding posts in different grades—Rules for promotion making officers in one grade eligible for promotion to higher posts, while denying that opportunity to officers in other grades —No contravention of Art. 16 (1).

Inequality of opportunity for promotion as between citizens holding different posts in the same grade may be an infringement of Art. 16.

No question of contravention of Art. 16 (1) can arise when the rules make Income-tax Officers of Class I, eligible for appointment as Assistant Commissioners, but make Income-tax Officers of Class II eligible for promotion as Income-tax Officers of Class I but not for promotion to the post of Assistant Commissioners. As between citizens holding posts in different grades in Government service there can be no question of equality of opportunity. Article 16 does not forbid the creation of different grades in the Government service. Kishori Mohanlal Bakshi v. Union of India, (1962) 44 I T R 532 : A I R 1962 S C 1139 (1140, 1141) (Pt A) (Pr 2).

● ——Art. 16 (1), (2) and (4)—Scope and effect of — Promotion to selection post — Circular by Railway Board, dated 27th April, 1959, directing reservation for Scheduled Castes and Scheduled Tribes candidates for promotion to selection-posts—Constitutional validity.

What Art. 16 (1) of the Constitution guarantees is equality of opportunity to all citizens in respect of all the matters relating to employment (including provisions as to salary, increments, leave, gratuity, pension, age of superannuation, etc.) Art. 16 (1) and (2) does not prohibit the prescription of reasonable rules for selection to any employment or appointment to any office. Like other terms and conditions, the promotion to a selection post is also included in the matters relating to employment, and even in regard to such a promotion to a selection post all that Art. 16 (1) guarantees is equality of opportunity to all citizens who enter service. Article 16 (2) prohibits discrimination and thus assures the effective enforcement of the fundamental right of equality of opportunity guaranteed by Art. 16 (1). The words 'in respect of any employment' in Art. 16 (2) must, therefore, include all matters relating to employment as specified in Art. 16 (1). Promotion to selection posts is included both under Art. 16 (1) and (2). Article 16 (4) must be construed on the basis that both 'appointments' and 'posts' to which its operative clause refers are appointments and posts in the services under the State. The power of reservation which is conferred on the State under Art. 16 (4) can be exercised by the State in a proper case not only by providing for reservation of appointments but also by providing for reservation of selection posts.

The circulars issued by the Railway Board, dated 27th April, 1959, directing reservation for Scheduled Castes and Scheduled Tribes candidates for promotion to selection posts are within the scope of Art. 16 (4) and their validity is not open to challenge.

Per Wanchoo and Rajagopala Ayyangar, JJ. (dissenting). — Giving the words used in Art. 16 (4) as liberal an interpretation as is possible without destroying or making illusory the fundamental right guaranteed in Art. 16 (1) to which Art. 16 (4) is in the nature of an exception or a proviso, Art. 16 (4) can only mean that the State has the power thereunder to reserve numerically a certain percentage of appointments or posts and it has no power to split the service into various grades and make reservation in each grade because of the use of the word 'posts' therein.

Per Rajagopala Ayyangar, J. — Article 16 (4) contemplates action in relation to and having effect in the future. To give retrospective effect to the reservation as the impugned notification has done would be to redress an inadequate representation which took place in the past by an order issued today. That is not contemplated by the power conferred to reserve which can only mean for the future. The General Manager, Southern Railway v. ——Arts. 16 (1) and 310 — Guarantee of equal opportunity in public employment—Extent of.

The guarantee of equality of opportunity for citizens under Art. 16 (1) of the Constitution in matters relating to employment or appointment to any office under the State is confined to the stage when the citizen is seeking employment or competing for any post, and has no application to matters arising after the citizen has joined service — such as promotion, selection for higher posts, increase or reduction of salary, retrenchment or termination of service. ● ——Art. 16—Scope—Relates to all matters relating to employment including promotion.

It is fairly well settled that the equality of opportunity for all citizens in matters relating to employment or appointment to any office under the State is confined not only to the initial appointments but includes also the terms and conditions of service as well as promotion to selection posts and that the words of Art. 16 (1) are wide enough to include all matters relating to employment including promotion. ——Arts. 16, 12 — Scope of Art. 16 — Matters relating to promotion are within the Article — Certain Government personnel placed at disposal of State Electricity Board — Petitioner deputed to another department temporarily — Other persons given promotions by Board — Art. 16 held violated by not considering petitioner for promotion during his deputation —Electricity (Supply) Act (1948), S. 60.

Article 16 of the Constitution enshrines the principles of equality of opportunity in matter of public employment. The phrase 'matters relating to employment or appointment to any office' must include matters relating to promotion also : AIR 1962 S C 36, Rel. on. Thus where the services of the petitioner had been placed at the disposal of the Board as a result of the formation of the State Electricity Board, the mere fact that he had since gone on deputation of a temporary character to another department is not a sound reason for not considering him for promotion to certain higher openings under the Board in the same manner as other personnel whose services were equally provisionally placed at its disposal. When, therefore, the Board failed to consider the case of the petitioner at the time of selection to certain posts under it which were higher in the rank held by him and when his services stood temporarily placed at the disposal of other department, the Board must be held to have fallen into a grave error of procedure thereby subjecting the petitioner to a denial of equal opportunity of promotion in violation of Art. 16 of the Constitution. 1965 Raj L W 388 : ILR (1965) 15 Raj 707 : AIR 1966 Raj 1 (3, 5) (Pt B) (Prs 3, 8, 9) (DB).

The power given to the Chief Justice in the matter of appointment under Art. 229 (1) of the Constitution is unfettered except to the extent it is restricted by the proviso. In making the appointments the Chief Justice exercises an administrative power and the discretion exercised by him is not justiciable. AIR 1962 S C 1704 and AIR 1955 S C 558, Rel. on.

Where the Chief Justice, makes the appointment of Assistant Registrar and Secretary to the Chief Justice under R. 10 of the Rajasthan High Court (Conditions of Service of Staff) Rules framed under Art. 229 (2) of the Constitution of India with the approval of the Rajpramukh of Rajasthan, on recommendation of the Registrar, it is not necessary for him to hear the aspirants to the posts. 1 (h). Disciplinary action.

● ——Art. 16—Equality of opportunity.

The guarantee given by Art. 16 is no bar to disciplinary action being taken against a citizen who holds an office under the State. The fact that the result of such disciplinary action may be that a citizen is deprived of promotion cannot possibly be held to be a denial of equality of opportunity relating to employment or appointment. See Ibid, Art. 14. AIR 1965 S C 280.

● ——Art. 16 (1) — Equality of opportunity for employment under State -Scope — Art. 465, Civil Service Regulations (as adapted in U. P.) regarding compulsory retirement does not infringe Art. 16 of Constitution.

It is well settled that "matters relating to employment or appointment to any office" mean matters relating not only to the commencement of employment or appointment but also to its continuity and its termination. A I R 1957 Pat 617 and A I R 1959 Bom 134 and A I R 1962 S C 36 (overruling A I R 1960 All 484), Foll.

The rule regarding compulsory retirement does not deny equality of opportunity for employment. Compulsory retirement is to be ordered only in public interest and every servant of the State is equally liable to be compulsorily retired in public interest under the rule. The rule certainly does not distinguish between one servant who deserves to be compulsorily retired in public interest and another servant who also deserves it. A I R 1965 S C 280, Foll. The case of compulsory retirement in accordance with the rules of service does not differ from that of discharge from service on completion of the term of the contract, as regards the freedom guaranteed by Art. 16. 1 (k). Termination of service.

● ——Art. 16—Termination of services of temporary servant under R. 5 of the Central Civil Services (Temporary Service) Rules because of his unsatisfactory work and not because of abolition of post — Order cannot be attacked as being discriminatory because, there were junior and less qualified servants whose services were not terminated — Question of discrimination would arise if the post was retrenched. ● ——Art. 16 (1)—Scope — Assuming that the article may be violated by an arbitrary and discriminatory termination of service the arbitrary and discriminatory nature of the termination of service must first be established before Art. 16 can have any application—The fact that the service of an employee was terminated while employees junior to him were retained in service does not by itself prove unequal treatment. Union of India v. Pandurang Kashinath More, (1961-62) 21 F J R 5 : (1961) 2 Lab L J 427 : (1961) 3 Fac L R 323 : A I R 1962 S C 630 (632) (Pt B) (Pr 8).

——Art. 16—Scope of—Temporary posts—Termination of service of a person appointed temporarily on the ground that he is a non-Andhra — Validity — If repugnant to Art. 16.

Clause (2) of Article 16 applies with equal rigour to all posts under the State, permanent as well as temporary. It is not permissible to engraft limitations upon the fundamental rights enshrined in the Constitution.

Where, therefore, the petitioner was appointed temporarily to act as a compounder and later he was ousted from service on the sole ground that he is a non-Andhra, having been born in North Arcot District, on the question whether such discrimination is repugnant to the express provisions of Clause (2) of Article 16.

Held, the order by which the petitioner was ousted and replaced by another on the one and only ground that the petitioner is a non-Andhra is repugnant to the express provisions of Clause (2) of Art. 16 and is as such void. 1959 Andh L T 59 : (1959) 1 Andh W R 71 : A I R 1959 Andh Pra 185 (185) (Prs 4, 5) (DB).

——Arts. 16, 310 and 311—Applicability—Employment under State.

The general principle that all employment under the Union or a State is durante bene placito does not in the least militate against the constitutional prohibition in Art. 16 that there shall be no arbitrary discrimination between one citizen and another in matters of service under the State. Article 16 therefore cannot be ignored in any such case and there can be no arbitrary discrimination even in matters to which the provisions of Arts. 310 and 311 may apply. ——Arts. 16, 311—Scope — Equality of opportunity—Employment under State — Principle of equal treatment — Applicability when employment is terminated—Temporary services—If covered.

Article 16 speaks of all 'matters relating to employment' and it is impossible to accede to the suggestion that what is contemplated by Art. 16 is only the initial stage when the citizen is employed to serve the State. The same principle governs the case when the appointment or employment is sought to be terminated.

Article 16 is in plain general terms and the guarantee extends to every citizen and every employment or appointment whether permanent or temporary. It is essentially a question not of the nature or tenure of the engagement but of the basic guarantee of equal treatment assured by the Constitution. If the termination of service was on grounds extraneous, the order of termination would be without competence and jurisdiction and order must be treated as if it had not been made at all. (1958) 2 Lab L J 38 : 60 Bom L R 342 : I L R (1958) Bom 1266 : A I R 1959 Bom 134 (139, 140) (Pt G) (Prs 18, 19, 20) (DB).

——Art. 16 — Equality of opportunity for employment under State — Retrenchment — Preference shown to political sufferers and displaced persons — Validity.

The Bihar Government Circular dated 23-2-1954, while retrenching the inspectorate staff of the Supply Department, on account of reduction of work, directed : "The required number of staff has now been retained in order of seniority, on the basis of their service records and for their being political sufferers. .....and displaced persons even though they are junior in services." The Government Circular violates the guarantee under Art 16 and was, therefore, invalid. The selective test imposed by the Government is not rational or reasonable. It is based on extraneous or collateral considerations which should have no relevance in a matter of this description.

Even if the Government Circular could be construed to mean that the authority would give preference to "political sufferer" and "displaced persons" only if all the candidates are equally efficient otherwise, the Government Circular must be held to be illegal, because the appointing authority has addressed itself both to irrelevant as well as to relevant considerations.

Per Das C J., Dissenting; The contention that the classification of displaced persons or political sufferers is an unreasonable classification or that such classification has no relation to the object or purpose of State employment, cannot be accepted. ILR 35 Pat 1 : 1956 B L J R 458 : (S) AIR 1957 Pat 617 (622, 624, 628, 629, 633) (Pt E) (Prs 15, 26, 43, 46, 55) (DB).

● ——Art. 16 — Equality of opportunity—Entry in Government service—Power of Government to prescribe rules of selection of candidates.

It is open to the appointing authority to lay down the requisite qualifications for recruitment to Government service and it is open to that authority to lay down such prerequisite conditions of appointment as would be conducive to the maintenance of proper discipline amongst Government servants. If persons already under Government employment on part time basis have shown themselves not to be amenable to proper discipline in Government offices, it is open to Government not to appoint such persons to the permanent cadre of service because such persons cannot be said to be as efficient as those who have excellent records of service and have shown greater sense of responsibility to their employers. Art. 16 of the Constitution is an instance of the application of the general rule of equality laid down in Art. 14, with special reference to the opportunity for appointment and employment under the Government. Selection for appointment in Government service has got to be on a competitive basis and those whose past service has been free from blemish can certainly be said to be better qualified for Government service than those whose record was not free from any blemish. ——Art. 16—Selection of persons for retrenchment —If violates Art. 16—Whether justiciable.

As in the case of appointments, so also for purposes of retrenchment, a certain selection and gradation of the persons concerned becomes inevitable. This cannot amount to a denial of the equality of opportunity which Art. 16 guarantees. AIR 1952 Trav-Co 7, Relon.

Selection of persons for retrenchment is principally a subjective matter for the authorities concerned. It cannot, therefore, be justiciable unless there is infringement of any constitutional or legal right. 1955 Nag L J 611 : ILR (1955) Nag 800 : AIR 1955 Nag 289 (289, 290) (Pt A) (Prs 5, 7) (DB).

——Art. 16 — Equality of opportunity for employment under State—Selective test—Validity.

Equality of opportunity mentioned in Art. 16 (1) does not preclude the administrative authority from making a selection from numerous candidates before making appointments; but the selective test employed must be reasonable and not arbitrary. No selective test can be reasonable unless there is some proximate connection between the selective test and the efficient performance of the duties and obligations of the particular office. The administrative authority has a wide range of discretion in making the appointment. The administrative authority may lay down qualifications for the office, qualifications not only of mental excellence but also of physical fitness, sense of discipline, moral integrity and loyalty to the State. In the case of technical appointments the administrative authorities may further require evidence of technical qualification and standards. ILR 35 Pat 1 : 1956 B L J R 458 : AIR 1957 Pat 617 (628) (Pt C) (Pr 43).

——Art. 16—Equality of opportunity in employment under State.

The object of the article is to ensure equality of opportunity for all citizens in matters relating to appointment to public offices. The principle of equality of opportunity enunciated in Cl. (1) of Art. 16 cannot be regarded as violated where a selection is made according to the merits of candidates and all are subjected to the same rules and tests. The discrimination between persons who are accepted and those who are rejected is inevitable in every selection for an employment or appointment and there can be nothing wrong in such a discrimination. ILR (1955) Patiala 703 : AIR 1956 Pepsu 26 (29) (Pt C) (Pr 14).

——Art. 16 — Discrimination — Selection whether amounts to.

Discrimination as between those 'acceptable' and those 'unacceptable' is inevitable in any process of selection and grading and there can be nothing wrong in such a discrimination. Thus where all officers of certain Part B States Forces were subjected to the screening by the Selection Board, and those who were graded as 'acceptable' were given Commission as Officers in the regular Indian Army, and as between Officers similarly situated there had been no discrimination in the matter of being subjected to 'screening', the officers who were graded as unacceptable as the result of such screening cannot complain that there was any discrimination violating the fundamental right guaranteed by Art. 16 of the Consti tution. 1951 Ker L Tim 385 : AIR 1952 Trav-Co 7 (10) (Pt D) (Pr 7).

——Arts. 16, 14 — Scope and object — U. P. G. O., dated 7-3-1953—Validity—Equality of opportunity for employment under State—Discrimination.

Article 16 of the Constitution was not intended to prevent the State Government from laying down the qualifications for a service, within which term should be included not only educational qualifications but also physical fitness, age, character, sense of discipline, etc. What are the qualifications that are required and what should disqualify a person from Government service are matters in which the discretion should vest in the State Government and unless there has been a flagrant abuse of power, or there has been discrimination which has contravened any provision of the Constitution the Courts should not lightly interfere.

Held, that the State of U. P. was entitled to lay down that it would not re-appoint those Patwaris who had taken part in the mass agitation with the object of putting undue pressure on the State Government and that the rule in U. P. G. O., dated 7-3-1953 which excluded those Patwaris who had resigned and who had not withdrawn their resignations by the 4th March, 1953 from re-appointment was not contrary to the provisions of Art. 16. The fact that some of these who had resigned and had before the due date withdrawn their resignation was a relevant factor which might have influenced the State Government in deciding to re-appoint them provided their character rolls were good and they had not attained a particular age.

It could not also be said that there was any discrimination within Art. 14 if there was some reasonable basis for excluding the Patwaris who had resigned en masse and had not withdrawn their resignation. 1954 All L J 618 : AIR 1955 All 33 (36) (Pt A) (Prs 12, 13) (DB).

The emphasis in clause (2) of Art 16 is on the word 'only'. Where there is discrimination only on the ground of descent that clause of the article may be attracted, but where discrimination is based partly on the ground of descent and partly on the other considerations which are relevant for the purpose of appointment to the post, there will be no contravention of that clause.

Doubtless, the post of a Jhankar is an office under the State. It is always open to the appointing authorities to lay down certain qualifications for the post of a watchman of a village, and if they consider that a watchman will discharge his duty more satisfactorily if he knows that any misconduct on his part would not only entail his dismissal but may also have the effect of forfeiting the rights of his descendants to succeed to the post, it is open to them to provide in the rules for such restraining influence on the conduct of the watchman Such a provision cannot be held to be unreasonable. ● ——Arts. 16 (4), 14 46, 335, Preamble — Scope of Art. 16 (4) — Communal representation in Central Services Reservation of vacancies for Scheduled Castes and Scheduled Tribes — Provision adopting principle of 'carry forward' in second and third year —Carry forward rule permitting reservation of more than 50% vacancies in third year — Carry forward rule held unconstitutional and invalid—Government of India Resolution (Ministry of Home Affairs), dated 13-9-1950 (as modified by Supplementary Instructions dated 28-1-1952 and Office Memorandum No 2-11-55-RPS, dated 7-5-1955) — Constitutionally invalid.

Held (per Majority; Subba Rao J., contra) : that the 'carry forward' rule as modified in 1955 was bad and must be struck down as invalid and unconstitutional. AIR 1963 S C 649, Applied.

Per Majority.—What is meant by equality in Art. 14 is equality amongst equals. It does not provide that what is aimed at is an absolute equality of treatment to all persons in utter disregard in every conceivable circumstance of the differences such as age, sex, education and so on and so forth as may be found amongst people in general. Indeed, while the aim of this Article is to ensure that invidious distinction or arbitrary discrimination shall not be made by the State between a citizen and a citizen who answers the same description and the differences which may obtain between them are of no relevance for the purpose of applying a particular law, reasonable classification is permissible. It does not mean anything more.

The purpose of Art. 16 (4) is to ensure that people, because of their backwardness, should not be unduly handicapped in the matter of securing employment in the various services of the State. This provision therefore, contemplates reservation of appointments or posts in favour of backward classes who are not adequately represented in the services under the State. Where, therefore, the State makes a rule providing for the reservation of appointments and posts for such backward classes it cannot be said to have violated Art. 14 merely because members of the more advanced classes will not be considered for appointment to these posts even though they may be equally or even more meritorious than the members of the backward classes. Where the object of a rule is to make reasonable allowance for the backwardness of members of a class by reserving certain proportion of appointments for them in the public services of the State what the State would in fact be doing would be to provide the members of backward classes with an opportunity equal to that of the members of the more advanced classes in the matter of appointments to public services. If the reservation is so excessive that it practically denies a reasonable opportunity for employment to members of other communities the position may well be different and it would be open then for a member of a more advanced class to complain that he has been denied equality by the State.

The problem of giving adequate representation to members of backward classes enjoined by Art. 16 (4) of the Constitution is not to be tackled by framing a general rule without bearing in mind its repercussions from year to year. What precise method should be adopted for this purpose is a matter for the Government to consider. While any method can be evolved by the Government it must strike a reasonable balance between the claims of the backward classes and claims of other employees. A I R 1963 S C 649 and AIR 1962 S C 36, Rel. on.

The guarantee contained in Art. 16 (1) is for ensuring equality of opportunity for all citizens relating to employment, and to appointments to any office under the State. Clause (4) of Art. 16 is by way of a proviso or an exception to Cl. (1). A proviso or an exception cannot be so interpreted as to nullify or destroy the main provision. To hold that unlimited reservation of appointments could be made under Cl. (4) would in effect efface the guarantee contained in Cl. (1) or at best make it illusory. The over-riding effect of Cl. (4) on Cls. (1) and (2) could only extend to the making of a reasonable number of reservation of appointments and posts in certain circumstances. That is all.

Under Art. 16 (4), it is clear that reservation of a reasonable percentage of posts for members of the Scheduled Castes and Tribes is within the competence of the State. What the percentage ought to be must necessarily depend upon the circumstances obtaining from time to time. The Government resolution does not contemplate reservation of any posts in the service cadre but merely provides for reservation of vacancies. Even if the Government had provided for the reservation of posts for Scheduled Castes and Tribes, a cent. per cent. reservation of vacancies, to be filled in a particular year or reservation of vacancies in excess of 50% would not be constitutional. AIR 1963 S C 649, Rel. on.

Per Subba Rao J., contra.—The impugned provision of reservation of posts made by the Government of India in favour of the Scheduled Castes and Scheduled Tribes does not offend Art. 16 (4) of the Constitution.

If a provision is for the reservations of appointments or posts the clause does not further circumscribe the power of the State to make any provision to achieve that object. That reservation must be in favour of any backward class of citizens.

It cannot be said that the provision for 'carry forward' is not for the reservation of appointments for the said castes and tribes There are no merits in the contention that, the principle of 'carry forward' has resulted in the third year in the selection of candidates belonging to the Scheduled Castes and the Scheduled Tribes to a tune of 80 per centum of the total applicants for that year and, therefore, the selection amounted to destruction of the fundamental right. If reservation was within the competence of the State the said fortuitous circumstance could not affect the reservation so made.

If the provision deals with reservation it will not be bad because there will be some deterioration in the standard of service. A I R 1963 S C 649, Explained and Disting. The circulars issued by the Railway Board, dated 27-4-59 and 12-6-59, ordering reservation of selection posts in the railway service in favour of the members of the Scheduled Castes and Scheduled Tribes do not fall outside Art. 16 (4) and are not ultra vires on that ground. Promotion to selection posts is included both under Art. 16 (1) and (2) ; A I R 1959 Bom 134 and AIR 1957 Pat 617, Approved: AIR 1960 All 484 Disapproved. Article 16 (1) or (2) does not prohibit the prescription of reasonable rules for selection to any employment or appointment to any office ; but in regard to employment like other terms and conditions associated with and incidental to it, the promotion to a selection post is also included in the matters relating to employment, and even in regard to such a promotion to a selection post all that Art. 16 (1) guarantees is equality of opportunity to all citizens who enter service.

The words 'in respect of any employment' used in Art. 16 (2) must include all matters relating to employment as specified in Art. 16 (1). Therefore, promotion to selection posts is included both under Art. 16 (1) and (2).

The condition precedent for the exercise of the powers conferred by Art. 16 (4) is that the State ought to be satisfied that any backward class of citizens is not adequately represented in its services, inclusive of selection posts in the services as well. The context requires that 'posts' should be deemed to be posts inside services and not outside them. The power of reservation which is conferred on the State under Art. 16 (4) can be exercised by the State in a proper case not only by providing for reservation of appointments but also by providing for reservation of selection posts. ——Art. 16 (4)—Reservation can be small portion of the main — Seven out of ten appointments going to candidates belonging to different communities coming under the heading 'backward classes' —Appointments are not invalid.

Article 16 (4) is in the nature of an exception to what is stated in Art. 16 (1) of the Constitution and the word 'reservation' signifies that it can be a small portion of the main. For ten appointments to be filled up, if there are candidates belonging to ten backward classes of citizens who in the opinion of the State, are inadequately represented in the service, it will not be wrong for the State to allot all the appointments to the ten communities coming under the heading 'backward classes of citizens'. ——Art. 16 (4)—Mysore Munsiffs (Recruitment and Promotions) Rules (1954), R. 7 (2) does not offend Art. 16 (4).

There is nothing wrong in allotting the posts reserved for Scheduled Castes and Tribes to other backward classes of citizens when there are no qualified candidates belonging to the former category or in preferring a candidate belonging to a more backward class to another candidate of the backward class which has got better representation in services. This does not offend the provisions of Art. 16 (4). On the other hand, this rule is in consonance with those provisions. I L R (1955) Mys 597 : A I R 1956 Mys 20 (25) (Pt J) (Pr 13) (DB).

On a panel, approved for promotion, by the Railway authority, A's name appeared above that of B and he was entitled to a preferential treatment in the matter of promotion to a higher post, which was not reserved for scheduled caste. Both of them were promoted in officiating capacity to the post of Chief Clerk by a common order. While A was retained on the post B was reverted to the post of Head Clerk. On B obtaining a certificate for the first time and long after his reversion that he belonged to scheduled caste and filing a representation before the authorities to revert A to afford an opportunity to him A was reverted by a speaking order.

Held, (1) that Art. 311 of Constitution of India was not attracted as the reverting order was not passed as a punishment or by way of penalty, (2) that Art. 16(4) could not be utilized for demoting A who had once been lawfully appointed, (3) that the order was illegal as it had violated Cls. (1) and (2) of Art. 16 AIR 1959 Bom 134 and AIR 1962 S C 36 and AIR 1964 S C 179 and AIR 1963 S C 645, Rel. on; Art. 311 is attracted only against those orders as are passed by way of punishment in the form of dismissal, removal or reduction in rank.

In enacting Cl. (4) of Art. 16, analogous to sub-cl. (4) in Art. 15 of the Constitution, the paramount consideration was to give some fillip to the backward sections of the Indian society who were left behind in the march of progress. While on the one hand, the creed of equality was adopted, a reasonable concession was also given to the backward classes in the matter of getting employments by providing them with some reservations, so that, they could catch up with the rest of the population and as a result of the encouragement given the backward sections of the community could eventually come at par with the rest of the people in general. In interpreting the rule of equality enshrined in Art. 16, the principle of equality of treatment to all citizens with the exception that reasonable safeguards may be provided by the State for the advancement of the backward sections of the community has been fully recognised. The equality of treatment is the rule and cl. (4) of Art 16 is an exception to that rule and it cannot be so interpreted as to nullify or destroy the main provision.

Preferential treatment to members of the scheduled castes or tribes is meant to be given at the time of making appointments or promotions, but it cannot possibly be the intention of the framers of the Constitution that to create an opportunity for a member of the scheduled caste or tribe another non-scheduled caste employee who is once given an opportunity lawfully, should be made to climb down to make a post in the higher cadre available, for a member of the scheduled caste or tribe. That will be giving unwarranted extension to the scope of the exception so as to erode the main rule of equality enshrined in Arts. 16(1 and 16(2) of the Constitution. Therefore, if the order of demotion passed by the authority is a speaking one and gives only one reason for the reversion of lawfully appointed person, namely, that the person for whom room is created was a member of the scheduled caste it can be legitimately inferred that there was no other ground for ordering the reversion. Article 16(4) cannot be utilized to undo orders properly made in the context of circumstances obtaining at the time. There is nothing in the Article to render the U. P. Removal of Social Disabilities Act invalid. The passing of that Act does not also contravene Art. 23 at all. 1951 A W R (H C) 305 : 5 A I Cr D 418 : 52 Cr L J 899 : 1951 A L J 282 : A I R 1951 All 615 (617) (Pts E, F) (Pr 5).

Powers of State Legislature to make laws prescribing punishment for those acts which are declared to be offences under Art. 17 are withdrawn by Art. 35 of the Constitution and are vested in the Central Parliament. The provision has a prospective application and laws in force in the State before the commencement of the Constitution are specifically saved and are to continue until altered, repealed or modified or amended by Parliament.

M. B. Act (63 of 1950) is made after the promulgation of the Constitution and deals with punishment in respect of acts which are declared under Art. 17 to be offences. Therefore the Amendment Act in so far as it deals with the question of sentences so as to amend the law which was in force at the commencement of the Constitution is ultra vires the powers of Madhya Bharat Legislature and is to that extent void. Madh B L J 1955 H C R 1434 : Madh B L R 1955 Criminal 250 : A I R 1955 M B 207 (208) (Prs 4, 5, 12).

——Arts. 17, 25, 26 and 35—Scope and applicability—Madras Temple Entry Authorisation Act (5 of 1947 as amended by Madras Act XIII of 1949)—Validity—Act is not ultra vires the Constitution and continues to be in force as a valid piece of legislation.

Per Govinda Menon, J. :—The Madras Temple Entry Authorisation Act, 1947, as amended by Madras Act (13 of 1949) is not repugnant to any of the provisions of the Constitution of India. What is enacted in the Act is only the fulfilment of the directive principle contained in Art. 17 of the Constitution. Thus the Madras Act (5 of 1947) comes within the provisions of Art. 35, Cl. (a) (ii) of the Constitution and this law is made to continue in force until repealed or amended by Parliament. In these circumstances there can be no doubt whatever that the Madras Act (5 of 1947), will be in force as good law until Parliament takes up a comprehensive legislation. Viewed in that light the Madras Act (5 of 1947) will have full effect because it is in complete consonance with the provisions of the Constitution.

The power of the State to make a law for throwing open Hindu religious institutions of a public character as contemplated in Art. 25 (2) (b) is not in any way circumscribed, restricted or whittled down by the provisions of sub-cl. (b) of Art. 26 giving the religious denomination the right to manage its own affairs in matters of religion Managing the affairs in matters of religion denotes that there is a kind of superintendence or supervision mainly with regard to property but practice of religion would include the right to prescribe modes of worship, the class of person who can worship and the time at which they can worship, etc. When therefore Art. 26 (b) speaks of the right to manage in matters of religion what is contemplated by that expression is something different from the right to practice religion.

That the question of temple entry is not involved in Art. 26 (b) but is concerned only in Art. 25 (2) (b) is clear from the fact that Art. 25 (2) (b) is an exception to Art. 25 (1) which gives fundamental right to any citizen freely to profess, practise and propagate his religion. This freedom of practising religion can be restricted by the legislature when it infringes with the right of all classes of Hindus to worship freely in a Hindu religious institution of a public character. So it is the concept of temple entry that is formulated in Art 25 (2) (b). (1956) 1 Mad L J 125 : AIR 1956 Mad 541 (548, 549, (Pt B) (Prs 17, 18, 19) (DB).

A. I. R. Commentaries Judicially Appreciated

A. I. R. 1948 Patna 460 (462) (Pr. 9) [V 35 C 161] (D. B.)—Per Meredith J.—"I will make two quotations from Chitaley and Annaji Rao's annotated edition of the Civil Procedure Code, 4th Edn. Vol. III, because those learned commentators have, in my opinion, correctly summed up the position in language which cannot be bettered.

CONSTITUTION OF INDIA.

1961 Manipur 1 (4) (Pr. 11) [A.I.R. V 48 C 1]—Tirumalpad J. C.—"What is prohibited (in Art. 23 (1)) is begar and other similar forms of forced labour. The A. I. R. Commentaries on the Constitution of India at page 685 define 'begar' as a system under which persons are pressed to carry burdens for individuals or public or to perform other forms of menial service under compulsion".

1961 M. P. 216 (219) (Pr. 11) [A.I.R. V 48 C 70]—Shrivastava J.—"In this connection, we may refer to the following passage from the Constitution of India by Chitaley (Vol. 3), Art. 254, Note 17 (d) Pt. 5 : . . . . . ."

1956 All. 341 (345) (Pr. 33) [(S) A.I.R. V 43 C 126] (DB).—Desai J.—"Shri Jagdish Sahai could not cite any authority in support of his contention that the right given to the Court to draw an adverse inference is equal to compelling the accused to be a witness against himself. We notice that Chitaley in his Commentary on Constitution, Vol. I, pp. 497-498, does not see any conflict between the provisions of Art. 20 (3) and those of S. 342, Cr. P. C."

1956 J. & K. 1 (10) (Pr. 34) [(S) A.I.R. V 43 C 1] (F.B.)—Kilam J.—"The learned author Chitaley in his luminous commentary on the Constitution has, after discussing almost the whole case law on the subject, enunciated some principles which I might give more or less in his own language. According to the learned author . . . ." (Points from Note 8 (g) to Art. 21, p. 533 quoted.)

CIVIL PROCEDURE CODE, 1908.

1953 S. C. 23 (27) [A.I.R. V 40 C 7]—[Touching the revisional jurisdiction of the High Court set out in S. 115, Civil P. C.] "A large number of cases have been collected in Edn. 4 of Chitaley & Rao's Code of Civil Procedure (Vol. I) which only serve to show that the High Courts have not always appreciated the limits of the jurisdiction conferred by this section."

1965 Himachal Pradesh 23 (24) (Pr. 5) [A. I. R. V 52 C 9] — Om Prakash J. C.—"But there is a conflict of judicial opinion, upon the point, * * * * *. This conflict has been noted on pages 4240 and 4241, Volume IV, of A. I. R. Commentaries on the Code of Civil Procedure, 7th Edition."

P. L. D. 1965 (W. P.) Lahore 590 (594, 595) (DB).—Sajjad Ahmad J.—"There has been a conflict of judicial opinion on the question of the applicability of this section to decrees in appeals under the Letters Patent. The High Courts of Bombay, Punjab, Madhya Pradesh and Madras have held that the section applies. The High Court of Patna took a contrary view (See Chitaley's Commentary on S. 114 of the Civil P. C.—headnote 1, at page 1507, Vol. II, 1963, Edition.) In a recent Full Bench decision reported in Jwala Prasad v. Jwala Bank Ltd., A. I. R. 1961 All. 381, the Allahabad High Court has held that . . . and has overruled an earlier decision to the contrary given by another Full Bench of the same Court reported in Mst. Abhilakhi v. Sada Nand, A. I. R. 1931 All. 244."

1965 Punj. 494 (496) [A.I.R. C 157 Pr 7]—Shamsher Bahadur J.—"The words 'for any other substantial cause' (in O. 41, R. 27 (b)) must be read with the word 'requires' in the beginning of the sentence and need not be construed in the narrow sense suggested by the doctrine of ejusdem generis . . . . . Reference may be made to Chitaley's Commentary on the Code of Civil Procedure, Vol. IV, at page 4319".

('64) I. L. R. (1964) 1 Ker. 320 (322)—Madhavan Nair J. — "The A. I. R. Commentaries on the Code of Civil Procedure in Note No. 4 to O. 34, R. 7 put the position succinctly thus . . . . . ."

1963 Rajasthan 4 (5) (Pr. 3) [A.I.R. V 50 C 3]—Jagat Narayan J.—"There is conflict of opinion on the question whether an appeal lies against an order staying or refusing to stay an execution proceeding. The different views have been classified as follows by Chitaley in Note 44 to S. 47, Code of Civil Procedure: ".

1963 Punjab 9 (14)(Pr. 12) [A.I.R. V 50 C 3] (F.B.)—D. K. Mahajan J.—"It will, therefore, be obvious that the decision on the vires of the Act by Chopra J. was merely obiter and, therefore, it cannot operate as res judicata. See in this connection . . . . . page 800 of Chitaley's Civil Procedure Code, Vol. I, where a large number of authorities are cited . . . . . "

1963 Kerala 236 (238) (Pr. 5) [A. I. R. V 50 C 56] — M. Madhavan Nair J. — "The effect of Rule 60 (of O. 21) is stated in the A. I. R. Commentaries on the Code of Civil Procedure, correctly in my opinion, thus: . . . . . "

V 43 C 187]—Ramaswami J.—"The permutations and combinations which arise in regard to the procedure to be followed has been comprehensively and accurately summarised in the well-known A. I. R. Commentaries on the Court-fees Act and Suits Valuation Act (2nd Edn.) at page 871 as follows:—" [Quoted and relied upon]

CRIMINAL PROCEDURE CODE, 1898.

('62) 1962 (1) Cr. L. J. 96 (98) (Pr. 13)—T. N. R. Tirumalpad J. C.—"This is the view which I find has been accepted as correct in the A. I. R. Commentaries to the Code of Criminal Procedure at Pages 830 and 831. It is seen from the said Commentaries that there is a conflict of decisions on the question . . . . . The Commentators are of the opinion that the view expressed in the Calcutta case is not the correct view. I certainly agree with the A. I. R. Commentaries on this point."

1959 Mad. 544 (Pr. 12) [A. I. R. V 46 C. 175] — Ramaswami J. — [After discussing the point it is stated thus:] "(see exhaustive and analytical discussion in A.I.R. Commentary of the Criminal Procedure Code, Fifth Edition, page 268 and foll. . . . .)."

1958 All. 439 (442) (Pr. 14) [A.I.R. V 45 C 109] (DB)—James J.—"I would also refer to the opinion of the learned authors of the A.I.R. Commentary on the Code of Criminal Procedure, Vol. IV, 5th Edn., appended under S. 540: . . . ."

1961 Pat. 134 (137) (Pr. 18) [A.I.R. V 48 C 36]—Raj Kishore Prasad J. — "The question under consideration has been thoroughly and clearly dealt with in A.I.R. Commentaries on the Indian Limitation Act, 3rd Edition, Vol. I, Note 11, page 595, Note 18, pages 601-604 and Note 32 page 638."

1960 Mad. 244 (Pr. 9) [A.I.R. V 47 C 77] — Ramaswami J.—"It is interesting in this connection to note that the A. I. R.
